Babe doesn't dare take the main streets homeward. He has to sneak through the byways in closed taxicabs to get back to his hotel. His telephone has been tinkled right off the wall and the Post Office Department is getting rich on the stream of mail which flows into Babe's hotel. And the strange part of it is that, through it all, Babe is always ready and willing to stop and thank his army of admirers for their chatter of congratulation. He still wears the same-sized hat that he did when he didn't have a darned home run to his name.

OUT OF THE DUST

STATE RIGHTS—EXCLUSIVELY!

Every exchange in the country that is able to book pictures on a merit basis will have an opportunity to bid for "OUT OF THE DUST." No matter who tries to tie up or control the market—really good productions cannot be denied, because there are not enough of them.

JOHN P. McCARTHY Author and producer of "OUT OF THE DUST" is the Director-sensation of the year. With true art in his eye, as well as in his brain and soul, he has caused the blasé commercial critics to confess that he made them gulp hard and fight back their tears. In "OUT OF THE DUST" they recognized a masterhand, a conjuror of human emotions, an artist who breathed life and action into the stilled brush of Frederic Remington.

Why do good women give their love to bad men?

THE PUBLIC DEMAND for a variety of subjects on the screen of every motion picture theatre with every change of program has brought thinking exhibitors to a realization of the vital importance of short subject films.

The lack of attention to this field as handled by the big feature distributors —the lack of harmony, the lack of national organization and exploitation which handicapped the State Right Exchanges and the need for a reliable source of supply of High Quality Short Subjects in sufficient quantity presented a serious problem for exhibitors.

It is answered by—

SPECIAL PICTURES CORPORATION with their twenty-three branch offices distributing their own productions and the best sure fire productions of Independent Producers, hand-picked from a thousand offerings. No matter what type of feature you are showing, we have a line of short subjects designed to supply all other requirements for a properly balanced show:—

Announcement to Buyers

¶ The stories deal with "Copperhead" Freeman, unjustly charged with the killing of a rival member of a Southern feud family. The locale is the mountainous country of the Carolinas.

¶ The seller recommends, without reservations, these dramas to the buyers of the United States & Canada as the best money-making 2-Reel dramas on the market to-day — — they're different — — try them and see. We'll vouch for story, cast, production and entertainment value. Note the first six titles — They all spell "action"

HARRY CAREY

IN these super-strenuous days it's a positive treat to have someone like Harry Carey around to bring us back to sanity — he's so lazily, laughingly human. Harry doesn't take life as seriously as most of us. He suspects it's pretty much of a big joke, anyway, and he'd rather trip up the lean and hungry Cassius in his picture and make him bust his nose than plug the poor villain with a six-shooter. Easy and natural, full of seemingly unconscious mannerisms that make you laugh, is it any wonder that human Harry Carey has come to be the best liked of all Western character players? See him in "Sundown Slim," rightful successor to that delightful scamp "Overland Red," and you'll see one of the best pictures the screen has ever known.

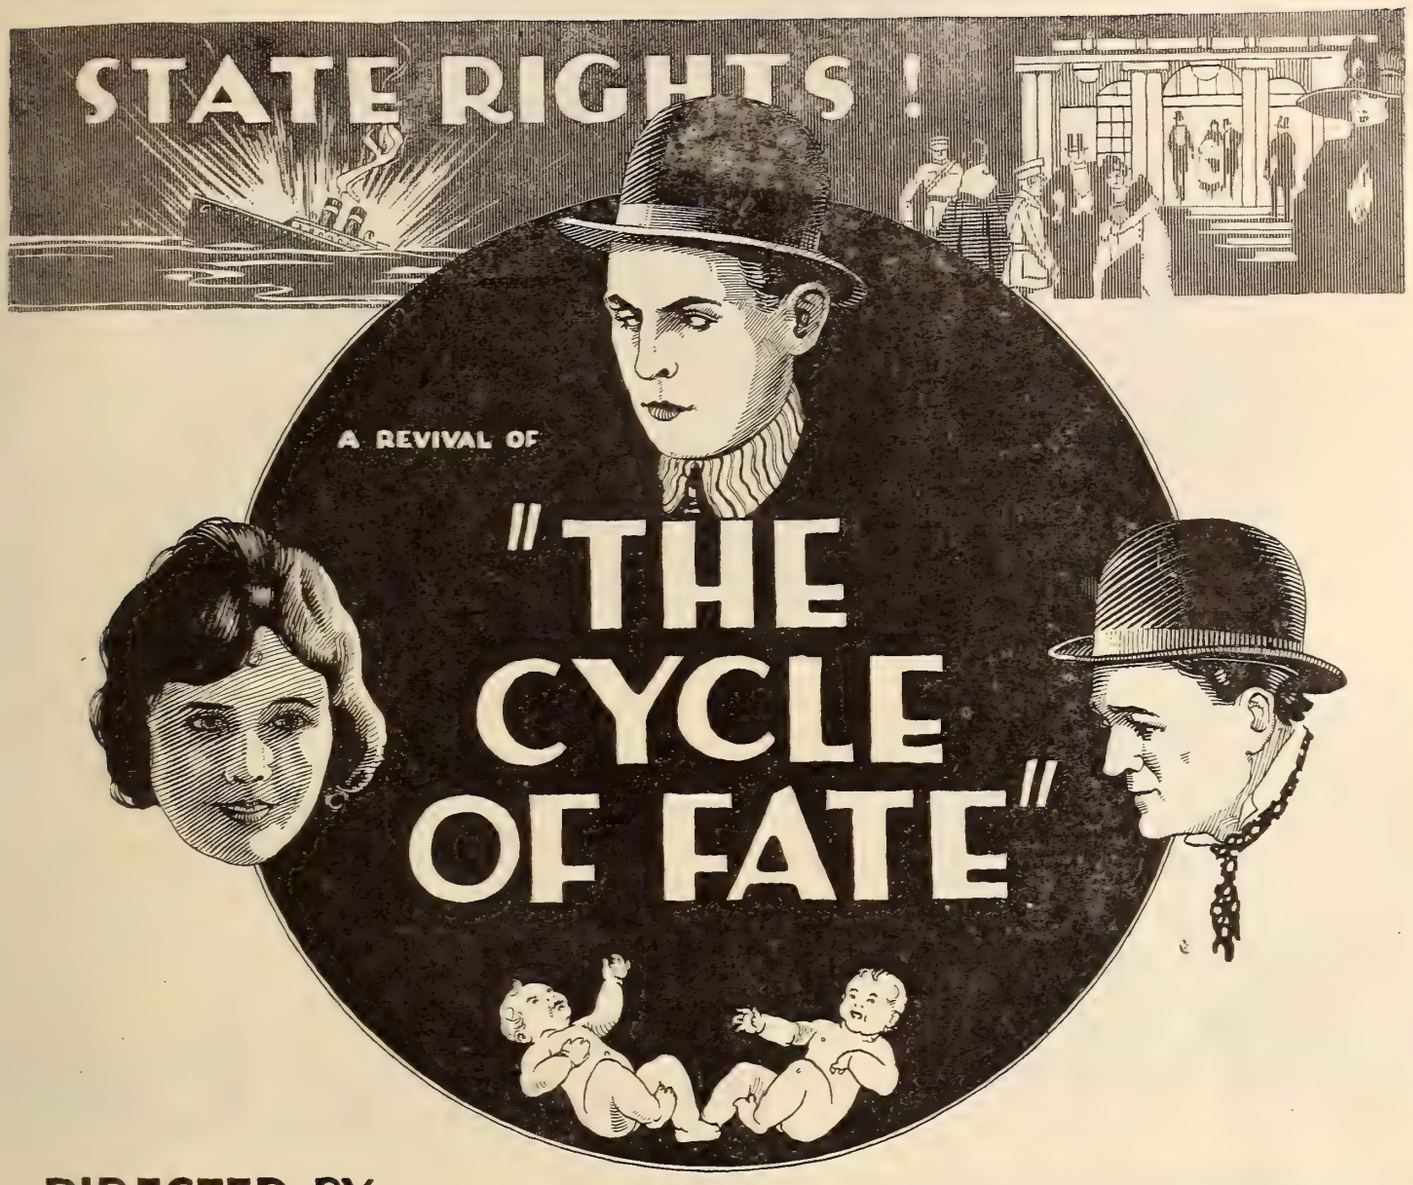
Follow The Political Campaigns Through Internationa News

Every newspaper in the country to-day is carrying columns of news on the presidential campaigns—news that would be assimilated by thousands more were it not filled with propaganda. But because every newspaper has a political axe to grind, there are many who prefer to get their political news visually—with photographic truth and brevity.



International News knows this, as you know it, and is following every movement of the candidates night and day, working unceasingly to bring to your theatre first the news and features surrounding the candidates and their campaigns without propaganda.

But, important as political pictures are, they form only a small part of each issue of International News. For International News has no political axe to grind, and every issue brings to you all of the news of the world first—news properly proportioned by men who know news values.

Also, International brings, regularly, the most interesting features, be they of science, industry humanity or what not. That's why you get the "service of scoops" when you book

FOREWORD

Through all generations, from time lost in the dim, dark ages of the past, one great and wonderful virtue has stood forth triumphantly above the myriad of those things which have brought us joy upon this earth—and where that virtue is not found, 'tis like unto the light hidden in darkness of night, unhappiness broods over all and with its mournful mantle brings existence to naught—and when the virtue is betrayed the dregs of life are drawn in bitter cups leaving us forsaken and forlorn, and happiness is but a memory—faint, indistinct, and then forever gone.

Powerful, yet frail in human hands and hearts, is that virtue —FAITH—Faith in love, in life, in death, Faith in human kind, Faith in God.

On such a theme is this story built—humbly striving to picture Faith in mankind lost, Faith betrayed and then regained, using simple characters from life's melting-pot and following them through days of darkest sin until the mighty virtue grips them fast.

Weaving the play from his own powerful theme, which was years in the moulding, Mr. William Christy Cabanne is responsible for this human document, and to him is due all the credit it shall deserve.

PLAIN WORDS

THE Attorney-General, the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission are among the important Government agencies that never sleep — they are always on the job.

It is through these agencies of the American Government that free people are permitted and guaranteed to live in a free country, to conduct their business in a free and independent manner, and never to live in fear of tyrannical domination and oppression under the heel of unscrupulous would-be monopolists.

WILLIAM FOX.

"July 23, 1920.

"National Association of the Motion Picture Industry,
"Attention Chairman of Distributors' Division,
"1520 Broadway, New York City.

"Gentlemen:

"Herewith I tender the policy of Fox Film Corporation with reference to group booking with all booking agencies in America, as requested in your letter of July 20th.

"Booking agencies formed and operated for the purpose of making group bookings on behalf of exhibitors are bound in a short time to develop into a monopoly of a most destructive character. Exhibitors are invited into the plan on the pretext of lower rentals and of booking protection for their theatres. But that is only the ingenious, sugar-coated, sweet and innocent invitation to join the booking agency at the beginning.

"Facts and conditions of the past prove that very shortly after the exhibitor places himself and his theatre in the hands of a booking agency he loses control of the management of his house, and by cut-throat, blackjack and monopolistic methods the exhibitor very soon is compelled to give up fifty percent or more of his theatre or be driven out of the motion picture exhibition line.

"Exhibitors will remember in 1908 and succeeding years my tremendous effort and the long, up-hill legal battle against the General Film Company and the Motion Picture

Patents Company to keep the business open and free to competition.

"The then growing success and popularity of the motion picture was the result of the splendid competitive opportunities afforded to any person or set of persons in the production of pictures that would entertain and educate. In the regular course of events this condition permitted the exhibitor to make a handsome profit and to build up a substantial business. The exhibitor was his own boss.

"Twelve years ago a combination of men attempted to strangle the industry and to create an all-powerful monopoly. Fortunately for the public and the exhibitor, and I feel free to state largely due to my effort, this attempt resulted in disaster. The group of men who by every means endeavored to take possession of the motion picture industry in every branch, were brought before the United States Courts and their monopoly was ordered dissolved and the screen was free again. Then once more the exhibitor became boss of his theatre.

"Today the exhibitor is confronted with a more daring and dastardly attempt to dominate his business. The formation of booking companies to deal with distributors in group bookings spells the stagnation of the industry should it meet with favor by exhibitors. A group of booking offices in the principal sections of America would soon control the motion picture industry in every branch. The exhibitor would be the biggest loser.

"The American public will not support a monopoly in the art of the motion picture. No longer would the exhibitor be the boss of his theatre. The booking agency trust would boss and command the picture theatres after kicking the exhibitors into business oblivion.

"Every branch of the business lends itself to absolute domination if the nation-wide booking agency trust is an established fact. No longer would progress be the guiding star of the industry. In its place would come greed, the tyrannical domination by a small group of men, and the elimination of the exhibitor of today.

"Fox Film Corporation places itself on record as absolutely opposed to group bookings with all booking agencies. It will deal exclusively with the exhibitor direct.

"No person or persons or company is authorized to use the name of Fox Film Corporation or the undersigned in the promotion of booking agency schemes. It was reported from two sections of the United States that booking agency promoters had promised Fox pictures, which is an indication of the misleading, unauthorized and greedy tactics that are being used.

"The Fox Film Corporation and the undersigned stand on record for free and competitive dealing in the motion picture industry. We are opposed to monopoly in any form.

"We hope the above has made our position clear.

"Very truly yours,

"FOX FILM CORPORATION,
"(Signed) WM. FOX,
"President."

"The Greatest Emotional Production Of The Last Ten Years"

When you show "Madame X", feature that line in your advertising and exploitation. It is the truth.

At first-run showings of "Madame X" in San Francisco, Milwaukee and Washington D. C., audiences made no attempt to hide their emotions, and greeted the final wonderful climax with the perfect tribute---absolute silence, then wild applause.

And when a picture gets that kind of a reception, you can be sure that the records in the box-office reflect it in dollars and cents.

"Wonderfully Fine Picturization"

—Exhibitor's Trade Review

Speaking of Arthur S. Kane's Presentation of

Charles Ray

in George M. Cohan's great stage play

"45 Minutes from Broadway"

Here's what the experts say:

Will Draw Crowds!

"A fine box-office attraction! This picture is probably going to draw the crowds in good numbers. The fact that Charles Ray appears in a version of George M. Cohan's popular play should increase the box-office value of the star's name if such a thing is possible."—Wids.

Will Go Over Big!

"Fulfilling all the promises of previous effectiveness as an unqualified certainty in popularity, Charles Ray presents herewith in his initial First National feature, a performance certain to go over big.

"Additionally, there is the strong combination here, a favorite star and the screen presentation of a stage play which made a tremendous success the country over when George M. Cohan produced it."—Exhibitors' Herald.

Best of His Successes!

"Charles Ray's acting as the Kid is among the best of his screen impersonations. The love interest is fragrant and unhackneyed and is delightfully played by the star and his leading support. The part of the Kid might have been written for him, so completely does he make it his own."—Moving Picture World.

The Public Likes It!

"George M. Cohan's famous old stage comedy enters upon a new lease of life in its admirably screened film version. The picture provides plenty of swift action, funny situations, witty sub-titles and jazzes along to a true Cohanesque 'happy climax' in merry style.

"Apart from its mirthful moments, the film conveys a good deal of human interest. Its romantic side is well developed and the love story of the resourceful Kid and his sweetheart pleases everybody.

"Charles Ray is a worthy successor to Cohan and Victor Moore in the energetic role of Kid Burns, which he plays with a subtle sense of its humorous and dramatic demands.

"Put this over as a wonderfully fine picturization of the famous comedy by George M. Cohan. Advertise it as a special six-part feature and mention in all advertising that it was heartily received when it played the Strand Theatre, New York, recently."—Exhibitors' Trade Review.

Will Get Over!

"There are scenes that are positively uproarious. The audience at the Strand, New York, apparently enjoyed the picture. Ray can make any spectator respond. '45 Minutes from Broadway' will get over."—Motion Picture News.

The Answer!

Whether the present popularity of the photo-play is due to the efforts of producer or exhibitor is no more important than the question of priority concerning the hen and the egg. But just as hens vary greatly in their egg-laying powers, so also do photo-plays vary in their box-office results.

The exhibitor's prosperity depends directly upon the answer to this question,—which photo-plays yield the maximum box-office results? And the answer is simple. The most profitable photo-play is the one accompanied by RITCHEY posters,—for the greatest poster possible to make is the RITCHEY poster!

The RITCHEY poster does the actual ticket-selling for the show. It does more. It stops the passing public who look at it on account of its intrinsically attractive quality. And they go in to see the play it advertises on account of the interest it has aroused.

Its value to the exhibitor is inestimable. To him it is as a gem for which the photo-play itself is but the setting!

VOL. XXII SEPTEMBER 18, 1920 No. XIII

Bunk—And the Cost of It

AN actor bought a house in Los Angeles the other day for $40,000. His press agent reported the purchase to the local papers at $250,000. Everything will be serene until the tax appraisers take the property-owner at his representative's word. They have a habit in Los Angeles, we are told, of taxing studios and other picture properties at, at least, double the invested value.

These are but local instances: it would be interesting—alarming, we believe—to know just what our well-known habit of exaggeration costs the entire industry every year.

It is the tribute we pay to "bunk": or we might call it the premium of press-agentry—overdone press-agentry.

Los Angeles pays a pretty penny locally, but that is very small compared to the yearly tribute of the whole industry. From Congress on down through every State legislature in the country every legislative committee, when it proceeds to lay a tax upon films and theatre seats and admissions proceeds upon the solid assumption that all motion picture people revel perennially in an orgy of new and easily made wealth. We are credited with million dollar stars and directors, million dollar made and million dollar earning pictures, million dollar studios and million dollar theatres.

There is no question about this deep-seated conviction; it exists equally in the mind of the United States Senator and the rural legislator. And there is no question about its effect upon the industry's taxes.

"You've got the money," they say, "and you can and will stand the burden of taxation."

The point is that we have, through our own publicity, done everything to create and foster this easy and big money idea; and we have done nothing to explain the true and tough economics of this highly competitive industry.

We have press-agented a Frankenstein.

We talk millions and so we get taxed millions. The tribute we pay is a huge and serious burden on our industrial exchequer.

There's another side to it—not so concrete and obvious. It is the psychological side.

We not only lie to the public but we lie to each other in the same unrestrained fashion. We lie about picture costs, picture values, territorial sales—and what not. Of course we give and take our exaggerations with a wink; we discount and rediscount the other fellow's claims. And the trade lies don't do so much harm in themselves. It is the result of this general policy and its atmosphere that hurts. Confidence is destroyed and everyone is taught to take the roundabout path when the straight approach is the best, to camouflage and duck when the plain truth is the best business.

"Bunk" is a heritage of the show business, but we are not running white and black topped tents these days.

This is an industry. We call it one and we say it's big. It is certainly too large to consist of a maze of crooked paths with misleading signs everywhere. We need some broad straight avenues. We need them between the big trade divisions of the field. We need more frankness.

We contend that the exhibitor will hail with relief and respect that producer or distributor who first comes forth with the plain, unvarnished truth, who speaks frankly of his goods, who tells with even brutal frankness just how he will do business and why; who, believing he is right, isn't afraid to say so bluntly, even though he knows he will arouse at first misunderstanding and violent opposition.

It will be said in reply that exaggeration is a part of the show business anyway; that the exhibitor must be hoodwinked for his own good; that a manufacturer cannot expose his plans because of his competitor—most of which is largely tommyrot and all of which makes a very weak-kneed argument against the supreme fact that the exhibitor today is without confidence and that he has lost confidence because he never gets frankness. We emphasize the exhibitor here simply because, as the retailer in this business, he is, like the retailer in any other business, the keystone of the industrial arch. He sells the goods to the public. He is the producers' and the distributors' business associate.

We pay a terrible price for "bunk."

Is "bunk" necessary? Has "bunk" a real place today in so sizable and serious an industry, an industry which undoubtedly is partly the show business but which, with equal certainty, is also a big industrial and commercial machine, functioning along the very same economic lines of other industries and which must, like them, progress with a very considerable measure of solid confidence, back and forth ,between the men who make and distribute and retail its product?

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

DEALING IN PERSONALITIES

SAMUEL GOLDWYN has stepped out of the corporation that bears his name. Which gives us a chance to pass a few remarks on the general subject of Samuel Goldwyn.

We don't believe that Sam Goldwyn has ever been given full credit for the attitude he has maintained towards the picture industry and for the things he has done for that industry.

Sam Goldwyn has always won our admiration because he has at all times been a gambler, a daring believer in the fact that "there is nothing too good for the motion picture." We first ran across this angle of his nature when we interviewed him years ago just after he had secured the signature of Geraldine Farrar to a screen contract. We followed it through the film seasons, past the signing of Mary Garden, the formation of Eminent Authors, bringing the literary brains of the nation right into the studios—and not merely as far as the cashier's desk. We admired such achievements as the inducing of an author of Booth Tarkington's standing to write original stories for the screen.

Sam Goldwyn is too much the business man, in name and in appearance, to receive full recognition for the side of his nature that says and believes and proves: "There is nothing too good for the motion picture."

Great excitement in the village! Our old friend Arthur James assumes the title, "Editor-in-Chief of the Moving Picture World." Good luck to you—Jimmy—and a full measure of it!

We have heard a rumor that a dinner was tendered to Jimmy on Thursday evening at the Biltmore.

Despite tempting inducements offered him, George Blaisdell has stepped out of the World ranks. His new plans have not been announced.

George is one of the real veterans of the game. We'll even confess that his days in the harness date further back than our own. But we are proud to have known such a regular, true-blue all-man for the years we have been rounding Film Square.

WE are glad to give a page of this week's issue over to Earl Hammons, and twice as pleased to hear his remarks on the way exhibitors are playing up the short features of their programs in a real patron-pulling manner.

And in this connection we might add our own word of commendation on the fashion in which Educational is helping their exhibitors in the exploitation of their product. William A. Johnston has preached so long on the subject of "advertising your advertising" to the exhibitor that it is cheerful to see it applied more and more by various advertisers.

Educational steps to the front in showing exhibitors the possibilities in the short subjects found on the program and means of utilizing them. The result can be seen in the increasing frequency with which advertisements and exploitation stunts based on a short feature find their way into the Exhibitor Service Bureau. One ad, reproduced a few weeks ago, even featured a short subject, "Modern Centaurs," above one of the best known of the current features.

Crandall Theatre Opens in Cumberland, Md.

CRANDALL'S Strand theatre in Cumberland, Maryland, one of the most beautiful houses in the State, opened on the night of September 3rd with Marshall Neilan's "Go and Get It." The police reserves were necessary to handle the throngs who crowded about the theatre on its opening night. Mayor Thomas W. Koon, of Cumberland, made an address welcoming the new enterprise to the city. The Strand is Crandall's eleventh house.

They continue to slip the big pictures over on us out of town. De Mille's "Something to Think About" opened the Shea Criterion at Buffalo last week, and now we hear that "The County Fair" will have its American premiere at the Toledo Rialto, Sunday, September 12th. S. Barret McCormick is staging the show. He's got the town all het up—with such features as Sawyer's Silver Cornet Band, the Village Choir, and other special attractions. We are not sure, but we think Joe Lee is also browsing somewhere around Toledo on the assignment.

E. H. (Mannie) Goldstein, assistant to Carl Laemmle, was the guest of honor at a Hotel Astor luncheon last week, the occasion being the eve of his departure for Universal City, California. The event was staged by Universal officials and employees a la surprise.

Paul Gulick was the able toastmaster. Paul, judging from the occasions we have seen him gracing the post of honor at Associated Advertisers affairs, is right there when it comes to the presiding act. And, by the way, last Thursday's meeting of the Advertisers was turned into an occasion for tendering thanks to Paul and the other officers for their real accomplishments in the year past.

THE premiere of "Way Down East" certainly did draw the film folk. Intermission found the lobby as crowded as a noon-hour at the Hotel Astor,—and with the same people. We found Hiram Abrams and Paul Lazarus there, wondering how soon the latest Griffith achievement would become a United Artists special. Jesse Goldberg had a smile a yard wide over the individual triumph of Lillian Gish. Joe Plunkitt must have let the Strand run itself for the night, for we found him there too.

We'd run out of space if we tried to mention all the names. But, at that, Griffith has to go some to compete with "Nick" of the Astor as a magnet for film celebrities. Perhaps "Nick" caters to a more vital spot. Take Thursday of this week, for example, and you could surely buy, sell, merge or dissolve any number of picture propositions you desired within a thirty foot radius. We found "Doc" Shallenberger just inside the door smiling under the troubles of a general manager; Al. Black out in the lobby saying, "Watch for the fire-works;" Jimmie Grainger kidding Paul Mooney about rental prices; Harry Charnas looking for "Doc" Shallenberger.

What chance has David Griffith got against such stern competition as "Nick's?" And, speaking of such things, what opportunity did David W. have on his opening night against the competition of Lillian Gish? One perfectly good speech had to be put away unsoiled when Lillian's smile stole the audience.

Eugene Roth, of San Francisco, has been in town this week. This time he comes as a producer, with the initial Roth-Rork special.

H. P. Caulfield, of Los Angeles, is another visitor to New York. Caulfield also has a print under his arm, that of the Max Linder multiple reel comedy just completed on the coast.

ZOWIE! But William Fox slams out with both fists this week in the ad pages. Did you read those two pages? Don't miss them!

When Bill Fox aims at a target he lands with both barrels. Booking agencies and combines are his target in this ad, and when Bill gets through you can pretty well tell what he thinks about booking agencies and what he will do about them. Bill doesn't talk around a bush and hope that you'll get what he means. He says it.

Alfred S. Black Sets Forth His Version of Controversy

Cohen, Williams and Patterson Come Within Range of Exhibitor's Fire

IN open letters addressed to Sidney S. Cohen, president of the Motion-Picture Theatre Owners of America; J. D. Williams, manager of Associated First National Pictures; and Willard C. Patterson, of the Criterion theatre, Atlanta, Ga., Alfred S. Black, president of the Motion-Picture Exhibitors of America, contributes the latest chapter to the wrangle over producer's theatre activities.

Black is particularly strong in his arraignment of Gordon, holder of the franchise from Associated First National Pictures and the largest theatrical owner in New England. According to Mr. Black, "the menace of Mr. Gordon and the First National activities to the New England independent exhibitor are far greater than those of any other organization." Moreover, Mr. Black declares that the purchase by Mr. Gordon of the First National franchise "was the start of other producers to invade New England with theatre-holdings."

Mr. Black once more raises a question regarding the alleged connections between First National and the Willard C. Patterson Chicago meeting of exhibitors, the Cleveland Convention in June last and the recent assembling of Connecticut exhibitors on both of which points strong denials have already been made. Sidney Cohen is styled by Mr. Black as "the advance agent" of Mr. Gordon and First National for the Connecticut meeting and is declared to be "too prejudiced and biased to pass upon the unfairness of First National activities pertaining to the industry, and especially in New England."

The following extracts are taken from the letter addressed by Alfred S. Black to Sidney S. Cohen:

"I have read your recent letter in which you 'request not summons' I meet your committee. You state that Mr. Zukor promised I would meet your committee. I believe this statement is false, because Mr. Zukor knew he had no right to make such a promise. Furthermore, he told me that he advised your committee that he would use his influence to have me meet you. He did so. The trade-press reported that you stated at the Atlantic City Convention that I promised Mr. Zukor I would meet your committee but failed to put in appearance. Such statement is absolutely untrue. I never promised that I would even consider meeting your committee. When I first heard of the suggestion, I immediately telephoned New York and insisted that any tentative conference that had been arranged with your committee be immediately called off; that, under no circumstances, would I meet your committee; that I would be in New York, as I was, and would publish an open statement immediately upon my arrival there. For reasons already stated in my recent open letter and for the further reasons following, I refused and still do refuse to recognize your committee in any way, shape or manner.

"I have never met Mr. Lynch but openly congratulate him on telling you frankly what he thinks of your methods. For the third time, I want to reiterate that I am an independent exhibitor and interested in the development of motion-picture theatres in the New England territory, which your organization as constituted has no right to question.

"The Motion Picture Exhibitors of America under direction of our own officials have no need of your committee's assistance in investigating First National affairs. We believe we are well able and competent to throw light on their activities before the exhibitors of the country without the aid of your committee. It would seem like presenting evidence before a packed jury.

"When you become Mr. Gordon's advance agent, for his Connecticut First National meeting, which you wouldn't openly deny, I consider you too prejudiced and biased to pass upon the unfairness of First National activities pertaining to the industry, and especially in New England.

"Strange isn't it that First National affairs are always so closely allied with your league and committeemen's activities—starting with your Mr. Patterson and continuing through the Cleveland Convention up to the present time? It is harder to believe that the First National officials are as clever in fooling you and making a tool of you as you are in camouflaging activities from the exhibitors of the United States.

"Regarding refusing admission of the press at your meeting with Mr. Zukor, I am told that your statement is false and that Mr. Zukor desired the press to be present but your committee objected.

Regarding the New England letters to which you refer, I would like to have you give them to the trade press to be answered publicly. I certainly desire the fullest publicity as you can't substantiate your claims of threats and intimidations.

"Regarding the Cleveland Convention, I attended the first session of your Convevntion after assurance from Mr. Patterson, Mr. Rembusch and others of the committee of seventeen, that an amalgamation of all three leagues would be brought about for the best interests of the exhibitors of the United States. What did you do? You insulted our organization by asking me to appear before your self appointed credential committee to establish myself as an independent exhibitor. Even Mr. Chas. O'Reilly, your clever friend, politician and committeeman, (the man who in my opinion, laid out the whole workings of the Cleveland Convention, who had men recognized by your self-appointed Chairman before they were out of their seats when twenty others were already on their feet) came to me the third day of the Convention, admitted the mistake and injustice and wanted me to come back into the Convention without going before your Credential Committee. It was then too late as all of your personal plans had been carried out and an amalgamation was consequently an impossibility."

Excerpts from Mr. Black's letter to Manager J. D. Williams of First National are submitted in the following:

"Replying to your recent open letter, I note with much interest that you consider Mr. Gordon an absolutely independent exhibitor. I don't believe there is an exchange manager, theatre owner or exhibitor in New England who could, by the strongest stretch of imagination, call Mr. Nathan H. Gordon an independent exhibitor. Mr. Gordon's activities had been in progress many months before I entered into any booking arrangement with the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. They were becoming so pronounced, however, that I was forced to make such a move in order to protect my large theatrical invevstments.

"I invite the trade press to send their representatives into New England to verify this statement. They will learn that the menace of Mr. Gordon and the First National activities to the New England independent exhibitor are far greater than those of any other organization.

"When Mr. Gordon bought the First National franchise for New England, he asked me what I thought of his proposition and he was much provoked when I told him in reply that as an exchange proposition—wonderful, but as an exhibitor's proposition—it was a joke. Subsequent events have proven this to be true. For one example, take the Chaplin contracts. Instead of permitting the independent exhibitors of New England to share in the advantages of his highly profitable contract, Mr. Gordon increased the rentals beyond all precedents and the contract contained the 25 per cent increased rental joker.

"Mr. Gordon's activities did more to increase the film rentals in New England than any other. The results were in direct contradiction to the objects he professed he would accomplish. At the time Mr. Gordon's' purchase of the First National franchise no producers, I am positive, had one dollar investment in theatre holdings in New England. The purchase of the First National franchise by Mr. Gordon, the largest theatrical owner in New England, was the start of other producers to invade New England with theatre holdings. Is there any better example of the so-called distributor-exhibitor menace, with or without your booking proposition, than the First National? Even Charles H. Bean, President of the New Hampshire Motion Picture Theatre Owners and a member of Mr. Cohen's investigating committee of nine, stated to me, after the New Hampshire meeting, that Mr. Gordon and the First National activities were a greater menace to the New England exhibitor than the Famous Players ever thought of being.

"It is with regret that I have any controversy with you, Mr. Williams, who, personally, are nationally known as a prince of good fellows, but you have certainly been very clever in tying up the publicity of the First National affairs to the Chicago meeting and to the Cleveland Convention and, especially, to Mr. Cohen's recent gathering of Connecticut exhibitors. I congratulate Mr. Gordon and your organization on being clever enough to use Mr. Sidney Cohen as your advance agent for the Connecticut meeting.

"As to your statement that I am working on capital obtained presumably from production profits, I will simply say that your statement is false and malicious. Neither am I interested in producing or distributing pictures; on the other hand, Mr. Gordon is apparently using the profits derived from increased film rentals in the devevlopment of theatre holdings. Can he deny this?"

To Willard C. Patterson Mr. Black addresses the following questions in the course of his letter to the Atlanta exhibitor:

"Why was it that you called your Chicago meeting at the time of the First National Convention in Chicago?

"Mr. Sam Atkinson, president of the Chicago Allied Amusement Association, told me at the end of the Cleveland Convention that you showed him letters with memorandum attached, containing assurances that the First National stood back of the financing of your Chicago meeting. Are you prepared to publish these letters and the attached memorandum?

"Why don't you give the exhibitors of the United States a complete statement of the financing connected with your activities? Did not the Cleveland Convention vote to pay back the expense of the Committee of Seventeen and then their Executive Committee repudiate the action of the Convention?

"Can you deny that if it had not been for the refusal of Sam Atkinson and Frank Rembusch to be a party to it, that your Chicago meeting would have been a First National affair?"

Investigating Committee Meets Sept. 15

THE following statement was issued on Thursday by Sydney Cohen: "The investigating committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of America will meet on Wednesday, September 15th, at the Hotel Astor to hear complaints of the New England exhibitors against Alfred S. Black and the Famous Players-Lasky Company. A registered letter has been sent to Mr. Black and an invitation extended to Mr. Adoph Zukor to appear. Senator James J. Walker, of New York, will represent the exhibitor committee. The trade press will be present at the hearings."

Powers Film Products of Rochester Under Fire

The Powers Film Products, Inc., whose factory is located in Rochester, N. Y., has become the object of considerable discussion in the film circles of that city. According to the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle of August 26, some 270 stockholders of the corporation are reported to have organized a protective committee under the direction of Frederick J. Harrison for the purpose of effecting an investigation of the company's condition. It it stated that the committee is also contemplating an appeal to Supreme Court Justice Adolph J. Rodenback to issue an order giving the stockholders authority to take over the affairs of the company.

The stock-selling methods of the Powers company are also reported to be under fire, and evidence of the practices alleged to have been submitted to the district-attorney's office.

Samuel Goldwyn Resigns from Presidency

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORPORATION announces the resignation of Mr. Goldwyn as president and of Mr. F. J. Godsol as vice-president and chairman of the Executive Committee.

Mr. Messmore Kendall, a member of the board of directors, was designated as director in charge of the company, pending the election of a new president.

Mr. Kendall and General Coleman DuPont have been elected members of the executive committee in place of Messrs. Goldwyn and Godsol, who continue as members of the board.

Educational Brings Suit for $250,000 Damages

As the result of the recent publication in a New York newspaper of a story and advertisement to the effect that "How He Knocks His Home Runs," a motion-picture controlled by Educational Films Corporation of America, was not actually a representation of the popular baseball player, "Babe" Ruth, in action and that this picture was "unauthorized" and a "fraud" upon Mr. Ruth and the public, Educational Films has brought suit for $250,000 damages against George H. Ruth, the Yankee batsman, and Adam Kessel and Charles O. Baumann, co-partners in a motionpicture enterprise.

The complaint filed with the Supreme Court of New York County alleges that the defendants caused to be published in a certain New York daily newspaper on or about August 28, 1820, certain statements concerning Educational Films and its release, "How He Knocks His Home Runs," which statements, it is asserted, were "false" and "were known by the defendants to be false when made." The complaint further declares that because of these statements "the plaintiff (Educational Films Corporation) was greatly injured in its good name, fame, reputation, credit and standing and business, and has been hampered and hindered in its leasing and disposition of rights to exhibit" the motion-picture, "How He Knocks His Home Runs."

Universal's Export Head Returns from Europe

G. E. Kann, the head of the export department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, arrived in New York last week from Europe aboard the steamship Mauretania. He had been on the other side for eight months, looking over the foreign field and establishing Universal branches in hitherto untouched territories.

His most important work in Europe was the arrangement of all the preliminaries for the big tie-up between the Universal and the Film Booking Offices, Ltd., of London, whereby the British distributing organization hereafter will handle all of the Universal product.

Illinois Exhibitors to Meet September 29

THE state convention of the Illinois Exhibitors Alliance, the official unit of the Motion Picture Theatre owners of America, has been called to meet at the Hotel St. Nicholas, Springfield, September 29th and 30th by President Joseph Hopp.

The membership of the alliance has passed the two hundred mark according to Mr. Hopp, and a large attendance at the meeting is expected as subjects of great interest and importance to every exhibitor will be taken up. Among the subjects scheduled for discussion and action are, censorship in Illinois and the effect of the woman's vote; Sunday closing which is being enforced in a number of communities and agitated in some others; uniform and equitable contracts between exhibitors and exchanges; the question of advance deposits; F. I. L. M. Club activities as affecting exhibitors; and provision for investigation of all sub-franchise propositions and all national booking schemes.

One of the interesting features of the convention is to be an address by W. E. Burford of Aurora, a member of the committee of nine that interviewed Messrs. Zukor and Lynch recently. Mr. Burford promises to make a full report of what transpired at the meeting with these two gentlemen and will, he states, reveal many facts which have not been made public.

Arrangements for the convention are in charge of committee which includes President Joseph Hopp; Charles Lamb, Rockford; W. W. Watts, Springfield; W. H. Cadoret, Kankakee; P. D. Robinson, Peoria; M. M. Rubens, Joliet; and W. E. Burford, Aurora.

Timely Addresses Mark A.M.P.A. Meeting

Professor Alom Benent, head of the Maryland Institute of Fine Arts, at a meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers on Thursday, September 21, announced that the Maryland Institute had under contemplation the award of a prize for the most artistic motion-picture production of the season or for the most attractive stills from a picture made during the year. Upon Professor Benent's invitation the members entered into a discussion of the proposition, and the matter was finally referred to a special committee for report at the next meeting.

Rufus Steele, the principal speaker, made a plea for photoplays "with a real story," dealing with the industrial life of the nation. Such productions, maintained Mr. Steele, would do more than any other agency towards the rapid dissipation of the prevalent feeling of unrest.

President Paul Gulick was tendered a vote of thanks for his interest and his work in behalf of the organization. An election of new officers took place at the meeting, held Thursday of this week, at the Cafe Boulevard.

Declares Against Breach of Existing Contracts

THE Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York goes on record as being unalterably opposed to the existing evil practice of certain distributing companies in enticing stars and directors under legal contract with other companies by offers of fabulous salaries and other methods of malpractice.

The Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce being an organization of business men deeply interested in the welfare of its industry is preparing to take action which will protect those companies which have been or may hereafter be injured by such practice and to bring sufficient pressure to bear upon offending companies as to make it strongly advisable for them to discontinue this practice.

An informal discussion of this matter was held by the executive committee of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce at a luncheon at the Hotel Astor on Friday of this week.

Exhibitor Association Plans Movie Ball

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America are announcing a monster reception and movie ball to be held under their auspices at Madison Square Garden, Saturday, November 4th, 1920.

The president of the organization will shortly announce the Committee which will have full charge of the final preparations. The Executive Committee of the National Organization will act jointly with this committee on Preparations and Arrangements. A complete program for the affair has been planned and will be given to the press at the earliest possible moment. This affair will not in any way resemble functions that have been advertised in the past under similar names.

Blackton Not to Abandon Activities in U. S.

Declaring that he was bound for England principally to enjoy a few weeks' rest and diversion, J. Stuart Blackton, motion-picture producer-director, vehemently denied that he was abandoning all his American interests and plans for motion-picture production in this country. This was the main tenor of a statement issued by the producer just previous to his departure for England on the liner Baltic on Saturday, September 4th. During Mr. Blackton's absence his interests and plans will be in the hands of his manager, William R. Dunn, and his literary associate, Felix Orman.

Are Exhibitors Ready to Grasp New Era's Opportunities?

By E. W. Hammons, President of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

UNQUESTIONABLY my friend John D. Williams, manager of the First National Exhibitors Circuit, is correct in his article in last week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS in which he says that a new era in motion picture showmanship is at hand, and in which he asks whether exhibitors will meet the opportunities being offered them by producers.

I have no hesitancy in answering that they are already meeting these with an eagerness, enthusiasm and intelligence that can leave no question in the minds of anyone that the theatre owners and managers of America are fully alive to the opportunities and that far the greater number of them are taking every advantage of each possibility.

This point, to my mind, is settled by the attention that the exhibitors generally are giving the short subject, a field of which I can speak after watching it from an interested point of view for a period of more than five years. I do not hesitate to say that the exhibitors as a whole today are not only alive to the opportunities given them by productions in the feature field, but that they are fully sensible that there is something more to the successful theatre today than showing a feature subject, no matter how satisfactory it may be, and then be content with the remainder of his program being supplied by "any old thing."

The master chef is not satisfied merely that the steak is cooked to perfection; it must have the garnitures; the painter does not drop his brush with the creation of a striking central figure, but there is a word of detail and weary hours on the settings; the real artist has not satisfied himself until the whole is perfect.

Unquestionably feature pictures are better today than they have ever been and Mr. Williams' organization deserves a considerable share of the credit for this fact. But with all of the excellence of these creations, the feature is no longer alone the motion picture entertainment. The exhibitor who is gifted with the ability to select from the entire mass of feature productions the very best and to give these alone the best possible advertising and presentation has not completed his work; he is not finished until he has given his patrons one hundred per cent entertainment through his entire bill.

Of course, I refer to the short subject. There were a number of years of hard and sometimes discouraging missionary work in attempting to convince the showmen that they needed something more than the feature. There was even harder work, after a goodly share of them had admitted that they needed the one and two reelers, to convince them that these pictures must not be mere "fillers" but that they must be of even excellence with the feature offering. But our faith has never been misplaced. The exhibitor has always made good on his opportunity.

Today the demands for short subjects of the first quality is such that when compared with that of but a couple of years ago the actual figures would be astounding. I haven't the slightest hesitancy in saying that today the demand for first quality one and two reels far exceeds the supply.

That is evidence to me that the exhibitor has fully kept up with the march of progress. In fact, it has gone so far ahead of short subject production that there is the strong temptation to yield to the demand and place on the market a mass of material that always will belong to the "filler" class. This is the very thing that is testing the showmanship of the theatre managers of the country and which convinces me that they are meeting the test.

This has been clearly brought to me by the case of material that we have been offered and rejected. We knew at the time that there was a demand for first quality reels of this sort; we refused to attempt to meet it by lowering the standard. In more than one case we have been reminded by the producer of this "great market" for even inferior product and we have been interested in watching the success that such pictures have had when introduced through other channels. The result has been most encouraging to our policies.

Not only do a great percentage of the exhibitors of today realize the importance of the short subject to their program, but they are refusing to be led into bookings without being assured of their quality.

When the theatre manager shows that interest in his whole program, there need be no fear that he will fail to take advantage of every opportunity in production, of either features or short subjects that are offered to him.

When theatres like the Rialto and Rivoli in New York show the same two reel comedy in succession; when houses like Loew's Euclid in Cleveland break their rule to advertise such pictures and run them from two to four weeks; when A. H. Blanks's Des Moines theatre bases two-thirds of its advertising on a single reel like "Modern Centaurs"—and when a relative state of affairs is found from city to hamlet all over the country, there is no doubt in my mind. I feel that we ought to know; we have devoted our every cent, our every endeavor for five years to this end.

Mr. Williams and his fellow producers of features need not hesitate to put forth their very best efforts. To drop into the vernacular, the exhibitors of the country as a whole today are "there."

Strict Censorship Being Enforced in Australia

A strict censorship of motion pictures is now in force in Australia and New Zealand. The following extracts from the official censor regulations of the Commonwealth of Australia, governing motion pictures, have been submitted by the Australasian Films, Ltd.

"No film shall be registered which, in the opinion of a censor, (a) is blasphemous, indecent, or obscene; (b) is likely to be injurious to morality; (c) is likely to be offensive to the people of any friendly nation; or (d) depicts any matter, the exhibition of which is undesirable in the public interest."

The following characteristics have been defined under censorship regulations as objectionable:

"(1) Indecent, suggestive, or insufficient dress. (2) Embraces overstepping the limits of affection, or which would be contrary to proprietary in ordinary life. (3) Nude figures. (4) Positions of the actors which are suggestive of sexual passion or desire. (5) Scenes which might be offensive to the religious feeling of any class of the community. (6) Scenes which might be thought subversive of morality or virtue. (7) Scenes which might be morally harmful to the young, especially, of both sexes. (8) Scenes which might seem to encourage, or appear to view with indifference, breaches of the law, or perpetration of crime. (9) Scenes of brutal cruelty or violence. (10) Scenes from which the inference could be drawn that offences against those laws, or rules, or recognized social codes, which govern the regulations of the sexes in married and single life are matters to overlook or treat lightly."

Under the censorship regulations advertising matter and "paper" of every description must be submitted to and passed by the Commonwealth Film Censorship of Australia before being allowed to be imported or used in Australia.

Independent Exchange Incorporated in Chicago

The incorporation, under the laws of Illinois, of the Favorite Players Film Corporation with $100,000 capital fully paid up, by Isaac Van Ronkel of Chicago and Maurice Fleckels of New York, marks the advent of what promises to be one of the most important independent exchanges in the central west.

As previously announced, Messrs. Fleckels and Van Ronkel have purchased the Hallmark Exchanges at Chicago and Milwaukee and the executive offices of the new corporation will be located in Hallmark's former Chicago headquarters, 63 E. Adams street. The Milwaukee office will also be retained in charge of Manager Frank Hensler.

Probably few exchanges ever started business in Chicago territory with such an extensive list of pictures as Favorite Players Film Corporation is offering exhibitors, including, as they do, the Hallmark releases, twenty-six Triangle pictures and a large number of Keystone Comedies and single reelers. To cap this array, the rights for Clara Kimball Young pictures, including three of Garson's super attractions, have been acquired for Illinois and Indiana territory, the first of which, "Hush," will be ready for release early in October.

Rupert Hughes Addresses Screen Writers Guild

The Screen Writers Guild of the Authors League of America is permanently organized, and the outline for the organization's immediate work was made at a barbecue dinner given on the Hacienda set at Brunton studios Saturday evening, August 28th, President Thompson Buchanan presided, and Rupert Hughes, president of the Authors League, was the principal speaker.

"The greatest work for the Guild in my opinion," Rupert Hughes told the members after briefly reviewing the work of the Authors League, "is to perfect a contract suitable to screen writers and motion picture producers. What improves conditions for the producer will also better conditions for the writer and I emphatically urge you to look upon the producer as your friend and not your enemy. What has been done by the Authors League in standardizing a contract for writers with publishers can be duplicated by this Guild within the film industry and thereby save hours of time of busy managers and writers alike."

"Credit Due Non-Taxing Publishers"

The Sam Fox Publishing Co. asserts that the campaign, instituted by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America against music publishers who impose a tax on music rendered in picture theatres, should establish a recognition of those other music publishers who have been staunch in their support of the exhibitors. The Sam Fox concern furthermore maintains that the publishers, not imposing the tax, should be given a "square deal," which, it is alleged, has been often denied them.

The Fox house declares that although it has at all times offered its catalogue free of tax to the motion-picture enterprise, yet co-operation on the part of certain theatre-owners in featuring musical compositions has been lacking. That such co-operation is to the benefit of the exhibitor is borne out in the prestige and success realized by those higher-class houses which have put on special settings to feature song successes, says the Sam Fox statement. The objection of some managers to screen the name of the musical theme is also branded as a piece of short-sightedness.

To Represent Industry at Buenos Aires Exhibit

William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion-Picture Industry, has appointed a committee, representing the various branches of the motion-picture industry in the United States to co-operate with the organizations in this country which are promoting an international exposition to be conducted in Buenos Aires during March and April of next year, under the auspices of the national exposition of the United States Manufacturers.

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, has been appointed chairman of the committee

Recent Incorporations in the State of New York

With a total capitalization of $494,500, the following firms incorporated during last week with the Secretary of State, for the purpose of engaging in the motion-picture business: The L. S. and B. Amusement Corporation, $30,000, Jacob Lefkow, Abraham Shenk, Jacob Birnham, New York; Delsarte Film Corporation, $100,000, J. Harrison Hough, John S. Brown, Jr., Clarence E. Yudkin, Samuel O. Siegel, New York; Children's Chautauqua, Inc., Andrew I. Albert, Marcus Rosenthal, Minnie B. Siskins, New York; Corinthian Amusement Co., $10,000, Sidney Rothner, Reuben Fruchtman, William Greenberger, New York.

Film Imports to Level Foreign Exchange

That the importation of foreign-made films into this country will play an important role in settling the problem of international exchange and do a great deal towards establishing commercial reciprocity, is the belief held by Paul H. Cromelin, President and General Manager of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation. Furthermore, Mr. Cromelin believes that the American trade's endorsement of such a policy will lead to an internationalization of the motion picture industry.

"Importing productions made abroad into America," said Mr. Cromelin, "will promote reciprocity and assist in settling the problem of international exchange. Exporting films turned out in the United States serves to create a favorable impression about our country everywhere."

Threatened Operators' Strikes Avoided

CHEERING news of the avoidance of motion picture operators' strikes in three sections of the country gives a brighter aspect to the strike situation in the picture industry where discontent has been speading for several months. In the cities of Chicago and Albany and the state of Rhode Island, the threatened strikes have been avoided and the operators are still at work. The strike in Chicago was to be one of sympathy for the musicians who have been deadlocked with the theatre managers for two months. The theatres are still running their pictures without music. In Tampa, Florida, the operators have modified their original demands and the situation is hanging fire.

The operators in Rhode Island were agreed to walk out on midnight of September 4th. The order was countermanded, however, by the international organization, which ordered the men to return to work on Labor Day. It is said that the action of the men in Providence in asking for an exhorbitant wage increase, was not sanctioned by the international body.

To all intents and purposes the operators were to strike at midnight in order that the act might have some effect on the moving picture managers and other show houses where moving pictures are shown. It had little effect, however, as the Managers Association refused to grant the demands, and told the operators their positions would be filled on Labor Day by other operators who would have kept the houses open on Labor Day.

The managers in Providence regarded the demands of the operators as excessive. Had their plans gone through their weekly scale would have been $84 a week, and on weeks in which a holiday came the wage would be $94 per week. It would have made an increase in pay of nearly 50 per cent.

In Chicago, operators representing practically every moving picture theatre in the city met at the Masonic Temple on Tuesday, September 7th, and by unanimous vote refused to walk out in sympathy with the musicians who have been on strike since June 30th. The theatre janitors union also refused to agree to a sympathetic strike to aid the musicians.

Thomas E. Malloy, business manager of the operators' union, said after the meeting that the operators simply do not feel that thy have any grievance for a strike. They will, however, not work with non-union musicians or any other non-union employees. Managers of theatres report that the lack of music in their houses has not hurt attendance and that the public generally continues in sympathy with the managers, whose offers of twenty-five per cent. increase in wages, said to be more than enough to cover the increased cost of living, has been repeatedly refused by the musicians. A number of theatres have arranged to furnish organ music with pictures, but with very few exceptions have stood pat on their refusal to grant the advance demanded by orchestra players, and are consequently without music.

Arbitration has been resorted to in Albany. The operators are demanding $40 a week, an incrase of $15, and have been granted $35 per week. At first the operators were indignant and gave out statements to the effect that they would strike on Labor Day unless the entire amount asked was granted. This week has seen repeated meetings with the result that the differences have been settled to the extent that the whole situation will be settled by a board of arbitration.

Some of the managers, fearful of a strike, decided to take the bull by the horns and run their own machines in case the men walked out. Differences have been patchd up, however, and there is a belief in all circles that the situation will clarify itself. Musicians in the motion picture theatres here have been given an increase of $5 per man a week. Stage hands are also demanding more wages.

The Operators' Union of Tampa, Florida, presented demands to the managers calling for a wage increase from the 80c per hour, with $1 an hour overtime, which they are now receiving, to $1 an hour straight time, with $1.50 an hour for overtime.

The managers refused to sign up at the scale demanded, and it is now announced, that the Operators have decided to split the demands 50-50 on the straight time, and will sign up at 90c per hour, which gives them a raise of 10c an hour.

This also, it is stated, the managers have refused and it looks now as though the "closed shop," as far as the operators are concerned, will be a thing of the past, unless the operators are willing to continue at the old rate.

Vitagraph Sues Semon for Heavy Damages

ONE of the largest cases in the history of the United States District Court of Southern California has just been filed by President Albert E. Smith, of the Vitagraph Company of America, who has sued Larry Semon, the famous screen comedian, for a total of $407,338.22. It is alleged the defendant deliberately increased the costs of his productions through delays, carelessness and waste to an unreasonable figure, with the aim of forcing the Vitagraph Company to release him from his contract. Semon, it is said, had a Vitagraph contract for $2,500 weekly when a competing company offered him $5,000.

The suit is unique in that Vitagraph does not ask that it be released from its contract, but insists the star make good the damages and continue his employment.

According to the terms of the contract, filed with the suit, Larry Semon was to make twelve two-reel comedies a year for three years, it is stated. Five pictures have been released, another has just been completed, and Vitagraph declares it is practically impossible for Semon to deliver more than a total of seven pictures during the first year. Semon's latest picture, "The Suitor," figures prominently in the suit inasmuch as it is charged that, aside from the usual studio expenses, more than $80,000 was spent, or approximately $42,000 in excess of what would constitute a reasonable outlay, it is reported. The suit was filed by Attorneys William M. Seabury of New York, General Counsel for Vitagraph, and George W. Fenimore of Los Angeles, resident counsel for the California Company. The legal point involved is said by the attorneys to be whether or not motion picture stars and directors can deliberately and wilfully increase the cost of their productions to a prohibitive figure in the hope that the producers will cancel their contracts.

President Smith of Vitagraph, whose arrival from New York was simultaneous with his filing the suit, declares that Larry Semon has been placed in the position he holds as a motion picture star through the opportunities, advantages, and exploitation given him at an approximate expense of $500,000 by the company. It is charged that Semon, when refused his demands for a new contract at more than double the salary of his existing contract, notified his employer that he would do his utmost to avoid further performance of his obligations under the current agreement, and would strive to procure its termination and cancellation prior to the agreed date.

Semon's latest comedy, "The Suitor," not yet on the market, is mentioned frequently. It is alleged Larry Semon employed a company of stock and extra players and caused them to remain idle for a long period. It is further stated that for the short flashes of the dancing girls in the pictures, twenty of them were kept on the payroll for 33 days. Many other alleged wasteful instances are cited and the loss given as $12,338.22. The plaintiff holds that the picture, with reasonable diligence and care on the part of Semon, the director, could have been completed in thirty days, and Semon is said to have occupied eighty-three days.

Mr. Smith bases his greatest demand for damages, $365,000, on the alleged loss sustained because he will receive five less pictures the first year than called for by the contract.

Michigan Exhibitors in Political Fight

HARRY SCOTT, manager of the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., of Detroit, in the following statement, tells of the first entry of Michigan exhibitors into a political campaign in support of the candidate for lieutenant governor.

"In this, their first entry into a political fight," says Mr. Scott, "the exhibitors not only won at the polls a great victory for the industry in general but demonstrated more clearly and with greater force than ever before what a powerful weapon for good or evil in national life they hold within themselves.

"It has long been a policy with the Michigan Motion Picture Exhibitors' League never to allow their screens to be used for political propaganda. The single exception to this rule comes in the instance where a man in public life who has done some good for the industry is attacked by those who are attempting its downfall.

"This was the exception to the rule that gave Michigan exhibitors the opportunity to line up and line up strongly for Tom Read as their candidate for lieutenant governor as against another who was receiving the backing of the censorship agitators. An overwhelming victory for Read at the polls in the Republican primaries held on Tuesday, August 31, proved a fitting finale for the campaign carried on by the exhibitors of Michigan in defense of the industry.

"When Mr. Read, a few months ago, declared himself a candidate on the Republican ticket for the office of lieutenant governor, to which office the details in connection with the state's amusement are assigned, he was immediately asked by the unfriendly picture interests to come out in the open with his motion picture stand.

"Read didn't hedge a trifle. He stated that if he was elected to the office he would do everything within his power to discourage the establishment of a state censorship board.

"Right then and there Read stirred up a kettle of fish. The anti-bathing girl proponents shouted about this perfectly awful man from the street corners, they enlisted the services of some of the strongest-lunged ministers in the state and through pulpit and Tuesday afternoon meetings of the Ladies' Aid Societies of Michigan came fierce denunciations of the "carryings on" in the movies and this terrible man who was going to uphold such films. In other words some of Read's opponents would have the voters believe that Michigan's moral status would be on a par with that of Rome at the time of Nero the moment he took office.

"Notwithstanding the fact that Read made perfectly clear his ideas about motion pictures, that he was strongly opposed to the obscene or anything else that might be of harm morally to the people of the state, his opponents continued to misunderstand him and to help other people do likewise. The fact that he was opposed to their ideas of censorship was the grave in which they sought to bury his political aspirations.

"But the Michigan Exhibitors' League got busy early in the fight. Through Secretary Arthur Moeller they circularized the state screens with special slides of Tom Read's face and his ideas about pictures until his name became almost as popular as the featured player on the daily programs.

"The net result was that the Read opposition was literally snowed under and the exhibitors' candidate came romping under the wire with one of the greatest pluralities ever given a candidate for the office of lieutenant governor in Michigan."

Jesse Hampton May Expand Production

JESSE D. HAMPTON, Los Angeles film producer, has returned to Los Angeles after a stay of several weeks in New York City. His recent visit was primarily at the solicitation of a group of prominent New York and European capitalists who are interested in motion pictures and allied enterprises, including the stage, both here and abroad. A series of conferences between Mr. Hampton and leading members of the syndicate was held, during which there was presented for his consideration a project which would involve a notable expansion of his present producing program and extend its scope to the stage as well, through a new and novel arrangement.

This project would contemplate, among other features, the removal of Mr. Hampton's main production activities to the East, notwithstanding the fact that he has just completed a modern, fully-equipped $250,000 studio in Hollywood. It is probable, however, that if the deal is consummated, the syndicate in question will take over this studio and make it available for rental by producing companies now unable to secure permanent studio space in Los Angeles. The studio might also be utilized as a Western unit in the syndicate's production plans.

Among other features presented by the syndicate was a substantial offer for a return to the stage of H. B. Warner, who has been the star in a series of Hampton screen productions. This offer also contemplated the appearance on the stage of Miss Blanche Sweet, who likewise is a Hampton star. William J. Desmond, another Hampton star who also has appeared on the stage throughout the United States and Australia, is likewise included in the proposed plan. Mr. Desmond, at the close of his appearance in a special film production in Los Angeles recently, was given a furlough in which to play the leading role in an Eastern special production under the management of Edward Small.

Mr. Hampton's present plans call for a number of feature productions starring Miss Sweet and Mr. Warner, as well as a series of special productions with all-star casts.

One phase of Mr. Hampton's present policy that is significant in connection with the syndicate's proposed plan for a blending of stage and screen activities is the fact that for some time he has had under contract for the writing of original dramatic material, a number of British authors and playwrights, including Henry Arthur Jones, Jerome K. Jerome, William J. Locke, John Hastings Turner, F. Anstey and others. It is understood that this arrangement is one of the important factors in the pending negotiations.

No definite announcement as to the outcome of the negotiations was forthcoming from Mr. Hampton before his departure for the West, or from the syndicate members, but it is probable that he will return to New York in several weeks for a final conference, when two executives of the syndicate's allied group of European interests will be in New York to participate. In the event that the deal is closed Mr. Hampton plans to occupy one of the well known studios in Manhattan in order to facilitate the work of his stars on the stage and screen; also his entire production organization, including directors Henry King and Robert Thornby, and his scenario and technical staffs will be transferred from Hollywood to New York.

H. E. Morton, Mr. Hampton's New York representative, was scheduled to sail for Europe early in August, but his trip was deferred on account of the conferences in New York. If the proposed deal is consummated he probably will leave for Europe soon afterward to complete certain phases of the project there.

About Music Cues

I URGE every musician to read this and the preceding articles in the Music Department of Motion Picture News very carefully. Several scores of conductors and musicians have written to me asking me to explain how to select music for the screen. If every musician could digest and thoroughly understand the meanings in this article, I feel that he would have no difficulty in making up his cue sheets from his own music library and do it successfully and to the best interests of himself and his audience.

"Dad" Snushall America's Oldest Exhibitor

In J. T. Snushall, manager of the Lyric theatre, Cadillac, Mich., lays claim to being the nation's oldest motion picture exhibitor who is still actively managing a live-wire house. Mr. Snushall, better known as "Dad" all over northern Michigan, recently celebrated his 76th birthday. That "Dad" is worthy of the reputation of being keener than a whole "passel" of the younger fry as far as bringing the crowds into his theatre is attested by the fact that his birthday was used as the basis of a joint exploitation campaign and celebration which crowded his theatre for a week. "Dad" has a keen sense of humor, and he selected "A Twilight Baby" as the feature to emphasize the occasion of the celebration. The newspaper advertising reflected the spirit of the occasion, for the first announcement of "A Twilight Baby" was made this way: "The secret of life is solved. Henry Lehrmann shows you with motion pictures how to start it, and 'Dad' Snushall demonstrates how to hold on to it. Both the same week at the Lyric." "Dad" also pulled a few publicity stunts to make the week successful, most of them being biographical sketches of special interest to the people who knew the northern woods. On the afternoon of the beginning of the run of the Lehrmann comedy, nearly two wagon loads of flowers were delivered at the theatre, and at night it seemed as if the whole town had turned out to honor the exhibitor and to see the picture. This city celebration was but the beginning, because during the remainder of the engagement of the comedy at the theatre, delegations from the various lumber camps which "Dad" characterized as representative because they included everyone in camp, journeyed into Cadillac to help along with the affair. All in all, the whole engagement was such a success from the standpoint of both prestige and profits for the theatre that the Fitzpatrick-McElry Company, owners of the Lyric, are promoting a scheme whereby "Dad" can have a birthday every week.

Stage Wedding for "Married Life" at Los Angeles

A new angle to the wedding on the stage exploitation idea marked the premier of Earl Tait, as house manager of the Victory theatre in Los Angeles. Mr. Tait opened his career as new manager of the Victory with "Married Life." It had been run the previous week to big business at the Kinema theatre and a parade depicting nearly all the mishaps which may result from marriage had been the big stunt there. Mr. Tait laid the plans for his exploitation while the picture was running at the Kinema by going around to the marriage license bureau and telling the clerk there that he wanted a couple to marry on the stage. On behalf of the theatre he offered to furnish the wedding ring, pay for the license, the minister, and also give a prize of $25. Then he called the newspapers and tipped them off that there was a story at the marriage license bureau. They sent men around and the effort to find a couple to be married at the theatre during the course of the showing was given good space. Mr. Tait followed this up with his advertising for a couple, and as a result received eight applications. From these he selected the couple which seemed to be the most widely known in Los Angeles. The newspapers treated the selection of the couple and the fact that seven couples had been willing to be married in the theatre as a news story. Two days later the story was repeated to announce that Ben Turpin and Phyllis Haver, who played leading roles in "Married Life," would act as best man and maid of honor, respectively, at the wedding. Other stories were used as merchants flocked forward with gifts for the bride and groom attracted by the publicity which was being given the event.

How Helmts, Des Moines, Exploits His Special Features

When Orchestra Struck Strand Makes Capital of It

"Millionaire dreams on the part of the members of our orchestra have deprived us of music to a greater extent than the Eighteenth Amendment has kept their inspiration from politicians and such. So if you can't take motion pictures 'straight' 'Bring Your Own' with you, if you want music." That is the tenor of all the advertising which put over "The Perfect Woman" at the Strand theatre in New Brunswick, N. J., at a time when exhibitors generally were expecting a let-down in business due to a strike of musicians. The musicians demanded a higher rate of pay than the exhibitors could pay without boosting admission prices and of the two evils the managers decided that "no music" would be less harmful to the box office. Accordingly, Mr. Shustermann bought newspaper space to state his side of the controversy with the musicians. Then he extended the invitation to patrons to "bring their own" music, with an explanatory note that all amateurs would be given the opportunity of learning the technique of motion picture orchestra playing during the engagement of "The Perfect Woman." The appeal had a sound psychological basis for amateur musicians desire above everything else an audience to listen to their efforts. They came and they brought their friends, and the general public flocked in, attracted by the reports of the real fun and entertainment that developed during the tryouts of the first night. The same interest continued throughout the week and by Wednesday night three or four orchestras had been formed, leaders elected and the theatre was open to them for rehearsals. The event attracted so much attention that extra performances were necessary on the last two days of the run of "The Perfect Woman" to satisfy the crowds that wanted to get into the Strand.

Bela Nyary Again Featured as Member of Rialto Orchestra

BELA NYARY, the czimbalom soloist who has appeared with several of the orchestras playing at the Broadway picture houses during the past year, is again being featured at the Rialto this week in the rendition of Liszt's "Fourth Hungarian Rhapsody."

Mr. Nyary and his czimbalom, the chief musical instrument of the Hungarian Gypsy orchestra, constitutes a decided novelty and makes doubly effective all of the Liszt compositions we have heard played in which the czimbalom was used.

The very peculiar tones of the instrument, the manner in which it is played, with two hammers resembling somewhat old-fashioned wooden spoons and the instrument itself present real exploitation possibilities.

The Rialto overture is an added box office attraction by reason of the fact that Mr. Nyary has been engaged for the week.

Another Live Wire Showman Takes Up Residence in the West

Events are crowding fast on Eugene L. Perry, manager of the Oakland T and D theatre, according to reports from the Pacific Coast.

Perry had no sooner acted as host to the greatest gathering of screen stars ever brought to any one city when he conceived and successfully programmed First National Day, but he's now acting as host to the most important guest who ever came into his household.

His name is Eugene L. Perry, Jr., and he arrived at 11.35 a. m., Monday, August 23.

He will be a permanent guest in the Perrys' Piedmont home.

Shafer to Manage Liberty, St. Louis

Walter D. Shafer, who has been managing the Fox Terminal theatre, Newark, N. J., has again been selected to conduct the affairs of the Liberty theatre of St. Louis, which has been closed during the summer while undergoing complete renovation.

The Terminal vacancy is filled by George Robinson, who comes from the Black circuit of theatres. Charles McDonald, who has been in charge of the Liberty at St. Louis, succeeds to the management of the Liberty of Elizabeth, N. J.

How Helmts Handles His Exploitation

Omaha Showman Believes Novelty Stunts Great Aid in Putting Over a Picture

MANAGING the Rialto theatre of Omaha, one of the A. H. Blank string, is the job which E. H. Helmts handles in a way that makes his competitors step to keep pace with him. Exploitation is the word that means much to Mr. Helmts, for it is exploitation which is getting a fair share of his attention these days, especially on pictures which really present opportunities.

One of Mr. Helmts' recent campaigns was for "Scratch My Back." Mr. Helmts began his advertising for "Scratch My Back" with the usual orthodox, 24 sheets, smaller paper and newspaper displays, but it was a tie-up with the Omaha Capital, one of the leading Omaha newspapers, which brought the best results.

With the assistance of the Capital a "Scratch My Back Club" was formed especially designed to interest Omaha's Young America.

On the front page of the paper, announcement was carried that a "Scratch My Back" man would be stationed at a certain place at certain times, and that every child under twelve would receive a "Scratch My Back Button" and a ticket to a special matinee for the show.

The crowd of youngsters which collected for the event was so great that the street was blocked. This fact was legitimate news for the Capital and in consequence the photographer and a feature writer covered the story for more front page publicity.

All this publicity was planted well in advance of the first showing and for a full week something about "Scratch My Back" was to be found in the papers every day.

However, Mr. Helmts did not confine his publicity campaign to the stunts alone. Well in advance of the opening date a cutout from a 24-sheet showing a girl with a very low backed gown on which was printed "Scratch My Back" was placed on each side of the stage. The house electrician was instructed to throw a spot first on one cutout then the other and then to a card in the center which read, "To scratch or not to scratch that is the question!" Be here and see all next week." The week of the engagement these cutouts were used in the lobby.

On the Saturday before the opening, Mr. Helmts engaged a well dressed and "classy" looking couple to stage a ballyhoo for the streets.

The man and woman both clad in convential evening dress and wearing small black masks would climb into a seven-passenger car, donated by a local dealer who saw the advertising possibilities of the stunt and drive down a busy street in the shopping district apparently oblivious to the amount of attention they were attracting. The car would stop at a corner and the couple would point out various objects and talk in a very interested manner. When a crowd had gathered around which was a matter of but a few moments the girl would become uneasy and register that she was distressed. She would try to scratch her own back at first covertly and later openly using a large fan she carried for the purpose.

The last part of the "act" was for the girl to rise in her attempts to scratch her back upon which the man would register that he was cognizant of her difficulty whereupon he would stand beside her and gravely perform the operation after which both would seat themselves and order the car to proceed. As the car started off the driver would hoist a banner reading "Scratch My Back at the Rialto." This stunt was repeated numberless times during the engagement and never failed to get a big crowd at every performance.

The ballyhoo is shown by the illustration on the opposite page. Also another of Mr. Helmts exploitation stunts a lobby display for "The Prince Chap."

How Doc Horator Gets the Editors to Run His Stills

Harvey Horator, manager of the Alhambra theatre, Toledo, Ohio, believes that the art of getting free reading matter and pictures boosting attractions into newspapers is not a difficult matter if the method employed is open and above board. Newspaper men hate to have anything put over on them and while slipping a press agent "hokum" into news columns is possible now and then, the after effects are bad. It obviates the chance of getting some real helpful publicity that a newspaper is glad to give. One of the stills of "The Fighting Shepherdess," the one that shows the little star with a background literally covered with sheep and the hills in the distance appealed to him as a picture that created the idea of the picture he wanted his patrons to get. There wasn't much action in it, but Mr. Horator took it to this editor. He told the editor of the appeal the beauty of the scene made to him, and the editor agreed that it would be a decoration for any page. He ran it.

When the Pantheon was opened the Alhambra manager wanted an unsual stunt to advertise it. One of the editors suggested it. Katherine MacDonald in "The Turning Point" had been selected as the opening attraction, and the exploitation was a teaser campaign. They plastered the town with small placards reading:

"Call 2958 and make an engagement to meet the most beautiful woman in America. Ask for Miss MacDonald.

"That was the new theatre's telephone number. Every editor in town helped to exploit the teaser campaign by answering mythical or real letters that they did not know what the signs meant and suggesting that the inquiring party call the number and find out. Finally on a certain date, which coincided with the beginning of the advertising, campaign on "The Turning Point" they all used good stories explaining the placards.

Draperies Used in Place of Painted Drops at Rivoli

PAINTED stage settings for use in the specialty numbers are discarded this week at the Rivoli theatre in favor of draperies.

For the vocal number, Edoardo Albano, baritone and Mildred Lamb, contralto, singing "Dreaming Alone in the Twilight," a gray curtain is used on which a scarlet flood is thrown with a fine effect. The curtain in the light has a golden hue that is very pleasing to the eye.

For the ballet number, presented by Vera Myers, Grace Eastman and Betty Stewart, a black velvet drop is used, which silhouettes the dancers when lighted with amber floods.

Both these numbers are within the reach of any theatre possessing even a very small stage and if they get over with New York audiences which most certainly they do, they should please in other cities.

Wilkes-BarreNewsInaugurates Photoplay Section

Among the newspapers to recently inaugurate a photoplay department is the Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Evening News.

The movie page at present is confined to two columns outside of the display sections and includes a listing of the various bills current at the several Wilkes-Barre theatres and a considerable amount of picture news about the industry in general.

The Mystery Woman Is In Again

The veiled female who has done yeoman service exploiting pictures appeared in Omaha last week in a new guise and proceeded to set that city agog over "The Deep Purple," which played a week's engagement at the Moon theatre. Edward Holland, Mayflower exploitation representative, wrote and staged the act and the Mystery Woman did the rest.

Holland erected a large blank sign over a building on one of Omaha's principal corners. Each day at noon the Mystery Woman, garbed in an Oriental costume of purple, has appeared on the scaffold and painted a few words. A leather-lunged bugler each day heralded her coming. Crowds collected on the corner and watched her work, speculating on the solution of the puzzle.

On Saturday, the day before the opening of "The Deep Purple," the Mystery Woman appeared for the last time and painted in the missing letters which announced the showing of the Walsh picture at the Moon. So persuasive was the Mystery Woman's artistic efforts that day after day the same people reappeared to watch her work. She was one of the chief topics of local conversation with the newspapers displaying more than ordinary interest in her activities.

In addition to this stunt, Holland made a further bid for patronage by arranging one of the most attractive and dignified lobby settings ever seen in Omaha. The display consisted of draping a fine quality of purple gauze around the box office and the entrances leading into the auditorium. A string of electric lights were stretched across the top.

Pete Smith's Latest Exploitation Stunt

How the Showing of "Go and Get It" at the Kinema, Los Angeles, Was Boosted With a New Stunt

FOUR days prior to the opening of "Go and Get It" at the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, Pete Smith, publicity director of the Marshall Neilan studios, and Richard Spier, promotion manager of the Kinema, visited every managing editor in the city and invited them to take part in a five hundred foot motion picture to give the citizens of Los Angeles an opportunity of seeing what the men responsible for their daily news look like.

Accompanied by Wesley Barry, who appears in "Go and Get It," David Kesson and Foster Leonard, two Neilan cameramen, the publicity men had no trouble in "selling" every editor on the idea and without much further ado, managing editors, city editors, reporters and cartoonists were cast in different skits, each newspaper being given an individual playlet. For instance, at the Herald, Guy Price, the dramatic editor, is seen on the screen after a hard night at "chess," when Managing Editor J. B. Campbell enters with Wesley Barry and invites Price to take the afternoon off and allow Wesley to hold down the desk. A vivid illustration of what happens to the movie press agents' stories is presented by Wesley, a gigantic wire waste basket, twice the size of Wesley himself, being one of the important features. In this skit W. M. Barr, city editor of the Examiner also played a part, namely that of a copy boy.

Among the other local newspaper celebrities who took part in this film were Arthur Knisely, editor, and Ben S. Memmon, city editor of the Record, Ralph Trueblood, managing editor, and R. Braddock, city editor of the Times; Ray T. Van Ettish, city editor, Lee Ettelson, Charles H. Haskell, Alex Cuscaden and George R. Kennedy of the Examiner; Harry Straham, city editor of the Express and fifteen members of his staff.

The following evening the film, with particularly fitting titles written in a humorous vein, was finished and at midnight it was shown before the preview of "Go and Get It." Despite the late hour, a thousand people consisting of Los Angeles newspapermen and their families turned out for the showing. A punch was served and everyone was made to feel at home. Each paper had its reserved section in the orchestra marked with cards, the auditorium resembling a gathering at a political convention, the names of the newspapers taking the place of the usual card with the name of the state.

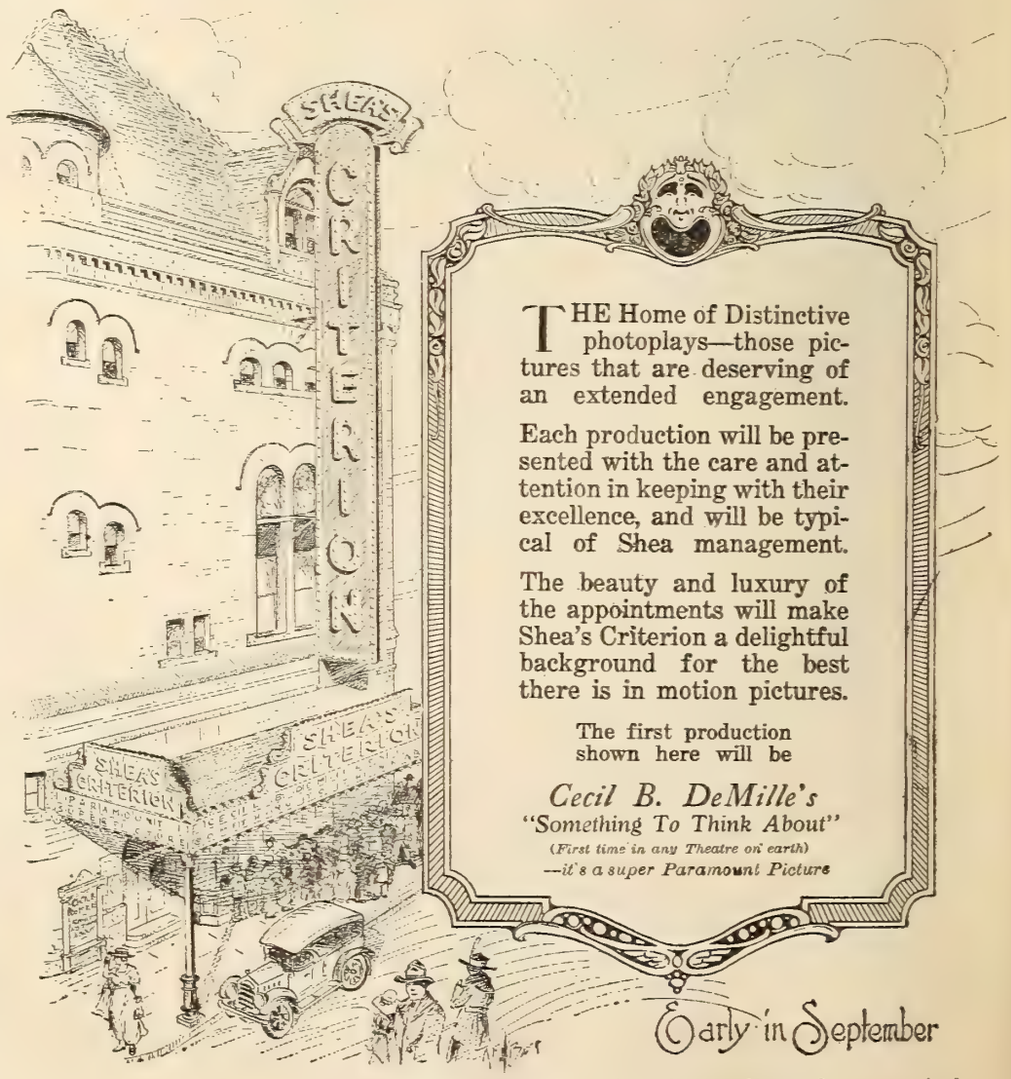
Every newspaperman in town that could get away turned out to see his "boss" as a movie actor and the "bosses" themselves were on hand to concede that, as actors, they were great editors. Immediately following the special film "Go and Get It" was projected. Wesley Barry, Pat O'Malley, J. Barney Sherry, and other members of the cast were present and received the congratulations of everyone on their work.

How Franklin "Sold" the Criterion Prior to Opening

Attractive Advance Advertising Campaign for Buffalo's New Movie Palace

ONE of the most attractive and unusual advance advertising campaigns ever placed in a newspaper was that recently put over by Harold B. Franklin, managing director of both the Shea Hippodrome and Shea Criterion in Buffalo. In this instance Mr. Franklin had a real problem on his hands. The Criterion is the old Star theatre, one of Buffalo's historic playhouses, which in its more than a quarter century of existence has housed most of the stellar lights of the legitimate stage. For a few years prior to the taking over of the house by the Shea Amusement Company and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the Star had a somewhat stormy career, several policies having met with little success. While it originally catered to a high-class patronage, the Star gradually lost its "class" under its constant change of policy and just before the Shea-Famous Players deal, the "class" part of the house had reached a low ebb.

Single coulmns display run the day previous to the Criterion's opening



When the two companies above mentioned took over the theatre, they immediately began to remodel it throughout at a cost approximating $75,000 and it was up to Franklin to put the "class" back into the Criterion. A glance at the accompanying illustrations will show how well he succeeded.

Three weeks in advance of the opening Franklin placed the first "policy" display in the local newspapers, not in regular drama columns, but in the news sections. This ad announced that the Shea Criterion would be the home of the superproductions of the Paramount pictures, that surrounded by beauty, enchanted by the delicate artistry of the appointments, Buffalonians would wonder what master had wrought the miracle. "Sinbad, himself, would be silenced at the gorgeous magnificence of this theatre when it reopened," declared the ad, which continued to say that "Beneath its jeweled canopy one would leave the material world behind." This reader was placed in an attractive frame and the future patron was given a slight idea of what he could expect through the sketch of one of the pillars and corners of the remodeled interior.

Two weeks in advance of the opening Mr. Franklin placed his second "policy" ad in the news sections of the press. This ad had class all over it. The sketch which formed the background for the framed reading matter showed the new marque and the large Shea Criterion electric sign. The reader was of unusual distinctiveness and showed much thought on the part of the writer. "The Home of Distinctive Photoplay," it declared, "those pictures that are deserving of an extended engagement." Each production will be presented with the care and attention in keeping with their excellence and will be typical of Shea management. The beauty and luxury of the appointments will make Shea's Criterion a delightful background for the best there is in motion pictures. The first production shown here will be Cecil B. DeMille's "Something to Think About." The reader also informed Buffalo that the Criterion would show this picture for the first time in any theatre on earth.

The ads, however, which Franklin placed in the press one week in advance of the Criterion opening, was the climax of the campaign. Six small gems, a different one each day, glittered from the amusement columns and in carrying out the "class" idea, Franklin conceived a series of what one might call "400" sketches, showing the "elite" headed toward the Criterion. They were sketches such as one sees in connection with New York's Hotel Pennsylvania roof ads, which also aim at attracting the "inner circle" of society.

The reading in these small ad classics was exceptionally well thought out and equally well placed by the artist. The Monday ad conveyed the information that "Shea's Criterion will be noted for its fine entertainments—truly the cream in motion pictures. First picture—Cecil B. DeMille's 'Something to Think About.'" Tuesday Franklin declared that the Criterion would be a theatre with every metropolitan luxury. Wednesday the ad said that Criterion was a new word in motion picture presentation. Quality of service and perfection of appointments will make the Criterion a theatre of distinction, said the Thursday ad. The delights that are apparent at the other Shea houses will be embodied in Shea's Criterion was the thought in the Friday display, and Saturday Franklin showed a crowd coming down the side of his ad and the reader, "Everyone in Buffalo will get the habit of going to Shea's Criterion, Home of Super-Paramount Pictures." The opening attraction was mentioned in the entire layout.

On Saturday, in addition to the small ad, Franklin also placed a two-column ad that was one of the unique conceptions of the year. It showed a man looking through a paper, on the front page of which was the opening announcement of the Criterion. To localize this ad, Franklin had the caption of each local sheet placed at the top of the paper. This display created a lot of attention and comment.

The regular ad which was placed in the amusement columns was of the usual Franklinesque type, black and white, hand lettered, playing up the title of the picture, the name of the theatre and including all the supplementary attractions. At the left was a sketch of Monte Blue and Gloria Swanson, two of the stars of the picture.

That Franklin succeeded in his efforts to bring Old Man Class back to the reborn Criterion was shown on opening day when the largest and classiest automobiles in town were found in front of the Criterion and inside full dress and gorgeous gowns were much in evidence.

The Criterion will play its attractions as long as they stand up. The house will cater to a high-class trade at all times. Stage settings, soloists, a singing sextette, Hope-Jones' unit orchestra and other novelties are novelties on the program. Mr. Franklin, in addition to his duties at the Hippodrome, is also operating the Criterion—which is assurance of its success.

This is another single column ad designed to "sell" the house rather than the opening bill, "Something to Think About"

Skinner Ties His Advertising in with Local Events

Using motion pictures of local events as a standard attraction at his theatre has enabled H. E. Skinner to make for the hot summer months, a showing with the Alhambra theatre at Ogden, Utah, which rivals the best weeks of last winter in point of profit. The secret of the co-operation is simple in explanation. Everyone of the bigger events at any of the resorts, were put on Mr. Skinner's schedule and he advertised the fact that motion pictures of the event would be shown at the Alhambra. The potency of local motion pictures as patron getting material was more or less of an accidental discovery on the part of Mr. Skinner. He decided that he would hook up the local movies closer to the exploitation of the feature attractions at the Alhambra, and his first advertisements along this line were:

"MOTION pictures of every happy married couple attending the Tanners' Picnic next Saturday will be taken and shown all next week at the Alhambra theatre in connection with Marshall Neilan's great comedy, 'Don't EVER MARRY.'"

In connection with the Norma Talmadge production he used small space for many ads of this nature:

"Would you like to see yourself in motion pictures?"

"YES or NO?"

The cost of having the pictures taken may stop some exhibitors from using this style of exploitation. A whole reel doesn't have to be taken. Two hundred feet is enough although of course the more footage that is taken the greater the attraction. Also, it is usually possible to get the organizations that are staging the event to stand a considerable part of the cost. This plan is always a good one to follow for its starts talk about the pictures within the organization and the result is that there is a fine word of mouth advertising campaign going long before the picture is shown in your theatre.

"Paper" for "Go and Ge It" Stirs Up Excitement in Southern City

"The gruesome picture of an ape, which has been and is being displayed by a local movie house in advertising one of their pictures, has caused quite a bit of excitement and unrest among the more superstitious of the negroes. Marvelous and mysterious animals have been reported to have been seen in and around Cypress Pond, and it has even been said by some that a 'mairmaid' has been captured from the creek at Madison Park. The 'Mairmaid' is supposed to be in the county jail, and is the cause of the rain, for 'jes' as long as she air kept out of water, it's gwine ter rain.'

"The other animal whose habitat is Cypress Pond has been described by the frightened darkies as 'having a head jes' like dat' (meaning the ape's head used in the Empire theatre's ads), 'and it has four feet, three tails and a voice like a child.' Conversations have been held with this mystery, it is reported, and the negroes are much disturbed. The ads, which everyone has to admit are rather striking, are generally supposed to have started all these wild rumors."

The above has been taken verbatim from the front page of the Montgomery Journal, Montgomery, Alabama, under date of August 20th, and report the unusual, funny, yet almost embarrassing predicament of the manager of the Empire theatre, Montgomery, who is advertising his coming run of "Go and Get It," in which "Ferre, the Ape-Man," plays so big a part. It is quite possible that, should the unrest which is rampant among the negroes—and, in fact, being felt by some of the lower-class whites—grows to larger proportions, the run of the picture may have to be cancelled, for the police of the Southern cities don't care to have any sort of trouble, especially of this sort, with the darkies—their superstition and gullibility is of such a nature that they are quite likely to become maddened fanatics, and create tremendous upheaval.

That's the embarrassing part. And the funny part is that the excitement was so unexpected by the manager—far from planning it, he would give a great deal to be able to stop it! Thus does unexpected publicity make hard the life of managers!

Use Heralds, Says Hutchinson

J. D. Hutchinson, manager of the Stoneham theatre, Stoneham, Mass., is another small town exhibitor who believes that heralds properly written and properly distributed is one of the best exploitation mediums that can be secured.

Mr. Hutchinson gives great care to the wording of his reading matter for herald use, making it original, and ties his announcement of a picture to be shown into an interesting timely story.

Orowitz Puts Over Great Campaign at Williamsport

Further evidence of the accomplishments of Famous Players exploitation representatives was demonstrated recently in Williamsport, Pa., during a campaign on "Why Change Your Wife," which was booked for a week's run at the Majestic theatre.

Eli M. Orowitz, exploitation representative for Famous Players-Lasky at the Philadelphia exchange, conferred with Jack Myers, head of the Excel Amusement Company, and George H. Bubb, manager of the Majestic, outlining a plan for putting over an effective campaign at a slight cost to the exhibitor. He was told to "go to it."

Despite the fact that "The Sun," which possessed the most powerful circulation in the city and vicinity, had absolutely declared it would not co-operate on any motion picture publicity, the exploitation man tackled William I. N. Cox, business manager of the paper. He was persuaded to look at the production at a private showing that clinched the argument and marked a new departure in the Sun's motion picture policy.

Nine days prior to opening of the engagement the first page articles on a "divorce contest" began to appear. Then the essays were published on the editorial page. The campaign became so intense and interesting to the subscribers and general public that John E. Person, the managing editor, became enthused and used the additional idea of allowing the readers to decide the winners by a numbering stunt.

"Some Musical (H) airs at the Reisenfeld Houses

THE cartoon novelties by Marcus, the New York Times artist, which are being shown exclusively by the Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion theatres are of such decided entertainment interest that it would seem that a ready market would be found for them if they were given national distribution.

The idea is to show what a great difference a little hair properly distributed will make in a person's appearance.

This week's offerings show Victor Herbert, John Phillip Sousa, George Cohan, and Dr. Reisenfeld, "before and after" having various hirsute appendages moved about, first so as to disguise and then to normal position.

The title of the strip is "Some Music (H) airs." The number is going over big, especially the drawing devoted to Dr. Reisenfeld.

Erber Stages Parade for "High and Dizzy"

When "High and Dizzy" played the Auditorium theatre, Dayton, Ohio, Manager Erber expended his exploitation energies on the comedy rather than on the multiple reel offering on the bill.

There was a parade headed by a brass band which started at the Union Station in Dayton and marched through the prominent streets in the city. Every participant in the parade wore a pair of shell-rimmed glasses, the kind that Harold Lloyd made famous. Several young men were also dressed to look like Lloyd. In addition to this large cut-outs of Lloyd were placed in the windows of the leading oculists and a great deal of attention was attracted by this display.

Criterian, New Buffalo House, Opens

Shea's Criterian, Buffalo's latest addition to the theatres devoted exclusively to pictures, opened Sunday, September 5th, with Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, also managing director of the new house.

Frank Costello Offers Advice on Prologues

"When and How to Prologue" by One of the Pioneers in the Latest Presentation Wrinkle

THIS story is written by Frank Costello, manager of the Tivoli theatre of San Francisco, one of the pioneers in the vogue of prologues in connection with the presentation of motion pictures.

The article is a narration of personal experiences with observations that will be of value to other exhibitors. It gives first hand information, not theory but actual facts. No further editorial comment is needed.

"We started with stage settings at the Tivoli, by utilizing a score of revue girls working at a local cafe, who were procured by our energetic press representative for a nominal sum. They appeared in Chinese costume and with appropriate vocal numbers, formed an interesting prologue for a production with an oriental atmosphere. Our stage settings and prologue idea has blossomed forth. The local newspaper reviewers were very kind in their commendable mention of this innovation, the first of its kind in San Francisco.

"From then on we tried various experiments, and found that where the picture did not suggest a setting or prologue it was far better to leave it out. Sometimes a song or well known vocal number was used, but if not suggestive, the prologue was dispensed with. Another time we broke the picture—it was the 'Beauty Market'—and at the point where Katherine MacDonald is 'phoned by her irate uncle, we carried the action on the stage, utilizing two illusion effects, as well as having the stage so set and the players so arranged as to give the impression of the house party. But never again! It was an out-and-out fizzle, disturbed the pleasure of the audience, meant nothing, broke up the continuity of the story, and was an all-around failure. After the opening days' performance the prologue was changed to precede the projection of the picture, and with appropriate slides to describe the action, again played. The result was most gratifying, the audience was immediately keyed-up to a pitch of intense excitement, wondered why and what it was all about, gave the set and players a rousing applause and then eagerly watched the picture.

"That experience has taught us, NOT TO BREAK THE PICTURE. Rather do we make a point of preceding the picture, arousing interest in the story and production before it is projected and so excite the suspense that our patrons leave the theatre with commendable praise and provide the so necessary mouth-to-mouth advertising.

"With 'The River's End,' which broke all house records, we staged an exterior snow scene, utilizing a green lamp effect for the snow, which worked so well we fooled the critics. In the set we showed a Northern hut, which after the playing of the Aurora Borealis lights, showed up the figure of Conniston, advising Keith to beware of the Inspector MacDowell, a local actor of considerably prominence was obtained to play the part of Conniston, and his deep, vibrant voice, carried all over the house. Immediately after his voice was heard and he had finished, bang, out went the house lights, stage effects, and before the audience knew it they were watching the picture, and eager to see it through to its completion. This prologue made the opening paragraph and heading for the review as written by Thomas Nunan of the Examiner, a man of over twenty years theatrical critic experience and considered the "daddy of them all in San Francisco."

"It is our purpose here not to permit the prologue to run longer than from five to seven minutes, opening with slides that explain the action, and then closing down on the general house lights, so that the stage gets all the attention.

"In the making of these atmospheric stage settings, I have been materially assisted by Wm. H. Jobelmann, the publicity representative of the Turner and Dahnken Circuit, who entered into the spirit of the thing with zest and indefatigable energy. It was he who started me on the working of these prologues, and to him is due the credit of their recognition."

How Winsor Brought People to See His Lobby Display

Ralph Winsor, manager of the Star theatre, Portland, Oregon, recently put over an exploitation campaign for "Dolly of the Storm Country" that was doubly effective.

The Star lobby is fifty feet wide and small displays are not effective in it. Accordingly, the first thing that Mr. Winsor decided upon was a cutout of Mrs. Chaplin from a twenty-four sheet which he had mounted on canvas and painted with a background of the old Dutch style which conttrasted in a pleasing style with the lobby scheme of decoration. This was hung directly between the two big entrance doors to the theatre. The next most prominent place in the lobby is the end near the box office. For this place cut-outs taking three figures from another twenty-four sheet which, mounted on beaver board, were used. These were placed in a frame and backed up with a transparent background showing a lighthouse and a stormy ocean scene. Green gelatine and powerful flood lights in back of the frame gave a pleasing effect. These two cut-outs were the main figures of the display, but were only a small part of it. Numerous one-sheet brass frames mounted on easels were also used and because Mr. Winsor felt that the two large cut-outs furnished sufficient color for the display he utilized photographs mounted on cardboard and with hand lettered captions to fill these frames. Six sheets were used at either end of the lobby in curved frames which extended around the corners of the entrance into the street.

An event which permitted Mr. Winsor to take full advantage of the display occurred. Captain Walter Wanderwell and his World Touring Party arrived about this time and the Wanderwell car was parked in front of the theatre. Thus additional prospective patrons were attracted to a position where they could get a look at the lobby display.

Capitol Overture in Fifth Place This Week

THE overture number at the Capitol this week is placed in fifth position, the performance opening with a scenic picture with the orchestra playing "Morning," the first movement of "Peer Gynt" suite by Grieg as an accompaniment.

The overture selection is from "Cavalleria Rusticana" and is divided into two parts. The first is the orchestral rendition of the intermezzo and the last is the duet by "Santuzza" and "Alfio," sung by Marie Stampleton and Bertram Peacock.

A sky drop with set pieces in front in which blended colors obtained principally by lightings is provided as a stage setting for the vocal selection.

The artists are attired in the correct costumes of the opera. A woods cut out masks the flys and wings.

Teaser Stunt for "What's Your Hurry?"

Des Moines, Ia., woke up one morning to find everything asking "What's Your Hurry?" The question was asked at street corners, in the newspapers, from billboards and chalked along the pavements of the main thoroughfares. Wives asked the question of their husbands with querulous eyes, and police ran in loafers from the parks with the same query. Des Moines didn't know whether someone was taking a slam at it or patting it on the back. It was the old case of bouquets or brickbats over again.

Just at the time when the leading citizens had taken the question as a compliment to their aggressiveness, a flock of automobiles appeared with the pennant on their rear: "What's Your Hurry?" Immediately the wise ones had known all along that the publicit ywas part of a safety first campaign for the automobilist.

The next day the A. H. Blank theatres announced the booking of a picture called "What's Your Hurry?" at several houses. It was the initial announcement disclosing that the whole series of stunts were part of a cleverly laid publicity and exploitation campaign planned and executed by Norman Dixon, exploitation representative at the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at Des Moines.

New Diver Stunt for "Below the Surface"

Liberty Theatre of Cape May Ties-up with Naval Station Boys

THE opening of "Below the Surface" at the Liberty theatre, Cape May, N. J., was the occasion of an interesting campaign that put the picture over as a sure-fire hit. The Naval Station there was used for a tie-up and on the Sunday prior to the opening of the show a clever stunt was pulled off.

Just at noon, when the bathers were all down on the beach, a man appeared wearing a diver's costume and carrying a suitcase on which was inscribed:

"Somewhere down there 'BELOW THE SURFACE' 27 sailors are dying in a sunken submarine. See what happened to them at the LIBERTY THEATRE, Wednesday and Thursday."

Immediately he was surrounded by a crowd, who watched him as he walked to the edge of the beach, apparently searching for the point where the submarine went down. He opened the suitcase and took from it a spyglass and a chart, then scanned the water. Then, suddenly he jumped into the air and waved his arms above his head. This was a signal for the lifeguards to appear. They came, as had been prearranged, with their boat. He got in, and was rowed away, out of sight, being landed on a deserted part of the beach where he could take off the helmet for fifteen minutes and get a breath of air, while the guards, who had been treated to free passes, returned to the beach and told how they had rowed him to a point two miles out where he had submerged. A quarter of an hour later they returned to the diver, who had meanwhile splashed his suit and become thoroughly wet, as became a traveler to the depths, and he was returned to the crowded beach and clamorous crowd.

Then, a few minutes later, a big aeroplane appeared, flying very low, and from it began to appear papers, which dropped on the beach and into the surf and were captured by curious swimmers. These were notices about the picture, stating that it would play at the Liberty on the two days mentioned.

That was the extent of the exploitation, except for the fact that the suitcase with its banners was "parked" all day on top of a sedan standing next to the most crowded part of the boardwalk, where it attracted the curious for hours.

"Anitra's Dance" Ballet Number at Capitol

"ANITRA'S DANCE," from "Peer Gynt," is being given as a ballet solo at the Capitol theatre this week.

For the number Artist John Wenger has provided a very effective stage setting. A drop showing a night sky in which stars twinkle is masked off above the horizon by set pieces to represent a cleft in high cliffs of rock. Fluted columns of white cloth reach from the floor to the flys, behind which colored lights are placed. Floods in various colors are also used for lightings.

Doris Niles, the soloist attired as for the original play, gives the number complete, waving a colored veil as she dances. The number is arranged by Alexander Oumansky, ballet master at the Capitol.

Rothapfel Stages Prelude for "Milestones"

INTRODUCTORY to screening the feature picture at the Capitol theatre this week, "Milestones," S. L. Rothapfel has arranged a prelude, same being a ballet duet by Mlle. Gambarelli and Alexander Oumansky.

The artists dance the "Gavotte Louis XIV" before maroon plush curtains dressed by an ancient piece of furniture of the period mentioned.

The dancers finish their number well down on stage so that the screen curtains may be drawn behind them as they take their curtain call, allowing time to drop the screen into place so that the titles of the picture follow their exit without delay.

Flood and spot lightings are used for the number.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

Douglas D. Rothacker, manager of the industrial Division of the Rothacker Film Company, has appointed H. I. Walker industrial representative for Central Illinois. Mr. Walker has opened a headquarters office in Peoria where he has been conducting a dramatic school which turned out graduates who actually got bookings.

While in the last ten years Mr. Walker has played parts with some of the country's best known legitimate stock companies, he is an old timer in films. He was with the old American Company fourteen years ago when it had a pantry studio back of the Criterion Theatre in Chicago. Mr. Walker celebrated his appointment at 10.35 a. m. by landing a contract at 4:10 p. m. Then he came to the Chicago Rothacker headquarters for a two-day visit.

"What's Your Hurry?" featuring Wallace Reid in a romance of motor trucks, mud, gasoline and love, is proving one of the best business getters of the year at the Randolph Theatre, and is ending its second big week.

Manager Lucas of Robertson-Cole, reports that all key cities in the Chicago territory have been signed up for "Occasionally Yours" and "Big Happiness," the first two features to be released this Fall. He states that all indications point to a record-breaking year for Robertson-Cole in the Chicago district.

Carl Harthill, manager of Reelcraft's Chicago office, who is enjoying a vacation fishing in one of the Wisconsin lakes, told the world over the long distance phone that he was as busy hauling in fish in Wisconsin as he had been signing up Reelcraft contracts before he left for the woods.

Si Griever of Russell-Griever-Russell is in New York closing up contracts for the sale of Capital pictures in foreign territory. W. D. Russell of the same company was expected back from the west coast this week where he has been looking over the Capital studios, and getting plans under way for largely increased production.

Clarence Phillips, until recently with Educational Exchange, Chicago, is the first salesman to join the staff of Ike Van Ronkel's new exchange and will cover Chicago territory.

Excavating for the new Fox Film Exchange building at 910 S. Wabash Avenue, Chicago, was started on last Monday and architects and contractors are pushing the work on the new structure so that it will be ready for occupancy about the first of the new year.

The Stratford Theatre, located at 63rd and Halsted Streets, the largest moving picture house in Chicago, opened its doors Saturday, September 4th, under the management of W. P. Clement, well-known theatre man.

A very elaborate program had been arranged for the opening week including "Lady Rose's Daughter" starring Elsie Ferguson, as the feature, and Mack Sennett's latest comedy, "Don't Weaken."

A story which shows that T. F. Miller, who owns the Gem Theatre at Grafton, Illinois, is an enterprising exhibitor in every sense of the word, has just been brought back to Chicago by Jack Schwartz of the Associated First National sales force.

The town has no lighting plant and Mr. Miller has installed equipment for electric light for his theatre, and at the same time to light the way for the good citizens to reach the theatre, placed a number of lights in the nearby streets. These are turned on before the show opens and remain on until ten minutes after the show closes, thus affording light for such a period of time as is considered necessary for everyone to reach the show and then home in safety.

The public spirit of this theatre manager is appreciated by the townspeople and the theatre, of course, is prospering.

Mr. Schwartz states that Mr. Miller, not only proves his showmanship by furnishing free light, but that he is a discriminating buyer of pictures and has just closed a contract for twenty-seven First National attractions for the Gem.

The Randolph Theatre, Chicago, according to a statement emanating from the office of Jones, Linick and Schaefer, now is showing Paramount pictures far in advance of the scheduled release date and is the only theatre in America, at this time, showing these releases. Fatty Arbuckle in "The Round-up," which was shown at the Randolph last month, will not find its way to a New York screen until late in September and a month later in other parts of the country. The same may be said of Thomas Meighan in "Civilian Clothes."

Arrangements whereby the Randolph gets these advance dates is said to have been perfected during Aaron Jones' recent visit to to Adolph Zukor's country estate, where the Chicago theatre man ran off with the golf honors.

Max Levy is doing special work for Associated Producers and, it is understood, already has closed up some important contracts in the Chicago territory.

District Representative Shirley has returned to the Chicago office of Metro after a trip which took him as far west as Kansas City, and is very much pleased over the records being made throughout the territory. He reports that all the districts under his jurisdiction already have closed more than sixty-five per cent of their allotted quota of business for the year. Chicago Manager Graumon states that his salesmen are meeting with great success and the office is rapidly approaching the hundred per cent mark.

The tragic death of Frank Tooley, the first and original roadman for the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, was a shock to hundreds of exhibitors and others connected with the industry, who had become fast friends with Mr. Tooley during his eight years with the Bartola Company. Mr. Tooley was at Clinton, Iowa, supervising the installation of a Bartola at the Amuseau Theatre when invited to take a drive with Lisle Studer, an operator. During the ride, the machine went over an embankment and Mr. Tooley was crushed to death. Dan Barton immediately was notified and personally went to Clinton and took charge of arrangements for the funeral.

George H. Moore, manager of the Orpheum Theatre for Jones, Linick & Schaefer, has had added to his labors, the management of the Lyric Theatre, the all-night picture house next door to the Rialto. Mr. Moore does not mention anything about an increase in salary but we were told that that goes with the job.

The week of Sept. 11th will be "Dorothy Dalton Week" in scores of Chicago screen theatres. Exhibitors, tipped off by the exploitation department of Famous Players, are going to take advantage of the personal appearance of Miss Dalton with "Aphrodite" at the Auditorium Theatre. Tremendous publicity is being given Miss Dalton's appearance and the movie houses should reap a harvest from those who can't afford to pay $11 to see the screen star in person in "Aphrodite." Being a Chicago girl, Miss Dalton is extremely popular in Chicago.

Dolly Spurr is reported to have sold the theatres controlled by her at Marion, Indiana, to Frank Rembusch. The theatres which have changed hands are, the Indiana, Lyric, and Royal Grand.

Jake Cooper of the Twentieth Century Theatre, 3538 W. 12th Street, is a believer of courtesy and carries his belief into practice. According to the stories going around Jake noticed one of the striking musicians picketing his theatre seemed tired and brought out a chair which he placed on the curb and invited the picket to sit and rest himself. Jake then took the picket's banner declaring the theatre unfair, and paraded up and down while the striker rested. The height of politeness, we'd say.

Richard Robertson of Independent Films Association, was scheduled to return to Chicago this week after a short visit to Pinnacle Productions west coast studios and is bringing with him material and photographs that will be utilized in what promises to be one of the strongest advertising campaigns ever attempted for the exploitation of short subjects on the independent market.

Paramount has set a new record for itself in the matter of "loop" representation in Chicago. There now are five leading downtown theatres showing Paramount Pictures exclusively, according to announcement by Manager P. A. Bloch of the Chicago Famous Players-Lasky Corporation exchange. M. S. Russell, special salesman, also reports a number of important deals in the Chicago territory. Orchestra Hall, Randolph, Orpheum, Pastime, Bijou Dream, are the five exclusive Paramount strongholds.

R. H. Hadfield, owner of a string of houses in Minnesota and Wisconsin, has contracted to go with Superior Screen Service, as a special representative for sixty days and will visit the theatre owners in Superior Screen Service territory.

Manager Schwartz of the Hamilton Theatre, was married Saturday, August 30th, and has been spending his honeymoon at Mackinac Island. This is supposed to be a secret so don't say anything about it.

Harry Scholl, well known in Chicago moving picture circles, has been made manager of the New Mable Theatre.

D. W. Franklin, special representative for "The Confession," has left for California after spending several days in Chicago.

Exhibitors in the Chicago territory are making use of a snappy little exploitation novelty in connection with their booking of Enid Bennett in "Hairpins." Famous Players-Lasky exploitation department has gotten out, in cooperation with Sol. Goldberg, the "hairpin king," a novelty "plugger" to which is attached a hairpin. These are being gotten out as cheaply as a regular herald.

ADVANCE VIEWS OF COMING ATTRACTIONS

Live News From Producers

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

Knoblock Play Will Be Made in England

The first fruits of the recent negotiations between Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and a number of the foremost British authors and dramatists whereby the latter will write directly for the screen, will soon be forthcoming in the form of a screen play which has been written by Edward Knoblock and which will be produced at the Islington studios of Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd.

With the filming of "The Great Day", the first of the organization's productions, nearly completed, Director Hugh Ford is now directing much of his attention to preparation for the Knoblock play, and it is likely that it will be the second production to be made at Islington.

Attractive Titles for Chester Comedies

At the Chester studios in Los Angeles a great deal of stress is placed on titles for the comedies, a work that has apparently borne fruit in the success that has attended "Four Times Foiled" and "An Overall Hero." The third, "The Big Show," the current release, follows the same policy of giving the exhibitor something striking to use in his advertising.

"A Tray Full of Trouble" and "The One Best Pet" are now announced as the titles of the fourth and fifth of the series. The print of the former has been received in New York where it has been greeted with enthusiasm by Educational officials.

To Repeat Play's Success

Robertson-Cole Predicts Hit for Film Version of "So Long Letty"

"SO LONG LETTY," the Robertson-Cole super-special, produced by Al. Christie for early fall distribution, will win screen audiences everywhere, it is predicted, because it will wield the same attraction for both women and men as did the stage version of the story, which was made famous by its Oliver Morosco presentation.

Robertson-Cole are said to have received from exhibitors all over the country advance inquiries concerning the pictures, which indicates, says Robertson-Cole, a wide interest in "So Long Letty." But the distributing company is depending upon more than the fame of the stage version of the story to make the screen production a success. The human element in the play has been fully realized by Mr. Christie, and even improved upon, says the Robertson-Cole statement, which follows in part:

"So Long Letty is bound to get over strong because of the interest it holds for both sexes. To begin with there is a prominently stressed and whimsically developed love theme. This has to do with the married love of Letty Robbins and her husband, Tommy Robbins, and Gracie Miller and her husband, Harry Miller. What wedded couple, no matter how inseparable it may be, does not recognize the little ways in which husbands do not quite fit wives, and vice versa.

"So the theme of the man who loves good meals, and cannot get them because his wife is a very poor cook, and of the man who loves a woman who likes to dress and go, but cannot enjoy the white lights because his wife likes to stay at home, garbed in drab house dresses working in the kitchen, finds an instant and universal appeal."

Metro Picture's Premiere

"The Great Redeemer," Tourneur Picture, Wins Western Critics

"THE GREAT REDEEMER", the Maurice Tourneur super-special which is scheduled for release September 16 by Metro Pictures Corporation, had a pre-release showing that marked its world premiere at the handsome new California theatre, in Los Angeles, of a solid week beginning August 15.

That "The Great Redeemer" is a "masterpiece" and worthy to rank with the biggest productions ever made for the silversheet is a summing up of the critical verdict passed upon the picture by the reviewers of the Los Angeles dailies, according to Metro. The California made a spludge with it.

Press clippings forwarded from the west coast to New York reveal that the critics of Los Angeles were inspired to superlatives in their praise.

Second Neal Hart Picture Under Way

The special messenger, who was sent to Glendale, California, by Eddy Eckels of Independent Films Association, for the print of "Hell's Oasis," the first of the Neal Hart Pinnacle Productions, was scheduled to arrive in Chicago this week with the new picture. At the same time telegrams reported work under way on "Skyfire," the second Neal Hart feature, a story that is being heralded as being far beyond just "unusual," and reports also were received that the third Neal Hart feature will be a cattle yarn instead of a lumber story, as was first planned.

Expect New Record for "The White Moll"

Fox officials believe Pearl White will create a new record in bookings for "The White Moll" and succeeding pictures. "The White Moll" is said to be a clever crook story. It never lags in interest, and the star keeps in the thick of the action throughout—just as she used to keep in the midst of the action in her fast-moving serials.

Coast Directors Plan Soldiers' Benefit

Arrangements are being made by members of the Motion Picture Directors' Association for a benefit dinner dance to be given at the Alexandria Hotel in Los Angeles on the evening of September 16th, proceeds of which are to be used to furnish comforts to the wounded soldiers who are now at the Government Arrowhead Springs hospital.

Metro Features to Be Run Exclusively

Jacob Lourie of Boston, one of the best-known New England exhibitors, and Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, this week closed a contract which Metro regards as of the greatest importance. The contract provided that for one year beginning with September 1, Mr. Lourie will show Metro productions exclusively as the feature pictures at his three big first run houses in the Hub—the Beacon, the Modern and the Park.

Not only will Mr. Lourie exhibit no pictures but Metro's as the feature of his bills for a solid year, it is stated by Metro, but under the arrangement just completed with Metro, he will show the Metro productions in order simultaneously at each of his trio of theatres for runs of seven days, using three prints of the same picture.

Fox Directors to Have Offices in Studio

For the purpose of expediting work in the production department, William Fox has ordered the construction of a series of additional offices on the studio floor of his new building in West 55th street, New York.

These rooms will be for the exclusive use of directors, assistant directors, continuity and scenario writers, art and technical directors, and are so constructed that they will not decrease the floor area of the stage. This arrangement will separate the production department absolutely from all other departments.

Laemmle Bonus Goes to "The Secret Gift"

"The Secret Gift," a new Universal production, featuring Lee Kohlmar, Rudolph Christians and Gladys Walton is interesting on account of its being the photodrama which won the Carl Laemmle $1,000 bonus for containing the most human note and being the farthest removed from the ordinary screen drama of modern times.

This picture treats of just plain folks, the sort that everyone knows. The author is said to have taken a page from everyday life, peopled with homely and familiar faces.

Fox Star Back at Work After Accident

Buck Jones, the daredevil western star of William Fox, who was shot in the arm during the filming of "Sunset Sprague," a thrilling western tale of many stunts and much daring, has recovered, and is back to work on the Fox lot completing the final scenes of the production.

"Tiger's Coat" Based on Popular Book

It is interesting to note that "The Tiger's Coat," which Hodkinson will release in November, was taken from the novel of the same name by Elizabeth De Jeans, which also ran as a serial in the Pictorial Review.

Paramount Week Big Success

Biggest Sales-Event in Film History is the Claim

DURING the past week "paramount week" has been in full swing, and with somewhere between 5,500 and 6,000 motion picture theatres in the United States showing Paramount pictures every day during the entire period from September 5th to the 11th, inclusive, Famous Players-Lasky executives state that it has been not only the biggest sales-event in the history of the organization but the biggest that the industry has ever known.

"Our most optimistic expectations have been exceeded to a point which actually staggers our belief," said Al Lichtman, general manager of distribution, Tuesday. "Never before have we had such an exhibition of enthusiasm on the part of our sales organization, including everybody from General Sales Manager Kent, his assistants at the home office, district and branch managers down to every worker in the exchanges.

"And never before have we had such a demonstration of confidence in our product from the exhibitors of the country. I am sure that I voice the sentiment of Mr. Zukor and the other executives of the company as well as my own when I say that the distribution department, especially the sales, advertising and publicity and exploitation divisions, are deserving of the heartiest congratulations on the complete success achieved. Nor is the production department any less entitled to praise, for we realize that it is the quality of our pictures that formed the real foundation for the success of the week."

"The most amazing fact in connection with the event is that every available print in all the exchanges was booked solid for the entire week," says a statement issued from the home-office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. "So perfect was the operation of the system, however, that this was accomplished without confusion," continues the statement, "and the sales executives at the home-office realized early last week that the physical limits of the bookings had been reached.

"Had more prints been available, according to estimates of the branch managers, no fewer than 1,140 more theatres could have been booked for the week, some exchanges actually having to refuse requests for bookings. Efforts to obtain additional prints were unavailing, chiefly on account of the laboratory strike which held up the production of positive film for an extended period. Requests for additional prints had to be denied and the branch managers at Detroit, Chicago and Minneapolis each reported that they could have booked at least 200 more theatres. New York reported that it could have booked 100 more, Boston 30, New Haven 25, Buffalo 80, Philadelphia, 45, Cleveland 80, Denver 20, San Francisco 20, Atlanta 35, New Orleans 50, Dallas 30 and Oklahoma City 25.

"The latest reports on the number of bookngs and the sales receipts indicated no fewer than ten exchanges closely bunched in the lead in the struggle for first honors. So varying have been the conditions in the different offices, however, that an announcement of the actual leaders will not be forthcoming for another month."

Importance of the Short Subject

By W. E. Shallenberger, President of Arrow Film.

MORE attention will be paid to short subjects during the coming year than ever before. Conditions generally relating to the short subject are better than ever before, due to the fact that the exhibitors are now realizing the importance the short subject plays in their program.

In the past the single reel, or even the two-reel comedy has been looked upon too often as merely a filler. Exhibitors have contracted for fifty-two weeks of "short-stuff," regardless of the quality of the production and have taken anything that the distributor cared to hand out.

This condition, I am happy to say, is rapidly changing, and as an illustration one has only to cite the fact that exhibitors generally are selecting their short subjects with as much care as they do their features. A selective booking will be the rule during the coming year and the exhibitors will be as careful to secure a single reel or a two-reel subject that will complement their feature, as they will be of any other feature of their business.

The care and attention given to the selection and presentation of short subjects by the leading motion picture theatres throughout the country is an illustration of the desire by the trade in general to exercise more care in this respect than in the past.

We intend to devote special attention to short subjects during the coming year, and we anticipate a marked increase in the volume of business done on short subjects, as well as a decided improvement in the subjects themselves.

Permits Exhibitor to Name Own Price

As was recently stated, Educational submitted Chester Comedies to Manager Charles W. Picquet of the California Theatre, Pinehurst, N. C., with the privilege of making his own price after his audience had seen the picture. On the publication of the first story, the make-up man dropped a few lines off at the end with the result that the point of the story was lost. Consequently, Educational advises, in a more recent communication, that after asking the verdict of his patrons, Mr. Picquet signed a contract through the Atlanta Educational exchange at 66% more than he usually paid for two-reel comedies.

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

Governor Endorses Production

(1) Hon. Alfred E. Smith, Governor of New York; (2) Sydney S. Cohen, Pres. M. P. T. O. A.; (3) Richard Weil, Director of Publicity, W. W. Hodkinson Corp.; (4) Hewlings Mumper, Studio Manager Zane Grey Pictures; (5) Senator James Walker, of New York, and others

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that it will release "The U. P. Trail," a Benjamin B. Hampton production based on Zane Grey's novel of the same title. It was directed by Jack Conway, the man who directed "Riders of the Dawn" and "Dwelling Place of Light" which is shortly to be released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. A strong cast of players appears in this production, which includes Roy Stewart, Marguerite De La Motte, Kathlyn Williams, Robert McKim and C. B. Murphy.

It is interesting to note that a private showing of this great picture was held in the eastern ballroom of the Hotel Astor on the night of September 2nd, in honor of Governor Alfred Smith. A number of prominent men were the guests of Mr. Smith on this occasion, and the picture received a most enthusiastic reception. The Hodkinson office is in possession of a signed letter from the Governor which is quoted by the Hodkinson organization as follows:

"I have never seen a more thrilling picture nor one which pleased me more than did "The U. P. Trail." It is a big production in every sense of the word and seems to breathe the very atmosphere of pioneer days in America. I was particularly impressed by the excellent work done by the cast, and was agreeably surprised to find that the picture more than did justice to Mr. Grey's great book which I have read and re-read time and time again."

Numbered among Governor Smith's guests at the Astor were Senator James Walker, the man who has been foremost in the fight for Sunday motion pictures, Surrogate James Foley and Mrs. Foley, Adjutant-General Charles W. Berry, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Luther, Mrs. Smith, wife of the Governor, his daughter, Miss Emily Smith, Mr. W. Stephen Bush, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. F. Murphy and Richard Weil of the Hodkinson Corporation.

Senator Walker was loud in his praises of the picture and said that it pleased him more than any he had seen in a number of years. He gave it as his opinion that it was exactly the type of picture which the screen needed for greater advancement.

In a conversation with Mr. Weil, Mr. Walker said, "This is undoubtedly the greatest picture I have seen in a very long time. The swiftness of the action and the dramatic intensity of the entire production gave me any number of pleasurable thrills. I don't remember ever having seen a picture which pleased me more. I know what Mr. Hodkinson is striving to do, and I just want to say that if this is the type of production which he is going to release, he will most assuredly reach his goal. I want to thank you for one of the pleasantest evenings I have spent in some time."

Sidney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, was also present as an invited guest of Governor Smith's.

Beautiful Settings Are Feature of Fox Film

In marked contrast to Shirley Mason's new picture "Merely Mary Ann," which is to be released to exhibitors soon by Fox Film Corporation and in which the majority of scenes depict the interior of a cheap London boarding house, "Girl Of My Heart," the next Shirley Mason feature now being filmed under the direction of Edward J. LeSaint, will have its setting mostly in the outdoors.

To obtain these exteriors, Director LeSaint took his company to Big Bear, a small town on the border of the California Desert. For three days the company went far into the fastness of the desert, leaving their hotel, which is located on the peak of Big Bear Mountain, for the 50-mile trip. Fox reports that many views of the beautiful Bluff Lake territory were incorporated into the photoplay.

John E. Ince to Direct Metro Production

John E. Ince has been chosen to direct the Metro all-star production of "All Men Are Valiant," a newly purchased story written by Ben Ames Williams, the scenario for which was written by Edward Lowe, Jr. The filming of this picture will start at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood just as soon as Mr. Ince can select his cast.

This is the second story by Ben Ames Williams to be purchased by Metro. "Barber John's Boy," is the other. It is now being adapted for the screen by Waldemar Young of the Metro scenario department.

Two Stories Purchased by Universal

John C. Brownell, scenario chief of Universal, announces the purchase of two stories. They are "Fanny, Herself," a successful novel by Edna Ferber and "Tiger," by Max Brand. It is announced by the scenario department that "Fanny, Herself" will be a Universal-Jewel production with an all star cast. The leading star has not yet been chosen. It is announced that Frank Mayo will star in "Tiger."

Noted Writers With Goldwyn

Prominent Authors on Half-Year Program

THE list of authors contributing to the Goldwyn product for the first half of the season of 1920-1921 contains the names of very well known American and foreign novelists. Goldwyn will release sixty feature pictures the coming season in groups of about fifteen each. Prints of practically all of the first group are now in all twenty-two Goldwyn exchanges ready to be shown to the exhibitors. A number of them have had first run showings. The Goldwyn West Coast studios at Culver City are now hard at work filming the second set of releases.

The authors represented in the first series of Goldwyn 1920-1921 pictures are: Alexandre Bisson, French dramatist, whose play, "Madame X," has afforded Pauline Frederick her great screen role. The Goldwyn picturization of this drama was directed by Frank Lloyd. Gouverneur Morris, one of the most popular of American novelists, whose story of San Francisco's underworld, "The Penalty," was the literary sensation of its day, has been picturized for Goldwyn under the direction of Wallace Worsley.

Katherine Newlin Burt, selected Goldwyn to film her first great success, "The Branding Iron." It is a Reginald Barker production with an all-star cast. Basil King spent nearly a year with T. Hayes Hunter and the Goldwyn staff in making his master photodrama of life after death, "Earthbound."

Rex Beach, famous as a writer of tales of adventure in Alaska, is represented by a picturization of his novel, "The North Wind's Malice," directed by Paul Bern and Carl Harbaugh. George Ade contributed Jack Pickford's forthcoming stellar vehicle, "Just Out of College," and Mary Roberts Rinehart's story of life in a boys' "prep" school, "The Empire Builders," retitled for the films, "It's a Great Life," directed by E. Mason Hopper.

Arnold Bennett and Edward Knoblock are represented by a picturization of their highly successful play, "Milestones." It was directed by Paul Scardon and has an all-star cast, and Maximilian Foster has contributed the basis for a new Madge Kennedy starring vehicle in his story "The Trap." Ben Ames Williams furnished Jack Pickford with a well-fitting role in "The Man Who Had Everything." Augustin MacHugh and Winchell Smith are responsible for the original play, "Officer 666," made into a photoplay for Tom Moore. Garret Smith, a magazine writer, whose story of "Old Hutch Lives Up to It," has made one of Will Rogers' finest stellar vehicles under the title of "Honest Hutch." It was directed by Clarence G. Badger.

Pearl Lenore Curran, magazine writer, whose story of "Rosa Alvaro, Entrante," picturized under the title of "What Happened to Rosa," gives Mabel Normand one of her inimitable roles.

Robert Shannon, magazine writer, gave Madge Kennedy one of her most delightful roles in "The Girl With the Jazz Heart," directed by Lawrence Windom. Miss Kennedy will jazz her way into every heart in this picture.

Lina Cavalieri, the noted opera star, who is appearing in "Mad Love," a Victor Kremer production

Additions to Casts Are Announced by Metro

Among the recent cast asignments by Metro is that of Edward Connely to an important role in the screen version of Vicente Blasco Ibanez's "The Four Men of the Apocalypse." Metro also announces that Warburton Gamble will play the role of John Brand, the financier, in the picturization of Eugene Walter's drama, "Fine Feathers." Frederick Truesdell, who was originally cast for this part, will continue in the cast.

Four Hodkinson Films in Memphis Houses

Joe Bloom, the Hodkinson supervisor, during the course of his travels recently, found on passing through Memphis that four of the downtown houses were playing Hodkinson releases simultaneously. "The Silent Barrier" was the feature attraction at the Orpheum; at the Savoy, the "Sagebrusher" was being played; "Desert Gold" was on the program at the Princess; while "Number 99," the Kerrigan starring vehicle, held the feature place at another of the larger houses, states Hodkinson.

Karger to Make Five Specials

ANNOUNCEMENT is made this week by Metro Pictures Corporation that Maxwell Karger, the company's Director General in charge of production activities at the company's New York studios in West Sixty-first street, will devote his entire time for the ensuing year to the making of five Maxwell Karger special productions starring Bert Lytell. This means that Mr. Karger will be identified exclusively for the next twelvemonth with screen vehicles for Bert Lytell.

Metro's decision to confer upon Bert Lytell the exclusive supervisory services of Maxwell Karger and at the same time to give Mr. Karger the distinction of his own individual productions and a task befitting his acknowledged genius as a supervising director, was reached, announces the company, after the executives of the company had been apprised from many sources of Bert Lytell's ever-growing strength as a box-office attraction.

Bert Lytell's value as a drawing card is said to be the subject of innumerable communications to Metro from exhibitors all over the country. His recent work—beginning with his impersonation of Tito Lombardi, the male modiste in "Lombardi, Ltd.," the picturization of the Morosco stage success by Frederick and Fanny Hatton—has earned him the highest commendation not only of shrewd American showmen, but also the unstinted admiration and praise of critical reviewers of motion pictures.

Five Maxwell Karger pictures a year with Bert Lytell as the star instead of perhaps six or more, means that each production will require more than two months in the making, which insures the most careful and painstaking production. In addition, Metro has made a fastidious selection of stories for Mr. Lytell's use.

The first of the quintet of special plays for Bert Lytell for 1920-21, "The Misleading Lady," is already under way at Metro's New York studios. With Lucy Cotton as his leading woman, Mr. Lytell is surrounded by a distinguished supporting cast. To follow "The Misleading Lady" will be "A Message from Mars," by Richard Ganthoney, the stage play in which the English actor, Charles Hawtrey scored over a period of years in this country and abroad; and "The Prisoner of Zenda," Anthony Hope's romantic melodrama. The title of the fourth Lytell-Karger production has not yet been announced, but several notable stage plays are under consideration and from them a selection will be made.

Bert Lytell recently was called East by Metro to undertake his larger screen work under Mr. Karger's personal supervision. Star and director general had been in close association at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood for more than a year and between them had sprung up a strong bond of respect and admiration. Mr. Lytell, therefore, welcomed his transfer to New York, to continue his creative endeavors under Mr. Karger's guiding hand.

Maxwell Karger supervised the first of Bert Lytell's specials, "Lombardi, Ltd." made last fall in California, as well as the three that followed that production: "The Right of Way," from Sir Gilbert Parker's world-known novel; "Alias Jimmy Valentine," from the stage play by Paul Armstrong and "The Price of Redemption," from the novel of Anglo-Indian life by I. A. R. Wylie.

Abrams Makes Promotions

THE announcement made last week by Hiram Abrams that he had appointed Kenneth Hodkinson to the position of Executive Manager of United Artists Corporation, was the first of a series of promotions being made by Mr. Abrams in his executive staff.

Mr. Abrams has had his force in training with a larger organization ever in mind, and apparently the increasing business of "The Big Four" and the expansion ahead, make this the time for shifts in the staff to care for the growing affairs of the company.

William W. Hines as General Sales Manager, will have an enlarged field of activities. Mr. Hines has been in the theatrical and motion picture field for many years. Among his earlier associations were the publicity department of the Keith circuit, advance representation for the Frohman productions, and the ownership and active management of an Independent exchange. In more recent years Mr. Hines has held the post of General Sales Manager of several of the more important distributing companies, and he was associated with Mr. Abrams in that capacity before the days of United Artists Corporation. He is recognized as one of Mr. Abrams most valued assistants.

Paul N. Lazarus, who has been Advertising and Publicity Manager since the organization of "The Big Four," has been named for the position of Sales Promotion Manager. Mr. Lazarus is to continue in active supervision over the advertising and publicity work of the company, but this work is to be coordinated, under his direction, with active promotion work in the field, tying up the sales efforts of the various Branch Offices with the work of the Home Office Advertising and Publicity Department.

C. S. Trowbridge, who has been Sales Manager of United Artists Corporation's Philadelphia Branch since it was opened, and A. C. Berman, who has served as Sales Manager for Canada since the establishment of the organization, have both been called to the Home Office and have been appointed Assistant General Sales Managers, working out of the office of Mr. Hines on extensive field service. Both Mr. Trowbridge and Mr. Berman have achieved enviable records in their work for "The Big Four" and their promotion has been well earned.

For the past year, Charles E. Moyer has been associated with Mr. Lazarus in the Advertising and Publicity work of the company. He has now been appointed Publicity Manager, and will carry on the work of the department along the lines suggested by the creation of the Sales Promotion Department, under Mr. Lazarus' management.

"Centralization" Approved

A "Created" Not "Machine-Made" Picture if Director Is Supreme

CENTRALIZATION of control in the hands of the director and the resultant production of a "created" photoplay as contrasted with a "machine-made" picture were extolled in a recent speech of Benjamin A. Prager, president of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, delivered on the occasion of the celebration of Mayflower's second anniversary of its entrance into the picture industry. Mr. Prager said in part:

"The new idea with which Mayflower was imbued upon its organization two years ago consisted in the firm belief that photoplays should be 'created' and not 'made'; that the director should be given a free hand in choosing his story, selecting the cast and perfecting a complete art unit in action photography.

"I am glad to state, that the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, from the standpoint of financial return, standard of pictures and public response has been a gratifying venture.

The idea with which Mayflower was launched opened a new field in the production of films, contradictory to the operation of the large film corporations which maintain many separate departments each with a separate duty to perform.

"In the large corporations, the scenario department selects the story; the financial department sets a maximum figure on the cost; the costuming department makes the wardrobe according to its own idea of the requirements and so on down the line. Hence, five or six factors that contribute to the production place five or six different interpretations on the story and its spirit.

"A director who has no hand in picking the story, moulding the continuity, choosing the cast, designing the sets, etc., can have only a secondary interest in the work he is entrusted with. He may absorb the spirit of the story, but in most instances, he is restricted from conveying it to the other factotums, who generally work as an independent unit."

"The Broken Gate" to Be Hodkinson Release

Due to an error in the September 11th issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, "The Broken Gate," a Bessie Barriscale picture, was said to have been made for Robertson-Cole instead of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Many Queries to Fine Arts

New Service Bureau Brings Great Number of Inquiries Is Report

IN a statement just received from the offices of Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., further details are added to the recent announcement of that organization that it had established a new department to be devoted to the work of cutting and editing pictures for producing concerns in the industry and furnishing other kinds of picture service. Edward M. Roskam, according to the Fine Arts statement, is to have charge of the new bureau. The supplementary announcement just issued from Fine Arts' headquarters follows:

"Immediately following the announcements in the trade magazines that Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., had launched a new department, to be devoted to cutting and editing pictures for the trade replies were received from producers in all parts of the country.

"The number of successful pictures that have been handled by Edward M. Roskam, who will have charge of the cutting and editing bureau for Fine Arts, and his long experience in editing pictures for some of the biggest concerns in the industry is proving a powerful inducement to those who realize the necessity of 100 per cent editorial perfection in their productions.

"The announcement that Fine Arts will cover every production received completely by insurance is another factor which producers apparently are much in favor of. In addition to the fact that all producers are protected in this way, every print received for cutting and editing will be kept in an individual fire proof vault at all times when it is not being worked on.

"If a producer or an independent distributor desires his pictures cut and edited, if he wants a complete press and campaign book, or if he wants a complete advertising and exploitation campaign handled for his production, the new bureau will be in a position to handle the entire matter, including trade-magazine advertising and publicity, newspaper publicity, individual exploitation, newspaper-mat and cut-service and any other kind of campaign that the producer or distributor desires.

"For those who also desire the distribution of their product Fine Arts announces that an arrangement, which is bound to be satisfactorily to the producer, can be effected."

Metro Story Based on Fact

Theme of "The Great Redeemer" Founded on Real Prison Incident

MAURICE TOURNEUR'S screen production, "The Great Redeemer", which is to be released by Metro on September 16, tells a story that is so absorbing and thrilling that persons who behold it will inevitably conclude that it is all pure fancy—that it never could have happened in real life.

Such is, in fact, not the case. While "The Great Redeemer" was written by H. H. Van Loan and is in the main a work of the imagination, its central theme is taken direct from life. It embodies an incident that happened in a prison at San Bernardino, Cal., two years ago. A Mexican was serving fifteen years there for manslaughter. On the wall of his cell he painted a picture of the Crucifixion. It was a painting whose beauty attracted attention all over the state.

As a direct result of the influence of this painting the Mexican was granted a pardon by the Governor of the state and is now a professional artist, making a living in Los Angeles.

Mr. Van Loan, the author of "The Great Redeemer", struck up an acquaintance in Los Angeles with the pardoned Mexican, and from him obtained the story which he incorporated in his screen drama.

Inventory of Property Department Finished

A complete inventory of the property department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Eastern Studios has been completed after five months' work, under the supervision of Arthur V. Smith, general manager of the Eastern Studios. The hundreds of thousands of properties that have been collected by the department for the past eight years and have been occupying warerooms in New York, Brooklyn and the Fifty-sixth street studio, are now indexed, numbered and many of them photographed, and are being transferred to the new Long Island studio of the company which will be occupied within the next two weeks.

Frank Lawrence Shows Unique Comedy

Frank Lawrence, chief film editor at Universal City, gave some of the department heads at the studio a half hour treat the other day by showing them a unique two-reel picture. It was composed of scrap film cut out of a dozen different Universal features and comedies, and so cleverly assembled and titled that the result was a blood curdling melodrama with humorous relief. If released, claim those who were in the projection room, the two-reeler would prove one of the funniest comedies of the year.

Goldwyn Screens Work of Two Dramatists

An early Goldwyn release which it is believed will be of especial interest to exhibitors because of the popularity of its authors and because of its success on the stage is "Milestones." The filming of the photoplay was recently concluded at the Goldwyn Culver City studio and it will soon be released. The play was written by Arnold Bennett, one of the most popular of modern English novelists and playwrights, and by Edward Knoblock, erstwhile American dramatist who now makes his home in England.

Prologue Service Is Established

First National Will Prepare Prologues for Releases

FIRST NATIONAL announces that Carter De Haven is preparing an original script for a prologue which will be the first offered exhibitors by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., as a part of the press-sheet aids. The prologue which Mr. De Haven is preparing will be issued in connection with the release of "Twin Beds," produced by the De Haven Productions, starring Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven and distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Simplicity of dialogue so that no great thespian ability is required to put it over effectively, and inexpensive settings, so that the use of the prologue will not be prohibited to the small exhibitor because of the cost, will be the aim of Mr. De Haven, says the First National statement. The same policy, it is stated, will guide the preparation of the prologues that will be published in connection with the release of future productions, for the object of the establishment of this additional aid to exhibitors by Associated First National Pictures, according to Mr. Yearsley, is to give actual help to the owner of the smaller theatres in reaping the increased box office revenues on First National productions which are being realized by those exhibitors in the larger cities which are making use of this method of presentation.

Nothing has been announced as to the nature of the prologue which Mr. De Haven has devised. The fact, however, that it will be the first to be published under the new policy of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., in a pioneer division of exhibitor aides, lends color to the truth of the report that Mr. De Haven has originated a clever short act to make appreciation of the picturization of the great Broadway farce success much greater on the part of the audiences in the theatres where the prologues are used.

"I have been sincerely interested in the possibilities of prologues ever since I have been connected with motion pictures," said Mr. De Haven, "and for that reason I am highly appreciative of the opportunity which has been offered me by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., to prepare the first in a series of prologues which I feel certain are destined to blaze a trail toward greater profits for the exhibitor. Mr. Yearsley is absolutely right in his view that prologues are a valuable adjunct to the presentation of motion pictures. In the spoken drama the audience is prepared by the orchestra, the program and the other accessories of the legitimate stage for the play that is to be presented but in the motion picture house, the fact that there are usually two or three varied kinds of entertainment on the program makes a break before the feature showing an innovation which audiences will appreciate to the highest degree.

"The prologue in the motion picture house should take the place only of the opening lines which preface the real action of almost any spoken drama. They should be explanatory to some degree, but in toto an a preparation for the story which is to be unfolded on the screen. The dialogue can be simple, the acting amateur, and the settings inexpensive, without impairing the effectiveness of the prologue, and I feel certain that within a short time even the third and fourth run houses will be utilizing the service which Associated First National Pictures, Inc., has instituted.

"'Twin Beds' will be released by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., during October and Mr. De Haven declares that the prologue for it will be ready in plenty of time to be utilized by the first run houses."

Louis B. Mayer Arrives in East

Independent Condemns the Machine Methods in the Making of Motion Pictures

LOUIS B. MAYER, producer of Anita Stewart and Mildred Harris Chaplin productions, is back in New York after ten months of strenuous work in Los Angeles. Mr. Mayer was accompanied by his family and plans to remain here for five or six weeks.

He was full of enthusiasm regarding the production of pictures on the Coast and declared that he did not believe the time would ever come when Los Angeles would cease to be the motion picture production center of the country. He admitted that the vast improvement in artificial lighting had made it possible to turn out some splendid productions in the East but as far as his personal experience went, Los Angeles was the ideal place for him and he planned on getting back there just as soon as his business in the East would permit.

When asked his opinion on several of the questions that are considered vital to the industry today, among them question of producer ownership of theatres and the question of percentage, Mr. Mayer said: "I would rather not discuss those questions, because, while I certainly have decided opinions regarding them, I believe that as a producer I should confine myself strictly to the making of bigger and better productions and let the other fellow worry about how and where the picture will be presented after it is finished.

"To my mind the great trouble with the industry just now is a scarcity of really big productions; and the reason is not hard to find. The management of the big producing companies is gradually falling into the hands of men schooled in other lines of business. The stories of fabulous profits in motion picture producing attracted successful business men from many walks of life, in no way affiliated with entertainment. These men, it is true, are hard-headed business geniuses. I envy them for their money-making ability and efficiency in directing vast enterprises. But I feel certain that as long as they apply banking and industrial methods to picture-making, they cannot possibly succeed in any great measure.

"These men honestly believe that they can apply the methods of Henry Ford in the making of his automobiles to the making of motion pictures, and of course, they are wrong.

"It is extremely difficult for large producing concerns to turn out the best pictures. These concerns must make pictures on schedule. They must release a picture regardless of whether it is likely to meet with public approval. In other words, their productions may in a sense be called machine-made.

"With the independent producer this is not the case. His entire time, energy and attention is directed to the making of a single production. There is no schedule to meet and no time limit placed upon his work. He is able to try his finished product on the 'dog' as is the custom with legitimate productions. If defects are found, there is ample time to remedy them. And this is as it should and must be if pictures are to take rank artistically with legitimate attractions.

"The yardstick and square must give way to inspiration and genius. Inspiration springs only from independence of thought, and genius is but another word for hard work."

"White Moll" Breaking Chicago Records

Heralded by an advertising campaign in the Chicago newspapers, the William Fox special production, "The White Moll," has been making big attendance records at Moir's loop theatres in that city. With Pearl White as the star, and appearing in her first feature production, this picturization of Frank L. Packard's underworld story, according to William Dineen, general manager of the Moir Theatrical enterprises, has attracted the largest crowds these theatres ever have known.

By virtue of his work in each of the three episodes of "While New York Sleeps," the new Fox special, Harry Sothern has been placed under a long-term contract by William Fox. Mr. Sothern, who is a nephew of E. H. Sothern, will be called upon to enact juvenile and character parts in Fox productions. His work in "While New York Sleeps" was warmly praised by critics.

Paul Powell to Head London Film Unit

Further evidence of the increasing scope of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's production activities in England is given in the announcement by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president, that Paul Powell, who has directed a number of Paramount Pictures in Hollywood recently, will sail from New York, September 30, to head a third production unit in the company's new studio in London.

Levey Announces New Plan

"Pictures With a Purpose" to Be Made by New Harry Levey Company

Scene from "Uncle Sam of Freedom Ridge," the first release of Harry Levey Productions with William J. Corbett as "Uncle Sam" and George MacQuarrie as the Postmaster

HARRY LEVEY recently announced the formation of a new producing company, the Harry Levey Productions, to make eight dramatic feature photoplays a year. Now Mr. Levey supplements his initial statement with the announcement that each of these feature productions is to be what he describes as "a picture with a purpose." In a statement just issued Mr. Levey says that following the war the public sought in its picture entertainment the "lightest material possible in their amusement." Now we have entered on a new phase, according to Mr. Levey, and the public, tiring of the "inane, senseless, love story that forms the 'be-all' and 'end-all' of most so-called 'feature' photoplays," is looking for something "deeper" and for pictures "that will give them some message to carry away with them."

The first of the productions on the Levey program, "Uncle Sam of Freedom Ridge," based on the story by Margaret Prescott Montague, is described by Levey as just this type of "purpose picture." It is a story woven around the League of Nations and has already attracted considerable interest throughout the country. Concerning his later productions, Mr. Levey has the following to say:

"The dramatic possibilities of the story are intense. It will make a picture that moves swiftly, cogently, to a logical end—and it will make a picture that will entertain—and that will make people think.

"It is my purpose to produce eight such pictures a year. I am already completing arrangements for securing the film rights to stories with as wide and urgent an appeal as that of 'Uncle Sam of Freedom Ridge.'

"Another such release is to be 'The Forgotten Child'—one of a series of sketches on life by Tim Thrift, and part of a volume known as 'Tim Talks,' that has had wide circulation throughout the magazines of the country, and has been syndicated to many newspapers."

Pathe Pleased with Record

Features Overcame Hot Wheather Handicap, After Supreme Efforts

THE PATHE FEATURE DEPARTMENT announces that it has just made good under the most trying conditions to which an organization could be subjected.

With the beginning of summer, the Pathe feature brigade announced its intention of overcoming the customary weather handicap and returning a greater volume of business than was ever recorded in any other similar period of the entire organization. This meant a tremendous feat, for March, April, May and June of this year were the most successful months in Pathe's annals.

Yet when the returns for July were recorded, it was shown that a thirteen per cent increase in feature business over June had been made. This effort was almost superhuman, considering the severe summer.

Skinner Returns After Completing Work on "Kismet"

Otis Skinner has just returned from the West Coast where he acted the part of "Hajj," the beggar, which is the central role of the Robertson-Cole production of "Kismet" to be released during the fall. Mr. Skinner acted "Kismet" for three years in New York and many other leading American cities.

As a stage play "Kismet" was first presented on the stage of London with Oscar Ashe in the stellar role, and not long after it made its appearance in America with Otis Skinner playing the part of the beggar.

Elaborate Schedule of "Close Ups" Adopted

Something unique in "intimate" picture production is promised in Metro's picturization of "The Marriage of William Ashe", in which May Allison will be starred. Edward Sloman, directing the picture at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, is said to have worked out a schedule of "closeups" that is to bring the spectator as near the players as when listening to actors on the speaking stage. Not a scene will be enacted at a greater distance than ten feet from the camera, according to Metro.

Frank Smith Writes New Seitz Serial

Frank Leon Smith, chief scenario-writer of the George B. Seitz Company, has completed a new serial-play which is to be put in production soon. Scenes from "The Stealers," Robertson-Cole's super-special soon to be released

"The Stealers" Premiere Sept. 17

"THE STEALERS," the Robertson-Cole super-special, directed by William Christy Cabanne, which is scheduled for early fall release, is said to represent the realization of a director's master idea. Robertson-Cole claims that this screen drama is of wider appeal and more universal entertainment quality than anything which it has yet offered.

It is described as "truly a picture with a soul and is destined to hold all spellbound by the very power which has been inspired by its theme." "The Stealers" will have its premier showing in the grand ball room of the Hotel Astor on Friday, September 17.

Robertson-Cole has arranged this premier showing with the chief thought of calling the attention of the exhibitors' world to a production which they state represents the best example, up to this time, of the sort of picture which it desires to release. It believes that "The Stealers" will outdo the success of the most popular Robertson-Cole productions heretofore released, and will impress countless additional exhibitors with the earnestness of Robertson-Cole in its determination to obtain for release only the finest product.

Producers Expect Big Success for Cabanne Super-Special

The theme of "The Stealers," upon which Mr. Cabanne has been working for two years, was laid before Robertson-Cole officials late in the spring. They saw the possibilities of the story. So certain was Mr. Cabanne of his ground, and so well did he have this subject in hand, that the entire picture was perfectly visualized before it was started. Counting preliminaries and the period of cutting, four months were put on the picture, which was made entirely in the East.

"The Stealers" lays its action mong everyday people, and chooses a theme which is as broad as all humanity, and even more fascinating then the emotion of love which forms the basis of most pictures. There are, of course, love themes in it which inspire and entertain, but they are only secondary threads playing across the dominating background of the powerful major theme. Beyond playing skillfully with the emotions, which are the media of appeal in the so-called "heart appeal" pictures.

Like the stories which have to make up every big picture of the past, that of "The Stealers" is simple. It deals with elemental things of homely hearts. For the most part it is a picture of the open, startling by the realism with which everyday occurrences and subjects are handled. Elemental in its theme, by an artistic process of selection it chooses to lay itself close to nature and her workings, and some of the biggest scenes are those which show man in his eternal struggle with the physical elements.

"The Stealers" is clothed in the elaborate settings which are characteristic of Mr. Cabanne's work. In this production Mr. Cabanne has had the chance of producing a story bigger than anything on which he ever had worked previously, in fact a story which measures up to the most successful ones of the decade. Mr. Cabanne who is in point of directorial service one of the oldest in the industry has always been a man of vision and initiative from very early manhood, and his pictures have shown a definitely progressive and steadily improving quality.

Fox Line-Up for September

WILLIAM FOX presents for the month of September a list of releases well worthy of attention. Notable among them is the splendid special production "While New York Sleeps," which after playing two weeks at the Lyric theatre, New York, had its engagement extended indefinitely because of the tremendous crowds that laid seige to the theatre. Not only this, but the Astor theatre on Broadway also is presenting "While New York Sleeps," for an indefinite engagement.

Another special production scheduled for late September release is "Over the Hill to the Poorhouse," an adaptation from Will Carleton's poem, made by Paul H. Sloane. Harry Millarde, who made "The White Moll" with Pearl White as star, was entrusted with the megaphone. "Over the Hill to the Poorhouse," it is predicted by Fox, will sweep the country with its tremendous human appeal. Its great magnetic power rests upon the theme of mother-love.

Tom Mix, the dynamic cowboy star, will be seen in the popular Max Brand story "The Untamed," which played a most successful special engagement at the Capitol theatre, New York. Notable in the well-chosen cast is Pauline Starke.

Shirley Mason, will be seen in the pathetic role of a little boarding-house slavey in "Merely Mary Ann," a picture based on the stage success by Israel Zangwill and most deftly handled by Edward J. Le Saint, as director. George Walsh, again appears to thrill and delight, in a new Frank L. Packard story of the underworld entitled "From Now On." This is announced in a stirring tale based to a great extent upon the injustice and brutality in vogue in penal institutions.

Buck Jones, the firebrand cowboy star, appears in "Firebrand Trevison," a smashing thriller. Dainty Eilleen Percy offers her second pictures as a star under the Fox banner. It is a brilliant comedy of near-matrimony entitled "The Husband Hunter," and was adapted from the well-known Saturday Evening Post story "Myra Meets His Family," by F. Scott Fitzgerald.

"Farmyard Follies" is the breezy title of a Fox Sunshine Comedy for September which will present the regular Sunshine comedians and a flock of Sunshine Widows. "Bride 13," the first serial ever produced by William Fox—made with the active assistance of the United States Navy and including fifteen episodes of two reels each—will be released in September.

"Big Happiness" Is Shown

New York Critics Like Farnum in First Robertson-Cole Picture

NEWSPAPER motion picture critics who attended opening showings at the Broadway theatre, New York City, of "Big Happiness", the Robertson-Cole super-special, starring Dustin Farnum, are said to have backed up the promises which the distributors made their trade with regard to the quality of this production. "Big Happiness" the reviewers declared to be a worthy picture to start off Mr. Farnum in his new releasing arrangement with Robertson-Cole.

The points which the New York papers stressed in reviewing "Big Happiness" were the excellent acting of Mr. Farnum, and his strong supporting cast, which includes Kathryn Adams, Fred Malatesta and Joseph Dowling. Almost without exception, the reviewers pointed to the picture as a means whereby Mr. Farnum has climbed to new heights, and by which he has written himself larger than ever as a great emotional star.

At the time his first Robertson-Cole production is being seen in the first run houses, Mr. Farnum is in the mountains of California, getting started on his second of his new pictures. These are being made under a contract which calls for not more than four releases a year, assuring that each shall have the proper time and money devoted to its making to produce an attraction that shall meet the Robertson-Cole standard.

Canadian Exchanges Form

First Nation Starts System and Divides Dominion in Sections

THE establishment of its own exchanges and the division of the Dominion into two sections for the sufficient handling of its Canadian business marks an important forward step in the activities of Associated First National Pictures in that country, according to announcement by exhibitor officials of that organization this week.

Plans for meeting the business increment attendant upon the extension of Associated First National's franchise in Canada have been under consideration, it is said, for some weeks and have now crystallized out in the formation of two new units announced. These are registered as Associated First National Pictures Eastern Canada, Ltd. and Associated First National Pictures Western Canada, Ltd., respectively. The first named will handle the business of Ontario and Quebec, while the latter is planned to further independent exhibitor interests in the west with headquarters at Vancouver.

"ONCE (Just once) TO EVERY WOMAN"

Ray in New "Fight" Story

Star Has Purchased "Scrap Iron" for Filming from Chas. Van Loan

THE ARTHUR S. KANE PICTURES CORPORATION announces that Charles Ray is to be starred in another "prize-ring" story, entitled "Scrap Iron." The picture-rights of this story were purchased by the star from the author, Charles E. Van Loan. "Scrap Iron", it is understood, is to be among Mr. Ray's earliest productions. In this vehicle, as in all others in future, the star will be presented by Arthur S. Kane, and release will be through First National.

That the fighter's role is one in which Mr. Ray has showed his ability on repeated occasions is maintained in the following statement which has just been issued from the Arthur S. Kane offices in connection with Mr. Ray's new literary acquisition.

"Ever since the first appearance of 'The Egg Crate Wallop', many theatregoers have been demanding that Mr. Ray appear in another picture having a literal, as well as a figurative, punch. As Kid Burns in 'Forty-five Minutes From Broadway', in which he is now scoring what will probably prove his greatest triumph, Mr. Ray makes a few threatening passes and counsels Mrs. Purdy against 'leading with her right', but the Kid in the Cohan classic is a graduate of the ring rather than an active present day figure in it. Also, in 'Peaceful Valley', which will be the second of his releases, the star shows himself quite able to deal telling blows when the character he plays is called upon to show his mettle.

"'Scrap Iron' will give the young star an even better opportunity to display his fistic prowess than did 'The Egg Crate Wallop'. It is the story of a youngster who enters the ring to avenge the whipping of his older brother, and who makes a complete and artistic job of it, though not until after some fighting of the liveliest order."

Reisenfeld Books Comedies

Twenty-Four Christie Productions, Released via Educational, in Deal

DR. HUGO REISENFELD, managing director of the Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion theatres, New York, has just booked the entire year's product of two-reel Christie comedies from Educational Films Corporation. Twenty-four comedies are involved in the contract. This is the second series of comedies released by the Educational for which Dr. Reisenfeld has signed for the year's production, the other being the Chesters. He is also showing the Bruce Scenic Beautiful, and many of the Educational single reel specials. "The Big Show," the third Chester, is scheduled for an early showing.

Every one of the Christies handled by Educational and released to date has already been shown at the Rialto or Rivoli. A second record has been made in that two Christies, the first and second Educational releases, were shown at the Rialto on consecutive weeks. These were "Kiss Me Caroline," featuring Bobby Vernon, and "A Seaside Siren" with Fay Tincher.

"Out for the Night," featuring Eddie Barry, and "Seven Bald Pates," with Bobby Vernon, both have had their showings at the Rivoli, and the next release will be "Don't Blame the Stork," making the first appearance of Henry Gribbon, who was featured in Sennett comedies, as a Christie player. The cast also included Teddy Sampson and Helen Darling.

This will be followed by "Striking Models," said to be Fay Tincher's best comedy creation; "A Homespun Hero" which the Christies insist is funnier than "Pants and Petticoats" and featuring Bobby Vernon; "Shuffle and Queens" and "Going Through the Rye." Four other comedies have been completed at the Los Angeles studios and will be shipped in a short time to Educational's New York offices.

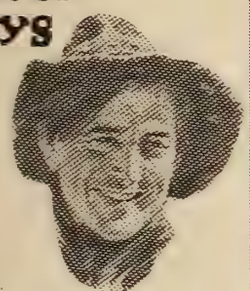
Realart Company Are Delayed in Havana

The red-tape of the customs-officers at Havana, Cuba, held up Constance Binney's company upon their arrival at the West Indies' port recently. The Realartists with Miss Binney and her director, William Roy Neill, were obliged to stay aboard their steamer in the harbor for a few days, says Realart, until the tangle was straightened out. The delay was occasioned by the failure of the filming party to come prepared with a permit from Uncle Sam's State Department to enter Cuban territory with a camera.

Realart also announces that Ward Crane, who appeared in "Soldiers of Fortune" and "The Luck of the Irish," under the Realart banner, will be the leading man in Miss Binney's forthcoming picture.



Jerome Beatty to Tour Western Exchanges

Jerome Beatty, director of publicity and advertising of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, will leave on Saturday, September 11, for a tour of the West that will include the Famous Players-Lasky studios in Los Angeles and the Western exchange cities. He will be accompanied by A. O. Dillenbeck of the Hanff-Metzger Advertising Agency. Conferences will be arranged with exchange managers and leading exhibitors to gather data to aid in planning Paramount's national advertising campaign for next year.

Pioneer Offers Its Financial Aid

Lefcourt Encourages Independent Star and Director

ONE of the most important announcements that has yet emanated from the headquarters of the Pioneer Film Corporation, was issued yesterday in the form of a statement signed by A. E. Lefcourt, president of the Pioneer.

The statement is directed not only to the independent producer but also to the director, star or author, who operates independently and who has not received just encouragement at the hands of the concerns in the industry, but who, now, are given a new opportunity as a result of the declared attitude of the Pioneer Film Corporation in a statement made by Mr. Lefcourt.

The individual star, whether legitimate or screen, the individual director or author contemplating entering the independent field who is seeking advice or financial assistance, will find the Pioneer willing to go into careful consideration of his proposition" is one statement made by Mr. Lefcourt, who goes on to say that the Pioneer Film Corporation offers to the independent American producer, an assured and profitable market for his productions.

Mr. Lefcourt continues "In the past, the greatest difficulties confronting the independent producer whether director, star or author was either the lack of an assured and profitable outlet for his product, or the lack of proper co-operation and financial support.

"The Pioneer Film Corporation and its organization of experts in every branch of the film industry is more than anxious to encourage these independent producers and their productions by every means of assistance, financially or otherwise, to develop to the fullest extent the great possibilities of the individual star, whether man or woman, the individual director or author".

Mr. Lefcourt points out further that the Pioneer Film Corporation has behind it a record of constant and consistent growth and that today, he claims, it stands as the largest and most successful independent motion picture distributing organization in the world.

"The coming season will be from all indications, the biggest in the history of the industry", Mr. Lefcourt's statement adds, "and the public demand is for big pictures, big in story, big in production and big in stars. The Pioneer is interested in big pictures. The Pioneer's plan of co-operation, exploitation and distribution is based upon the broad and square principle of 'live and let live'. Our hand is constantly on the pulse of public demand and we know exactly the type of picture that will find a profitable market. The Pioneer policy is one of co-operation with the independent producer, co-operation based upon expert technical skill and sound business procedure."

Mr. Lefcourt invites the independent producer who has finished pictures which he has not disposed of to communicate with the Pioneer. "We are ready to negotiate for such completed productions and wish to assure the producer regardless of the price which he places upon his pictures, that we will make satisfactory arrangements with him upon either an entire cash or co-operative basis."

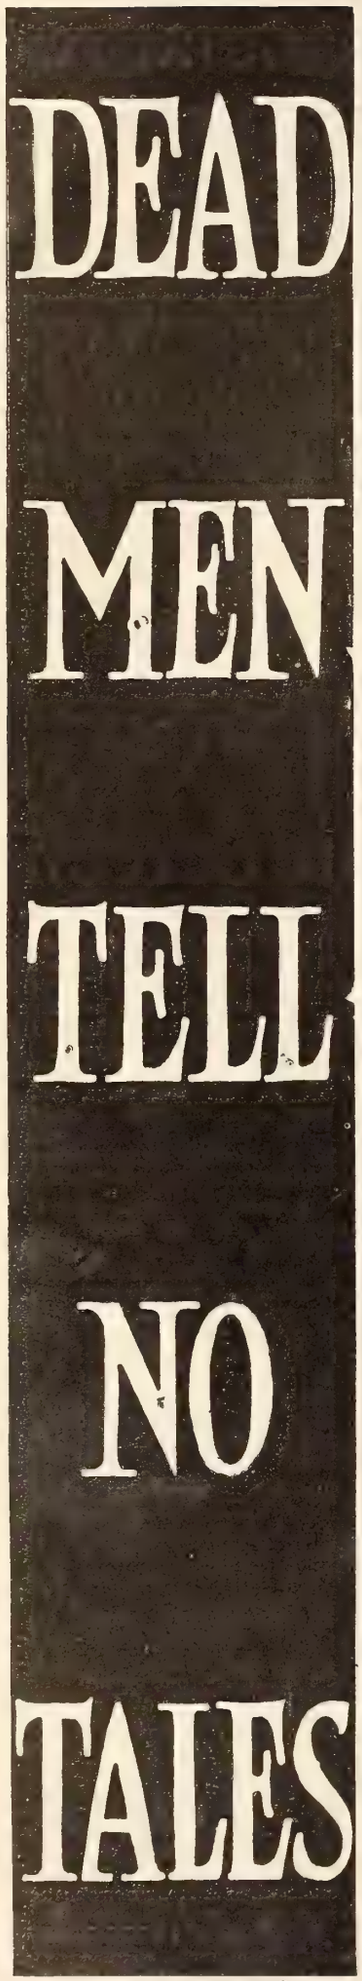
"The Vindication of the Screen"

By William L. Sherrill

I SHOULD imagine that no more cheering news could have come to the devotees of the motion pictures than the avalanche of encomium at the hands of the newspaper critics and the public that followed the presentation of D. W. Griffith's screen version of "Way Down East," and to the particular reference made to the work of Miss Lillian Gish.

The art of the motion picture has at last been vindicated by a comparison of that production with the dramatic powers, and artistic, as well as literary features of the spoken drama.

With the very many wonderful photo-plays that have come and gone within the past five years, the dramatic critics, although fulsome in their praise, here and there tempered their enthusiasm with a statement in effect that the motion picture yet lacked one essential of the drama which was always furnished by a legitimate production, namely, the power to convey the torture of the soul and the innermost workings of the brain, and that in the legitimate this was furnished by the voice of the actor. In the "Way Down East" production that which on the legitimate stage depended essentially for its effect upon the voice, we find, as transferred to the screen, a more sure delineation of mental torture and the finer gradation of emotion in the character of Anna Moore as portrayed by Miss Gish.



Here is a performance, the like of which has never been seen on stage or screen. Dramatic critics on the various daily papers in New York leave nothing to be said in praise of the work of this screen tragedienne. For the first time in the history of the motion pictures a critic employs language that places the screen on the same level with the legitimate stage, and the broad scope of both is embraced in the review. As one reviewer stated, "No finer bit of motion picture stage-craft has ever been seen."

Of course, the human voice, God's greatest gift, the proper use of which can bring forth every human emotion, has swayed the destinies of nations, has made and unmade men and empires, can never find a substitute; yet after all, the eyes are the index to the soul, and in that respect the motion picture camera can interpret the innermost feelings of a human being to greater certainty than even the voice.

In the performance of Miss Lillian Gish in "Way Down East" the audience forgets the absence of the voice. Never before in the history of any endeavor has it been said that the total elevation of that particular industry, whether an art or commercial endeavor, has been accomplished through the ability or exertion of any one or two individuals. In the work of David Wark Griffith as the director, and Lillian Gish, as the actress, all the petty prejudices and belittling opinions of the motion pictures as a dramatic art have been wiped away; and if nothing more were ever done by these two consummate artists, the history of the motion picture when it is written must contain a page recording the fact that in the production of "Way Down East" this combination once and for all, established the incomparable wonders of its art.

Tom Moore "goes out to arrest himself" in Goldwyn's production of the famous farce comedy, "Officer 666"

From Vitagraph's "The Purple Cipher," in which Earle Williams is starred

Action Role for Williams

"Purple Cipher" Rated as Best of Earle Williams' Recent Vehicles

"THE PURPLE CIPHER," which stars Earle Williams, is, in the opinion of Vitagraph, Mr. Williams's greatest picture of recent years with the possible exception of "The Fortune Hunter," which was designed to be a larger production. "The Purple Cipher" is described as a mystery melodrama with a surprise finish, and so well has the ending been worked out by Director Chester Bennett that even sophisticated exhibitors are compelled to admit that they were thrilled by the unusual twist to the plot," says the statement just issued by Vitagraph in connection with "The Purple Cipher."

Earle Williams shows to excellent advantage, it is stated, as the young American who defies the intrigue of an Oriental tong which threatens his life and that of his sweetheart after having proven its strength by the disappearance of two of his friends. How he frustrates the blackmailing operations of the mysterious band give a plot full of action and suspense, declares Vitagraph.

The locations for "The Purple Cipher" have been well chosen. They could be, because the exact places named by the author, Will F. Jenkins, were to be found along the Pacific coast from the shipyards of San Francisco to the naval station at San Diego. The submarine "H-4" of the Pacific fleet appears in the climax. "The Purple Cipher" is stated to be a drama of action throughout, exciting and thrilling. Its ending is believed to be one of the best worked out denouements the screen has seen.

Vola Vale appears opposite Earle Williams in the production. Allen Forest, H. A. Barrows and Ernest Shields have the important supporting parts. Chinese actors appear in the early scenes amid beautiful and picturesque Oriental settings.

Universal Announces Cast

Fine Support for Priscilla Dean in Browning's "Outside the Law"

ALTHOUGH Tod Browning primarily designed his original underworld drama, "Outside the Law," to star the talented Priscilla Dean, the majority of the supporting players are stars in their type or part, Universal announced. The Universal-Jewel feature is now in its third month of production. The complete cast of the story, which Lucien Hubbard, chief of the Universal scenario staff, has scenarized versal scenario staff, has scenariozed for Tod Browning, is now disciosed.

Mary Madden, alias Silky Moll, the spirited daughter and pal of a notorious reformed criminal, and the girl who seeks revenge on all society when her father is railroaded to prison by a Chinatown gangster, is of course played by Priscilla Dean. "Dapper Bill" Mallard, a lieutenant of the darkest forces of underworld evil, who falls in love with his beautiful partner in a daring jewel robbery and after disclosing the black scheme of double crossing planned for her, aids her to double cross the double crossers, is a part that has fallen to Wheeler Oakman, who was also Miss Dean's leading man in "The Virgin of Stamboul."

"Black Mike" Silva is played by Lon Chaney and the part of "Silent" Madden falls to the portion of Ralph Lewis.

Chang Lo, mysterious philosopher of the bazaars, is portrayed by E. A. Warren. Others in the cast are Stanley Goethals and Wilton Taylor.

Roland V. Lee to Direct Next Bosworth Film

J. Parker Read, Jr., producer of "His Own Law," the forthcoming stellar vehicle for Hobart Bosworth, to be released soon by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, has assigned Roland V. Lee, chief support of the star in "His Own Law" to direct the next Bosworth picture. As Jean Saval, the Frenchman, whom Mr. MacNier (the character played by Mr. Bosworth) met in a San Francisco drinking dive and with whom he became close friends after a strenuous, realistic fight, Mr. Lee is said to have a role almost as strong as that of the star in "His Own Law." Jean Calhoun plays the feminine lead.

Rollin Sturgeon Completes Feature

Rollin Sturgeon and his entire company, headed by Carmel Myers, have just returned from Santa Barbara, where the final scenes were filmed on the latest Universal feature, "The Gilded Dream." A day or two of retakes on one of the stages at Universal City will complete this production, which is expected to prove a fitting successor to Miss Myers' first vehicle, "In Folly's Trail."

"The Gilded Dream" was adapted by Doris Schroeder from a magazine story by Katherine Leiser Robbins.

Two Mae Murray Pictures in Demand

The demand for "Twin Pawns" and "The A. B. C. of Love", Mae Murray releases, have increased steadily, Pathe reports, and now are being booked at a ratio surpassing any period since their release. In "Twin Pawns", which was adapted from Wilkie Collins" famous novel, "The Woman in White", Miss Murray was supported by Warner Oland, the arch-villain of the screen, who is now being featured again in Pathe serials; J. W. Johnston, and Henry G. Sell.

The "The A. B. C. of Love" is a direct opposite to "Twin Pawns." While a dramatic romance, it was written in a much lighter vein, being generously spiced with comedy.

Gladys Walton, who is to be featured in the forthcoming Universal picture, "White Youth"

First National Denies Production Story

Reports that are current to the effect that Lionel Barrymore is to star in a production of "The Honorable Peter Sterling" from the Whitman Bennett studios, and that the picture is under way and will be released through Associated First National Pictures, Inc., are not founded in fact, according to a joint announcement from exhibitor officials of that body and Mr. Bennett.

With the exclusion of the story erroneously reported as being under production, the first four Bennett-Lionel Barrymore feature productions are specifically "The Master Mind" by Daniel G. Carter, "The Devil's Garden" by W. B. Maxwell, which two are now completed. Arnold Bennett's "The Great Adventure" and "Jim the Penman" by Sir Douglas Young are to follow. All four are picturizations of recognized stage successes.

"Humoresque" a Hit at London Showing

Newspaper and trade paper reports from London, according to Famous Players, indicate that "Humoresque," the Cosmopolitan production for Paramount, has scored an equally great hit on its first showing to the trade in London. London film circles, including the reviewers, declare "Humoresque" to be one of the greatest and most appealing pictures of the year, and predict for it a record-breaking success throughout Great Britain.

Stories of the success made by "Humoresque" during its long run in New York had reached London, and the initial trade showing was crowded by eager exhibitors and their friends.

Goldwyn Buys Comedy by Wm. Hurlbut

Another American playwright has been added to the list of authors contributing stories for picturization by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation in the person of William Hurlbut. The photoplay rights to a recent successful light comedy of his, "Made in Heaven," have been purchased by Goldwyn, and a contract has been entered into with Alfred E. Green to direct the film.

"Tex" Rickard Turns Exhibitor

Fight Promoter Will Run Babe Ruth Film at Madison Square

MADISON Square Garden, New York's most historic arena, which for years has been the scene of circuses, political meetings, prize fights and bicycle races, is going in for pictures, and no less a celebrity than "Tex" Rickard, the most famous of fight promoters, has turned into a motion picture exhibitor. Such is the announcement emanating from Mr. Rickard's headquarters in Madison Square Garden.

On September 19th, Babe Ruth, the home-run king of the New York Yankees, will open in "Headin' Home," at the Garden for a run of eight days, which will, if the box office warrants it, be turned into an indefinite run. The price paid by Mr. Rickard to H. H. Yudkin, general manager of the B. Y. S. Films, Inc., who own the rights for New York State and Northern New Jersey, was $35,000 for the eight days. For each additional day thereafter $2,000 will be paid by Mr. Rickard. Mr. Yudkin bought the feature production from Kessel and Bauman, who produced the picture, for a price that reached into six figures and is said to have never been equalled by any previous sale of New York rights in the State Right field.

"Tex" Rickard, whose name is as familiar to the average American as any of his illustrious predecessors in sporting fame, leased Madison Square Garden on August 1st of this year. Previous to this it was thought that the historic old structure would be torn down as a non-paying proposition. Mr. Rickard came forward with an announced policy of changing the circus and six-day-bike-race atmosphere of the arena and making it into a clean, first class showhouse. Since last summer the interior has been entirely redecorated. The finishing touches are now being put on and by the time "Headin' Home" is ready to have its world premiere, the Garden will have on an entirely different appearance. The picture will give the public their first chance to visit the Garden under "Tex" Rickard's management.

"We are going to give them their money's worth," said Mr. Rickard, in a recent interview. "There will positively be personal appearances at least four times by Babe Ruth, and also the entire Yankee team. In addition we plan to have film celebrities and other prominent people in sporting life, show themselves each evening. I have been busy trying to find out just how interested New York is in the king of home-rundom, and I now believe that he is going to draw the crowds and draw big."

The seating capacity of the Garden has been greatly reduced. Ordinarily, 20,000 could be accommodated in the massive structure. Under Mr. Rickard's plan, between eight and nine thousand will be seated at one time. This is in accordance with his plan of creating real theatre atmosphere for the Garden, and will also aid in artistic production. A forty-piece band will play during the performance, and on the opening night a second band will be stationed outside the Garden. There will be the usual program of short pictures in addition to the feature, and also a quartet singing the Babe Ruth numbers, several of which have been published recently. A large screen will be installed which will measure 27 by 36 feet. This is probably one of the largest ever used. It was necessary to build it inside the Garden because of its great size. Two Powers' projection machines will be used and this company also announces an innovation to afford a better view of the screen for the seats far on either side.

A large advertising campaign is also announced. One thousand twenty-four sheets are promised throughout New York city and its suburbs. In addition approximately $20,000 will be spent in newspaper advertising. "Doc" Landberger is associated with Mr. Yudkin in exploiting the picture during its run at the Garden. It will not be shown in any other city in the country until its run in New York is completed.

"Headin' Home" is a six-reel drama, and is said to contain unusual heart interest. It was directed by R. A. Walsh, with the special permission of Mayflower Pictures Corporation, according to the producers. The crack batsman is given opportunity to show his baseball prowess and some of his unexpectedly developed histrionic ability.

Wm. Fox Surprises New York

Special Production Fills Two Broadway Theatres

BECAUSE New York City and the entire metropolitan district including lower New York State, Brooklyn and Long Island, Staten Island and New Jersey have been pleased by the special presentation "While New York Sleeps," the 1920 Cinemelodrama at the Lyric theatre, William Fox, its producer, has been forced to take a step which, it is said, will go down in history as the first step of its kind in the annals of the theatre.

"While New York Sleeps," a Fox special production, was originally booked at the Lyric theatre, following the limited engagement of the William Farnum special "If I Were King." It was to remain at this theatre two weeks only, and was to be presented on the two-a-day plan —one matinee and one night performance.

The engagement now has been extended by arrangement between Fox Film Corporation and the Shuberts, and "While New York Sleeps" will remain at this theatre for an indefinite run. It is now playing on the continuous-performance scale at a dollar top price, from one to eleven o'clock.

The big step, however, is embodied in the announcement that "While New York Sleeps" has been booked at another Shubert house in the very heart of Broadway, the Astor, between 45th and 46th streets—only three blocks distant from the Lyric. These two standard Broadway playhouses will show "While New York Sleeps" at continuous performances simultaneously.

This never has been recorded with a stage play, and the interest created by the announcement has brought commendation from every section of the country to the big Fox building in West 55th Street, where the picture was staged by Charles J. Brabin and where the executive offices of Fox Film Corporation are located.

Another fact announced in connection with the opening at the second theatre showing this Fox special is that both houses will give continuous performances in order to accommodate the throngs which have been daily and nightly storming the Lyric. While this picture was being shown at the Lyric during its opening week, reports conveying the warmest praise were received in New York on the success achieved by the film in Los Angeles, where laymen and film folk alike were thrilled by the tenseness of the dramatic action and the novelty of the show as screen entertainment of a new and fascinating type.

It is believed in motion picture circles that the introduction of this new form of screen play will mark the beginning of a series of such films, as they lend themselves admirably to a continuance performance plan of entertainment, while figuring as film of the highest class and commanding the higher prices.

"While New York Sleeps," still playing New York City, has also been booked on a special plan arranged by the Fox organization, the details of which will be announced shortly. This plan is known to include the engagement of experts for exploitation in the big cities throughout the country.

"While New York Sleeps" is a play in three episodes, and is acted throughout by three principal players, each of whom has won high honors by reason of his or her work in each episode. The three artists are Estelle Taylor, Marc McDermott and Herry Sothern. In each of the episodes they portray distinctly different types of character.

"Sweet Lavender" Now Ready

IT is announced by Realart that "Sweet Lavender", a screen version of the stage classic by Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, starring Mary Miles Minter, is now available to exhibitors.

This will be the first Mary Miles Minter release to holders of the 1920-21 Realart Star Franchise. Company officials who have viewed the sample print in advance of its release are unanimous in praise of its splendid human interest touches and the gentle humor which pervades it.

Paul Powell who directed "Sweet Lavender", served his early apprenticeship under David Wark Griffith, wielding the megaphone for Lillian Gish, Dorothy Gish. Constance Talmadge, Mae Marsh, Bessie Love, and others. Recently he directed "Pollyanna" for Mary Pickford. For Famous Players-Lasky he made "All in a Night" with Ethel Clayton.

Beulah Marie Dix, who wrote the scenario, has a long list of successes to her credit. Included in this list are "Nan of Music Mountain", "Wild Youth", "The Squaw man", "The Woman Thou Gavest Me", and "Secret Service". Those were from the stories of other authors. Scenarios of the writer's own authorship include "The Ghost House", "The Hostage", "The Call of the East", "Hidden Pearls" and "Heart of Youth."

A notable cast of players was associated with Miss Minter in this production. Theodore Roberts, "the grand old man of the stage", is said to have one of his finest character roles in the part of Proman. His work will be remembered in such productions as "Judy of Rogue's Harbor" for Realart, "Male and Female", "Old Wives for New" and 'Something to Think About."

The role of Horace Weatherburn is played by Milton Sills. The part is considered a strong one and the actor, who has had a notable career as leading man on both stage and screen is reported to make a powerful impression. Among the screen successes in which he has been cast are "The Honor System", "The Womanest Thou Gavest Me" and "The Translation of a Savage."

One of the most tense scenes of "The Branding Iron," a forthcoming Goldwyn picture directed by Reginald Barker

Tom Moore in Fast Comedy

"Officer 666" Is Expected to Win Fresh Laurels for Goldwyn Star

ACCORDING to a statement issued from the Goldwyn home-office, Tom Moore is achieving marked success in his recent release, "Stop Thief," and his latest picture, titled "Officer 666," is due to win even greater popularity. And the principal factor responsible for Moore's success is his demonstration of Irish humor, which, according to Goldwyn, "registers just as powerfully as though he were aided by speech." "Officer 666" is just as funny, just as fast and unmistakably just as Irish as was "Stop Thief," continues the Goldwyn statement, which follows:

"In a few respects it is even a better starring vehicle for Mr. Moore than the previous picture because it gives him opportunity for a finer type of high comedy acting and for more variety of characterization and finesse. His impersonation of the Irish policeman ranks with the best things he has done, but is surpassed for acting ability by his Travers Gladwyn, the millionaire who returned secretly to his New York home to confront a famous picture thief who had plotted with his butler to steal his valuable paintings. The girl that he has fallen in love with is implicated with the thief whom she thinks is Gladwyn himself. The complications and resulting comedy are kept at a high pitch.

"The cast selected by Goldwyn to support Mr. Moore is really an all-star one though it is not billed as such. Jerome Patrick has the role of the picture thief, Raymond Hatton that of Gladwyn's closest friend, Hardee Kirkland, M. B. Flynn and Harry Dunkinson are seen as police officers. Jean Calhoun has the role of the girl implicated in the theft, Kate Lester that of her mother, and charming Priscilla Bonner that of her friend."

CARRYING on its policy of expansion of releasing and production activities, the large Jesse D. Hampton studios, on Santa Monica boulevard near Highland avenue, in Hollywood, were taken over this week by Special Pictures Corporation. Increase in the production activities of this rapidly growing young Los Angeles company are said to have made it necessary to acquire one of the biggest and best equipped motion picture plants in Southern California.

Hampton, it is said by Special Pictures Corporation, will do his producing at the new Robertson Cole studios, as the majority of his features have been released by that organization and the new policy of that company calls for the combining of their various producing units under the roof of one studio. The Jesse D. Hampton studios were built little less than a year ago, and no expense was spared to equip them with every mechanical facility for turning out perfect productions.

Starting several months ago with a portion of the Balboa studios at Long Beach, the company soon found it necessary to expand, and then practically took over the entire plant. This later became too small, and the Balshoffer studio on Gordon street, Hollywood, was secured. The heavy demand for Special Pictures product has made further expansion necessary, and this week papers were signed whereby Special takes the Hampton studios.

Special Pictures will soon have eight releases weekly in the field including the Comiclassic, featuring Charlotte Merriam in Reggie Morris productions; Comedyart; Sunset Burrud scenics; Clayplay animated mud comedies; and an eighth comedy release, which is at present being kept a secret.

Fox Active in Hollywood

Twelve Companies Busy in West; Director Edwards Makes Special

IN addition to the companies now at work in the Fox New York studios, Mr. Fox announces that twelve directors are busy on as many productions at the Hollywood studios—among them a special feature under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards which is yet unnamed. The technical directors are engaged in construction of sets for this production some covering an area as large as three city blocks, it is said.

Louise Lovely, the latest star to be added to the Fox list, is at work on the exteriors of her first release, "The Little Grey Mouse"—Director James P. Hogan's adaptation of Barbara Le Marr Deely's original story of the same name. Supporting Miss Lovely are Sam De Grasse, Rosemary Theby, Philo McCullough, Thomas Jefferson and others.

With George Marshall, a new Fox director, Tom Mix has started work at Hollywood on the interiors for "Prairie Flowers."

"Girl of my Heart," based on Frances Marion Mitchell's story and starring Shirley Mason, is nearing completion at Hollywood. Buck Jones is putting the finishing touches on his latest picture "Sunset Sprague," a fine "Western" by Clyde C. Westover, and "The Challenge of the Law" E. Lloyd Sheldon's story of the Canadian Northwest, directed by Scott Dunlap, is being made in the West with William Russell as its star. Eileen Percy, one of the new Fox stars, is also at work in Hollywood on a new production details of which are withheld.

"Money Mad" In Making

Famous French Designer Engaged for Film; Dorothy Dickson in Cast

GEORGE FITZMAURICE, whose production of "The Right to Love" is now enjoying a successful run at the Criterion theatre, has started work on "Money Mad", his fourth special production for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. This is an original story of New York life by Ouida Bergere, the talented wife of the director, who also wrote "Idols of Clay," the recently completed Fitzmaurice production, and was also responsible for the continuities of the other Fitzmaurice productions, "On With the Dance" and "The Right to Love."

It is in "Money Mad" that Paul Iribe, the foremost French designer of gowns, jewelry, furniture and interior decorations, makes his entrance into the motion picture field, working in conjunction with Mr. Fitzmaurice and Robert M. Hass, head of the art and decoration department, and it is expected that a number of original touches will be incorporated by him. It will also be the second picture in which the artistic touches of Penrhyn Stanlaws will be manifested, Mr. Stanlaws having started his motion picture career with Mr. Fitzmaurice in "Idols of Clay."

Presenting an all-star cast, this picture marks the screen debut of Dorothy Dickson, a dance favorite of New York, recently one of the featured players in "Lassie."

The remainder of the cast contains well known names. Robert Schable and Alma Tell, two performers whose work in "On With the Dance" evoked highest comment, have parts for which they are ideally placed. George Fawcett, the veteran screen favorite; Rod La Rocque, who has played opposite many stars; Reginald Denny, who just completed the role of leading man with Constance Binney in "39 East." Katherine Emmett and Helene Montrose are also in the cast.

Olga Printzlau Signs Five-Year Contract

Olga Printzlau, noted as a scenarioist of Paramount screen successes, has just signed a five-year contract with Famous Players-Lasky to write exclusively for William de Mille productions, according to announcement made from the office of Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the corporation.

Miss Printzlau joined Famous Players-Lasky three and a half years ago, and since that time has written the scenarios for "One More American," starring George Beban; "Believe Me, Xantippe," starring Wallace Reid; "Jack Straw," starring Robert Warwick; the Cecil B. DeMille production, "Why Change Your Wife?" of which she was co-author, and the three latest William DeMille productions, "The Prince Chap," "Conrad In Quest of His Youth," and "Midsummer Madness."

"Bud" Duncan Finishes Film for Reelcraft

"Bud" Duncan. the diminutive comedian of the former Ham and Bud comedy team, and now being featured in a series of one-reel comedies for the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation under the trade brand of "Bud and His Buddies," has completed his first picture. The title of the first release is "Spooky Spooks."

Christies Making New Record

Educational Reports Demand Still Exceeds Supply

ALTHOUGH their production of two-reel comedies has been more than trebled since the Christie Film Company ceased distribution through independent exchanges and began releasing through Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., demand for the product from the better theatres in all sections is said to be far greater than the output.

Educational is now releasing a two reel Christie every two weeks, and five companies are working on their production. Before finally signing the present distribution contracts President E. W. Hammons of Educational and Charles Christie agreed that every effort would be put on each production, new players added to the organization, the utmost spent in stories and no expense spared in production. Both parties are well satisfied with the results achieved, but they are agreed that there will be no increase in the amount of output, but still further stress on the quality.

When Educaional took over the Christie distribution several weeks were allowed to elapse before the new two-reelers were offered to exhibitors, so that all contracts expired when the Educational field men began their sales work. The report from these men was unanimous that every exhibitor who has shown the Christie two-reelers in the past was already fully "sold" on the idea and in most cases there was no hesitancy in signing the new contract, with the output trebled. Today, after three months' sales effort on the exchanges opened earliest and only brief work on others, it is reported that there are far more exhibitors showing the Christies than ever before.

All of the year's product will be shown at either the Rialto or Rivoli in New York and Educational reports that in each city through the country these pictures will be found at the better houses. For instance the series bookings include the Old South, Washington and Olympic in Boston; Moore's Rialto and Garden in Washington; the Stanley and other houses of the chain in Philadelphia; the Loew houses in Cleveland; Strand in Dayton; Colonial in Columbus; Valentine and Temple in Toledo; Walnut in Cincinnati; the Jones Lynick and Shaffer houses in Chicago; the Butterfield circuit through Michigan; the Circle in Indianapolis; the Liberty and the Regent in Pittsburgh; the Liberty in Terre Haute and the Finkel and Rubenstein houses in the Twin Cities.

A little further west A. H. Blank is displaying them prominently in all of his houses, including the Rialto and the Strand in Omaha; the Des Moines in Des Moines and the Princess in Sioux City. Stanley Chambers quickly signed a contract for them for his Palace, Wichita, a theatre which is generally regarded as demanding the highest quality in motion pictures. In Los Angeles all of the Christies are having their first run at the Kinema and in Northern California the Turner and Dahnken circuit is caring for them while they are booked over the whole Jensen and von Herberg chain in the Northwest.

In Canada Messrs. Jule and Jay J. Allen controlled the rights while the Christies were being handled in independent exchanges and they welcomed the opportunity to get the new and more frequent comedies for every one of their new houses which stretch across the Dominion.

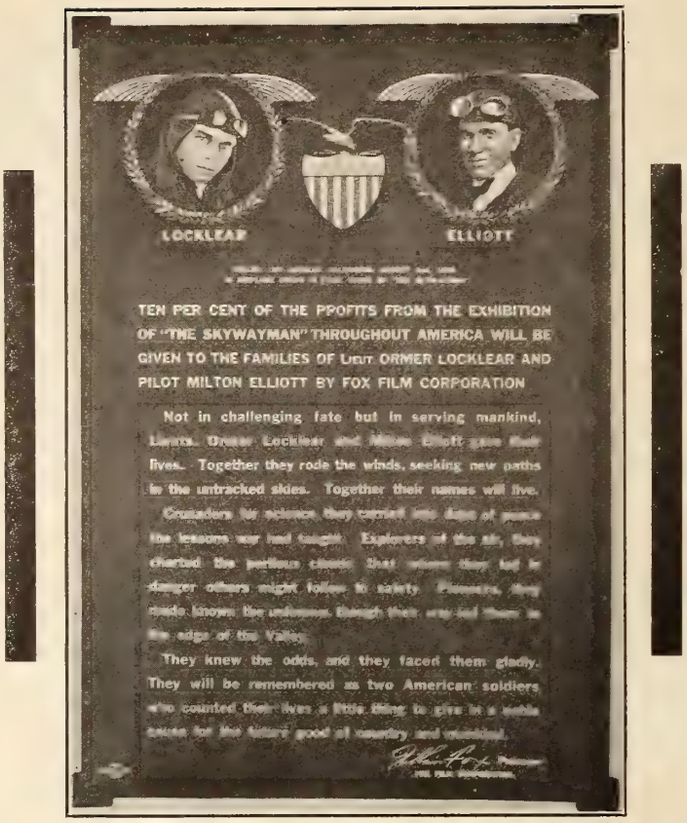
Bobby Vernon, Fay Tincher, Harry Gribbon and Eddie Barry are being featured in these comedies and though the claim of the "all star cast" is avoided in the advertising Educational points out that many of the supporting members of the company are equally well known, including such players as Vera Steadman, Helen Darling, Charlotte Merriam, Neal Burns, Teddy Sampson, Dorothy Devore and Laura La Plante. Colleen Moore, who was loaned to a feature company, will later appear in these comedies.

Awaits Public Verdict on "Milestones"

Paul Scardon, now engaged in editing the Emerson Hough story starring Bessie Barriscale and titled "The Broken Gate," is anxiously awaiting the verdict of the public on the subject he directed for Goldwyn from the successful play "Milestones." He feels confident that the reception tendered this will give it the distinction of being one of the biggest screen plays of the year. After his engagement in making "Milestones," Mr. Scardon directed Blanche Sweet in "Her Unwilling Husband" for Jesse D. Hampton, and this will shortly be released by Pathe.

Jack Hoxie Working on Large Cattle Ranch

One of the largest cattle ranches on the Pacific slope is being utilized by Jack Hoxie in his current serial "Thunderbolt Jack," according to word received by the Arrow Film Corporation, distributors of this production, from William LaPlante, general manager of the Berwilla Film Corporation, the producers. Jack Hoxie and the owner of the ranch loaned for the production of this serial were cowboys together years ago in Oklahoma, states Mr. LaPlante, sharing their small comforts and necessities during their long rides on the plains.



Frank Mayo Starts on New Jaccard Story

Production was started at Universal City this week on Jaccard's latest story, "The Throwback," in which Frank Mayo is being starred. The plot was originally conceived by Jaccard, with Mayo in his mind for the central figure. He prepared the scenario himself and is now directing the production. There are seven principal roles in the story, and for each of these the Universal casting department announces a player of marked ability.

Henry Clive to Draw for R. A. Walsh

Henry Clive has been engaged by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation to paint subjects for posters to be used in exploiting R. A. Walsh's second independent production. That Clive will be familiar with his subject and ambitious to secure exceptional effects is assured by the fact that he is playing a leading role in the Walsh offering which will be presented by Mayflower as a First National Attraction.

Special one-sheet available for exhibitor who will play the William Fox special feature, "The Skywayman"

Fox Claims Speed Record

Prints of "The Skywayman" Were Hurried to All Fox Exchanges

WILLIAM FOX has made a record-breaking job of getting out "The Skywayman," in which Lt. Ormer Locklear is starred. Prints of the production are now in all Fox exchanges ready for release. The bookings on this drama of life and thrills above the clouds have been very heavy, it is said, and each day sees an increase in the number of exhibitors who realize the possibilities of a picture by Locklear, aptly termed "a crusader in the conquest of the air."

William Fox has sent out to all exchanges a special one-sheet which he expects to see all exhibitors use. This one-sheet announces that the Fox Film Corporation will give ten per cent of the profits on "The Skywayman" throughout the country to the families of Lieut. Locklear and his pilot, Lt. Milton Elliott.

In addition to this special one-sheet Mr. Fox has issued posters that, it is claimed, will be a great aid to the exhibitor. The twenty-four sheet is a startling piece of paper with irresistible pulling power. There are also a fine six-sheet, two three-sheets and two one-sheets.

Paramount Opens Season

George Fitzmaurice Production and "Village Sleuth" Now Released

SEPTEMBER 5, which virtually marks the beginning of the new motion picture year, brings to the screen the first of the Paramount Fall productions, "The Right To Love," the second of George Fitzmaurice's specials featuring Mae Murray and David Powell, and Charles Ray in the Thomas H. Ince production, "A Village Sleuth."

The popularity of "The Right To Love," Famous Players-Lasky points out, is said to be a matter of daily record in the receipts of the Criterion theatre, New York, where the record-breaking attendance which marked the run of "Humoresque" is being duplicated. Moreover, the picture is also breaking records in many other pre-release houses in the larger cities of the country.

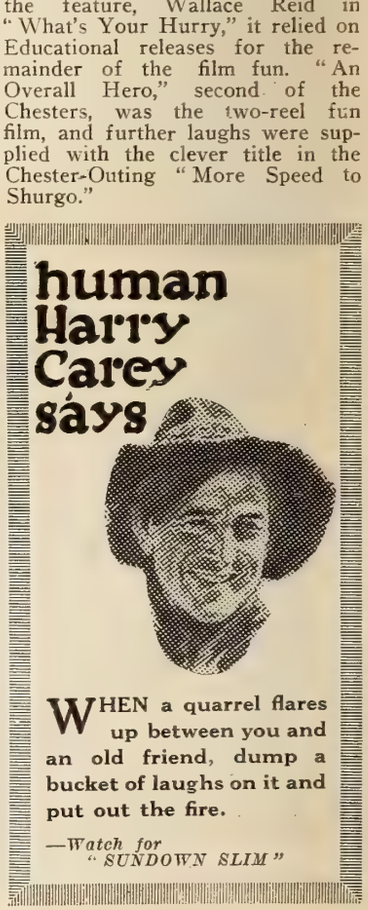
Ouida Bergere adapted "The Right To Love" from the French play, "The Man Who Killed," by Pierre Frondaie, who wrote the dramatization from Claude Farrere's novel of the same name.

Agnes Christine Johnston wrote "A Village Sleuth," the Charles Ray vehicle from the Ince Studio. Her last previous work was the continuity of "Homer Comes Home," also a Charles Ray Picture, and she also wrote "Alarm Clock Andy" for the same star and adapted "Twenty-three and a Half Hours Leave" for Douglas MacLean and Doris May. Jerome Storm was the director.

"Torchy" Comedies Are in Great Demand

Although late in getting started because they were the last of the four series of two-reel comedies released, Educational exchanges report that exhibitors all over the country are showing great enthusiasm over Torchy Comedies, made from the stories by Sewell Ford by Master Films and featuring Johnny Hines as the red-headed office boy.

In order to meet the demand in Philadelphia it was found necessary to show "Torchy Comes Through," second of the series, at two of the Mastbaum houses. S. Barrett McCormick, formerly of the Circle, Indianapolis, selected the first comedy to open his new theatre, the Rivoli, in Toledo, and has booked the entire series with the intention of featuring each one.



Boston wires the New York office that the South theatre has held the same picture over for the second week.

W. DeMille to Produce James Barrie Play

"What Every Woman Knows," Sir James M. Barrie's delightful play in which Maude Adams achieved one of the greatest successes of her stage career, will shortly be produced for the screen by William DeMille for Paramount, according to an announcement made in Hollywood Friday by Jesse L. Lasky. Olga Printzlau will write the scenario.

Newman of Kansas City Has a Comedy Week

The new million-dollar Newman house, Kansas City, has just successfully conducted a comedy week to unusual business. In addition to the feature, Wallace Reid in "What's Your Hurry," it relied on Educational releases for the remainder of the film fun. "An Overall Hero," second of the Chesters, was the two-reel fun film, and further laughs were supplied with the clever title in the Chester-Outing "More Speed to Shurgo."

The Prize in the sea of matrimony

She didn't advertise; she didn't want any shopworn or bargain-counter husband.

She wanted one with money.

She felt that widows have the inside track when it comes to landing a man, and that widows with a past lead the rest of the field by a city block.

So she became a rich widow (she with her roll of a single thousand) and hinted darkly as to the mystery in her life.

Can't you imagine the complications that would come to an innocent young thing like her?

Decision Is Delayed on Hart vs. Ince Case

Decision on the William S. Hart vs. Thomas H. Ince suit is not expected until the end of the present month, as the court, having the case in hand, has adjourned until that time. Claiming that $100,832 is due him under the terms of a contract dated June, 1917, Hart has filed suit for this amount. He says that he was to receive $1,000 a week salary and $4,000 a week on account of guaranteed dividends and bonuses. Hart also lays claim to one-half the profits of the corporation, asserting that the profits accruing to October 13, 1919, totalled $201,664.

Ince then filed a counter-claim declaring the profits did not exceed $131,014. He also asked that the contract be reformed in accordance with an alleged mutual mistake made at the time it was entered into.

Shortly after this, J. Parker Read, Jr., filed suit for $63,000 against the Great Western Productions, Inc., and Ince and Hart, owners of the company, claiming a commission due him for the making of the contract.

The Ince-Hart original suit was first brought to trial, but before the hearing had proceeded far it was decided by the court that the Read suit should be heard first. There was no verdict on this case, the court deciding there was not sufficient grounds for a case and so it was nonsuited. In the hearing of the cross-complaint brought by Ince, decision was given to Hart.

"Love Flower" Well Received

Excerpts from Press Reviews Give Film Liberal Praise

IN a statement just issued the United Artists Corporation submits a series of excerpts taken from reviews published in trade journals and New York dailies in connection with its latest D. W. Griffith release, "The Love Flower." The critics have passed most favorably on Mr. Griffith's newest production, and it was well-received by the Strand audiences during the week of August 22nd when it opened at that Broadway house. The reviewers' verdicts, as quoted by United Artists, follow:

Wid's expressed its opinion as follows:

"Few making a picture hold through the sheer beauty of characterization and scenic investiture, and in the coupling the two together, D. W. Griffith certainly has no superiors. There is a large audience ever ready and eager to appreciate the poetic beauty and realistic drama that Griffith imparts to his pictures. Before such audiences 'The Love Flower' will register to the fullness of all its rare beauty and charm."

"'The Love Flower' suggests Mr. Griffith in one of his happiest moods," says the Exhibitor's Trade Review. Following which the reviewer says "that it will prove one of the year's strongest box office attractions is a prediction based on careful consideration, and attention must be called to the fact that this photoplay is among the best of the Griffith pictures not strictly confined to the class of 'massive photoplays'. That it is a superfeature, no one will dispute."

The New York Review, in its criticism, said: "After seeing 'The Love Flower' at the Strand this week we once more understand why D. W. Griffith stands at the head of the directorial profession. It is not mainly because his pictures have the advantages of good stories and fine acting, but because they contain that more important characteristic — human touches."

The New York Tribune said: "Outdoes in point of art and photoplay 'style' the ordinary lot of films so markedly that it deserves the 'stand up and pack 'em in' patronage that it is receiving. It has the Griffith touch."

The Illustrated News said: "Two magnificent scenes are of fights under water, the heroine, looking like a lovely white ghost, pitting her strength and skill against the villain. . . . You should not miss 'The Love Flower.'"

The New York Evening Telegram said: "David Wark Griffith's magic touch is revealed again and again and again in his newest film, 'The Love Flower'."

The New York American said: "Surprise and action through the entire picture and frequent injection of that skilled ability to photograph in dramatic triteness the purr of a kitten or the dropping of tears, inseparable with the Griffith film."

The New York Sun and Herald said: "Is it surprising that after building up this suspense through a series of beautiful and dramatic views that the spectators broke into enthusiastic applause."

The New York Evening Mail said: "D. W. Griffith's latest picture, 'The Love Flower,' is entitled to a place among the superlative productions of the season. With the instinct of an artist he works his story into one grand thundering climax which abates the spectator's breath and keeps him on the edge of his seat."

New York Evening Sun said: "It is quite up to Mr. Griffith's high standard."

The New York World captioned its review with the following headline, "'The Love Flower' takes the lead of New Week's Collection of Film Plays."

Neilan Revival on Market

Exclusive Features Will Handle "Cycle of Fate" Starring Cody

THE EXCLUSIVE FEATURES INC., announce what they believe is going to be one of the sensations of the state rights field, "The Cycle of Fate," a feature directed by Marshall Neilan and starring none other than the inimitible Lew Cody. "The Cycle of Fate" is a revival and was made a few years ago.

It is seldom that two such attractions as a renowned star and a renowned director are to be seen in one production. Marshall Neilan is now known throughout filmdom as one of the master craftsmen of the art, and Cody, the great lovemaker of the screen, is fast rising to dizzy heights of popularity. He has now won his place among the first few favorites of the American picture fan, and his very name above a theatre door is said to be sufficient to draw a large number.

"The Cycle of Fate" also shows Cody in a society role—such as has won him his present prestige. But in addition to the elaborate sets and splendid society scenes, there is a strong element of adventure running through the five reels. The story shifts to the underworld of New York—the most romantic, entrancing and mystifying locale for a picture, as is shown by the many big successes whose stories have been laid in this idential place. A third appeal, almost as strong an attraction as the society and underworld scenes, are the thrilling sea scenes. These are done in an exceedingly realistic manner and, the company believes, are bound to create a sensation.

Darrow President of Coscardar Company

W. H. Darrow has been elected president of the recently organized Coscardar Productions, Inc., with offices at 160 West 45th Street. Jack Costello is vice-president of the new producing company, and Kenneth Carson, treasurer, both have been seen in numerous features of leading companies and will play prominent parts in the releases of their own company, which will include features, comedies and serials.

The plans of the Coscardar Productions, Inc., are not fully made as yet, but it is expected that their first production will be a serial to be made in New York and vicinity.

Larger Studio for the Talmadge Sisters

Joseph M. Schenck has leased the Oliver Film Studios, New York, which adjoins the Norma and Constance Talmadge Studios, for a term of three years, and is now having the walls adjoining the two buildings broken through, so as to enlarge the Talmadge Studios to more than twice the width of their present space. He is also having the dressing rooms of the old Talmadge quarters all torn out, and the entire balcony floor converted into a suite of offices for himself and his executives, with the exception of the Publicity Department, in charge of Beulah Livingstone, which is being moved to the Oliver Building. Repairs are now going along rapidly under the direction of Edward J. Mannix, studio manager for the Talmadges.

Took Six Months to Do Compson Feature

Although Betty Compson's plans as a star-producer provided for the making of four big pictures each year, or at the rate of one every three months, her first stellar vehicle, "Prisoners of Love," was not completed until six months after she accepted the story and began work on its production. "Prisoners of Love" is the first of the Betty Compson productions to be released through Goldwyn.

Dallas Exchange Is Opened

Associated First National Places Floyd Brockell at Head of Office

ASSOCIATED FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES announces the appointment of Floyd Brockell to the Dallas, Texas, exchange of that organization. The opening of the Dallas exchange is reported to be the result of a recent meeting at that city of a hundred or more exhibitors of Texas and adjoining states, at which a formal pledge of cooperation in the new franchise movement was given. The plan agreed upon at that time whereby the entire independent exhibitor body concerned was to choose its own leaders to head the organization and conduct its affairs, remains effective, states First National, with the Dallas office now constituting a local clearing house and a connecting medium between local exhibitor officials and the New York headquarters.

Associated First National Pictures' officials see in the establishment of the new Dallas office a material step towards the organization of independent exhibitor forces in this and adjacent territory against opposing interests alleged to be now in operation in those parts. This is the primary thought presented in the following statement, which has just been issued from the New York headquarters of Associated First National Pictures.

"The latest move thus forms another step in the movement for presenting a united aggressive front and for marshalling the full strength of the associated independent exhibitors, hitherto struggling individually, against the menace of absorption by monopolistic interests. Equipped with the requisite staff and material the Dallas centre will, it is said, not only serve the needs of the large influx of independent exhibitors who through the extension of the franchise of Associated First National acquire the attractions of the independent stars and producers released through that body, but it will further constitute a base of operations against the anti-independent forces in what is explicity recognized by independent theatre owners as a fight to a finish waged in defense of their inalienable right to the individual ownership of the theatres they operate."

Third Bessie Love Named

"Penny of Tophill Trail" to Be Released by Federated Exchanges

FOLLOWING out the plans announced some time ago by Federated that Bessie Love was to appear only in picture versions of famous novels Andrew J. Callaghan states that the third Bessie Love vehicle to be released will be "Penny of Tophill Trail" by Belle K. Maniates.

The first two of the series of four special productions that Miss Love is to make for Federated, under the Callaghan banner, are already completed and are entitled "Bonnie May" from the novel of same name by Louis Dodge which was published by Charles Scribners' Sons and "The Midlanders" by Charles Tenney Jackson, a Bobbs-Merrill publication.

Supplementing the announcement of the third picture for Bessie Love, is the information that Arthur Berthelet is to direct Miss Love in this production, which is to be made at her own studio at Hollywood. Mr. Berthelet has already left for California to take up work on the production. Mr. Callaghan has also left for the coast to superintend the start of the work of screening "Penny of Tophill Trail." He expects to be in California a few days, until the production is well under way, when he will return to New York.

Arthur Berthelet has a long list of successes to his credit, both before the camera and on the spoken stage.

Educational Gets Heavy Bookings in West

WITHOUT any incentive other than ordinary booking activities, various Educational exchanges have recently been showing rivalry in the number of competing theatres in the same city they could book for Educational product during the same week.

However, E. W. Hammons, president of the Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., announces that the record is being smashed this week by the Los Angeles branch with releases at five houses, and a total of eight pictures. The Los Angeles record is: California—"A Seaside Siren," a two-reel Christie comedy, featuring Fay Tincher; Grauman's theatre—"Foam Fantasies," a Chester Screenic, and "Old Buddha Maze," a Chester-Outing; Grauman's Rialto—"An Overall Hero," and a Chester—on its fourth week; Kinema—"Out for the Night," a Christie comedy, featuring Eddie Barry; "Wanderlust," a Bruce scenic; and the sporting special, "Babe Ruth—how he knocks his home runs"; Orpheum—"Babe Ruth—how he knocks his home runs."

Change Release of "Get Out and Get Under"

The release date of "Get Out and Get Under", the second of Harold Lloyd's new series of two-reel comedy specials for Pathe distribution, will now be released on September 26th. Originally the production was scheduled for issue on September 12th, but the care and detail necessary for best results in laboratory work, has made the postponement imperative, says Pathe. "Get Out and Get Under" follows "High and Dizzy" in the list of Lloyd releases, and will have a considerably greater number of first-run showings than any of its predecessors.

Print Shipped Across Continent by Plane

TO George Fitzmaurice's production, "The Right to Love," belongs the distinction of being the first motion picture to be sent across the American continent by aeroplane.

In order to fulfill a booking made by Herman Wobber, district representative of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in San Francisco, the home office of Famous Players sent a print of Mr. Fitzmaurice's latest Paramount production on the first flight of the transcontinental aero mail from Hazlehurst Field, Mineola, Long Island. The print was mailed Tuesday night from Garden City, L. I., and went out on the first planes that left Hazlehurst Field Wednesday morning at 5:30 o'clock on the first aero mail between New York and San Francisco.

To obviate any possibility of the picture being held up by an accident to one of the planes, prints were sent on each of the two planes which left Hazlehurst Field Wednesday morning.

According to the schedule as arranged by Postmaster General Burleson, the planes are due to arrive at the aviation field in San Francisco Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

Pathe's Strong Production List

Five Big Features to Be Released in October

THE strongest array of features ever assembled in one month's schedule by Pathe is listed for release during October. Some of America's greatest producers, including Jesse D. Hampton, Robert Brunton, Federal Photoplays, Inc., and Edward Jose for the Associated Exhibitors, are represented.

The release chart calls for the following notable dramatic issues:

October 3—Geraldine Farrar and and all star cast, including Montagu Love, Adele Blood, Madge Bellamy, William P. Carleton, Louis Stern and Frank Losee, in "The Riddle: Woman," the first Associated Exhibitors release. The screen drama which is an adaptation of the stage play by Carl Jacoby, served as a starring vehicle for two years for Mme. Bertha Kalich, one of the world's most famous dramatic stars. Edward Jose directed this picture which was lavishly produced and is expected to prove a dramatic sensation.

October 10—"Forbidden Valley," a J. Stuart Blackton production, Bruce Gordon, an English star, makes his American debut in this production, co-starring with May McAvoy, the beautiful heroine of Blackton's "My Husband's Other Wife" and "Man and His Woman." Warren Chandler, who also had big parts in each of the plays, William Dunn and Eulalie Jensen, favorites in other Blackton pictures, are also included in the cast.

October 17—"Half A Chance," a Jesse D. Hampton special production, and one of the finest pictures ever made in the Hampton studio. It was produced by Robert Thornby from the novel by Frederic Isham, and stars Mahlon Hamilton and Lillian Rich, with a strong cast. The play is the story of the life struggle of an ex-convict, who after years of effort, makes good. It is a vivid production of life, as it actually is lived.

October 24—"The Devil to Pay," a Robert Brunton production, the biggest feature this producer has made for distribution by Pathe. Mr. Brunton produced the Jack Dempsey serial, "Daredevil Jack" for Pathe, and is now producing "The Double Adventure," another Pathe serial starring Charles Hutchison. "The Devil to Pay" was adapted by Jack Cunningham from the novel by Frances Nimmo Greene, and was directed by Ernest Warde, a combination that cannot fail to assure any exhibitor of its excellence. The cast in the Brunton special, is particularly noteworthy, including as it does Roy Stewart, Robert McKim, Fritzie Brunette, George Fisher, Evelyn Selby, William Marion, and Richard Lapan.

October 21—The Federal Photoplays, Inc., of California, producers of some of the biggest photodramas of the last two years, makes its debut as a Pathe unit on this date, with the release of "The Money Changers." This play is adapted from the story by Upton Sinclair, undoubtedly one of the most widely read of American novelists. The adaptation was made by William H. Clifford, and the production directed by Jack Conway, who holds a particular niche in the hall of fame for directors. "The Money Changers" will be distinctive in the calibre of its cast, which is exceptionally large even for a play of its bigness. Among the prominent players are Claire Adams, Robert McKim, Roy Stewart, Audrey Chapman, George Webb, Betty Brice, Stanton Heck, Edward Peil, Harvey Clark, Harry Tennebrook, Zack Williams, George Hernandez, Gertrude Claire, and Laddie Earle.

Kelly Denies False Rumors

Initial Release of World to Be Up-to-Date and Live News Reel

JAMES B. KELLY, general manager of the World Motion Picture Company has made a denial of the reports which he states have been circulated to the effect that his company's initial release will be an industrial or advertising reel. It will, states Mr. Kelly, be an up-to-date and live news reel.

"Quite a few unkind remarks," says Mr. Kelly, "have been made regarding our initial product namely the World's News Pictures, one of them being to the effect that our two issues weekly would be Industrial and Advertising reels, and these reports seem to have been circulated with malicious intent, but I am sure that every fair-minded exhibitor will appreciate the situation and realize the reasons for which these insinuations were made.

"For the benefit of those who doubt, however, it affords me untold pleasure to be able to deny these allegations emphatically and state that The World's News Pictures will be straight news events, each issue to contain from twenty to twenty-five timely events taken in all parts of the U. S. and Europe by the greatest staff of correspondents in existence, and that they positively will not be industrial or advertising reels, for if they were you can rest assured that I would not be connected with this great Corporation.

"We have surrounded ourselves with the greatest staff of experts in the Moving Picture Industry today, and the names of these talented gentlemen who will be instrumental in manufacturing and assembling the greatest of news pictorials will be announced within a week's time."

Service Corps as Guide to Producers

The ambitious project of Hemmer Superior Productions, Inc., to determine wants of motion picture devotees in the way of desirable screen dramas through the establishment of a "Service Corps" has already borne fruit, according to Edward Hemmer, president and director. A drive upon Broadway motion picture houses was inaugurated last week by a flying squadron, composed of executives of the organization. Five leading theatres were visited and a report of the night's work has been submitted to Mr. Hemmer to guide him in the selection of his second production.

Certain houses were assigned to members of the corps. During the course of the picture, opinions of scores of persons attending the various performances were obtained. The work of the "Service Corps" members was largely in the nature of a survey. The real function of the body is to act as a barometer to register as accurately as possible the sentiment of the public.

"Truant Husband" Ready

Rockett to Show Terhune Story to Trade on Sept. 18 in New York

IT is the expectation of President R. R. Rockett of the Rockett Film Corporation that the company's first feature comedy drama "The Truant Husband" will be ready for showing in New York by the latter part of September. President Rockett will take the picture east and personally supervise its showing to the trade about September 18th.

The initial production of this new company, "The Truant Husband" is from the Alfred Payson Terhune story of the same name. The scenario is by Drumel Frederick Whitcomb and it was directed by Thomas N. Hefron. The company sought to make this an all-star cast production and the well known plays who appear in the film include Mahlon Hamilton, Betty Blythe, and Francelia Billington.

Rockett has been identified with the west coast film industry for the past five years. First he served as purchasing agent and later business manager of the Balboa Amusement Producing Co. at Long Beach for a period of three years. Following that work he served as purchasing agent for Universal City for two years or until he organized his own company in which he is associated with his brother, A. L. Rockett. The company has purchased a ten acre tract near Hollywood and are engaged in building their studio on this site. The first production was made on leased space at Universal City.

During the absence of President Rockett in New York, production activities will not cease as arrangements are now being completed for the filming of "Extravagance" from the book by Gertrude de S. Wentworth James, an English authoress.

A. J. Bimberg Re-enters Production Field

Bimberg, the producer of the Florence Reed pictures made during the past two years and the builder of the Times Square Studios on 44th Street near Eighth Avenue, is reported to have begun active preparations "for a series of big-cast, elaborately mounted modern dramas on vital subjects of timely interest, to be known as Bimberg Productions." There are to be four of these this coming year, each measuring from five to seven reels in length.

"My productions," says Mr. Bimberg in his first announcement, "are frankly planned as showman's pictures. Commercial appeal will be the first consideration in the selection of my subjects. Box office values shall determine my themes, casts and manner of treatment."

Mr. Bimberg promises that his pictures will be marked by taste that will insure their being run in the best houses and a moral tone that will make them welcome to family patronage.

Theodore A. Liebler, Jr., Broadway playwright and producer, has been engaged by Mr. Bimberg and is now supervisig the first continuity for the initial Bimberg production.

Apex Films Reopens Business

To Distribute "Out of the Dust" on State-Right Market

ANNOUNCEMENT has been received of the revival of the "Apex Films," which previous to the outbreak of the World War carried on a flourishing business in the state-right field. Owing to the fact that a great part of its output consisted in imported pictures, this company was obliged to close its doors at the outbreak of hostilities. Now, however, word comes from P. P. Craft and Leon J. Rubinstein, the leading factors in the reorganization of the old company, that they have determined to put the "Apex" sign back on the screen because they believe that the state-right field is just right for their venture. Offices have been established in the Regan Building at 140 West 42nd Street, New York City.

A statement issued from the Apex headquarters announcing its reentrance into the state-right field and setting forth its plans for the immediate future has just been received. This statement is submitted as follows:

"P. P. Craft, known as one of the best judges of merchandise in the market, has determined that the states right market is just right again for big productions, and for several months he has been planning to enter the field. It was only a question of getting the goods, however, for the man who gave the market 'Dante's Inferno,' 'East Lynne' and 'Sealed Orders,' was not going in for anything but the highest grade of offering. The acquisition of 'Out of the Dust' was the result of a search of the production field. John P. McCarthy, fresh from the D. W. Griffith forces, was ready to build or break a reputation on a single picture, and 'Out of the Dust,' his own story, was the selection. It took P. P. Craft only a second to realize that this picture was the ideal opening card for Apex to lay on the state-rights table, and things began to happen fast.

"Among the big exploitation features in connection with 'Out of the Dust' is an arrangement with Collier's Weekly, which gives Apex access to the original color-plates from which the art of Frederic Remington's brush has found its way into millions of homes. The show accessories to 'Out of the Dust' cover a wide range of letters, photos, window-cards, press-matter and unique playing suggestions. A song entitled 'Out of the Dust' will shortly be released by the most prominent music publishing concern in the country.

"The combination of Craft with Leon J. Rubinstein (Ruby) is the joining of hands of two pioneers in their fields. 'Ruby' is practically the originator of the motion picture trade journal, the first of which he edited about fifteen years ago. Later, as a producer with his own studio and as a publiciay and exploitation manager for some of the big concerns, he made a reputation for originality and efficiency in sales exploitation. His handling of the Anita Stewart introductory campaign as well as the drive on the Rothapfel Unit are two assignments demonstrative of his ability."

Regarding the method of handling the "Out of the Dust" picture, which John P. McCarthy has woven out of the Frederic Remington paintings, the announcement is made that "nobody will be quoted a price on any territory until after the screening." This, say Messrs. Craft and Rubinstein, "sums up the quality of 'Out of the Dust' and our confidence in it."

Gollos Buys Equity Franchise

To Distribute Equity Films in Illinois and Indiana

AN announcement has been received from the headquarters of the Equity Pictures Corporation to the effect that A. M. Gollos, an enterprising exchange man of the West, with offices in Chicago, is to have the Equity franchise for the states of Illinois and Indiana. Through a deal closed last week between A. Johnny Mack and Mr. Gollos, arrangements were made for the Gollos Enterprises to distribute the Equity pictures, beginning with "Whispering Devils," a Conway Tearle six-reel feature, and "She Played and Paid," starring Fanny Ward.

By the terms of the contract, there will be the closest co-operation between the national office and Equity's Chicago franchise-holder, and a similar unity of effort between both companies and the exhibitor. Plans are now being worked out in detail to make this three-cornered combination of distributor, exchange and exhibitor one of perfect harmony, it is stated, so that in the end every exhibitor will reap the maximum of profit out of Equity Pictures.

A statement issued from the New York office of the Equity Pictures Corporation in connection with this newly established combine is submitted in part as follows:

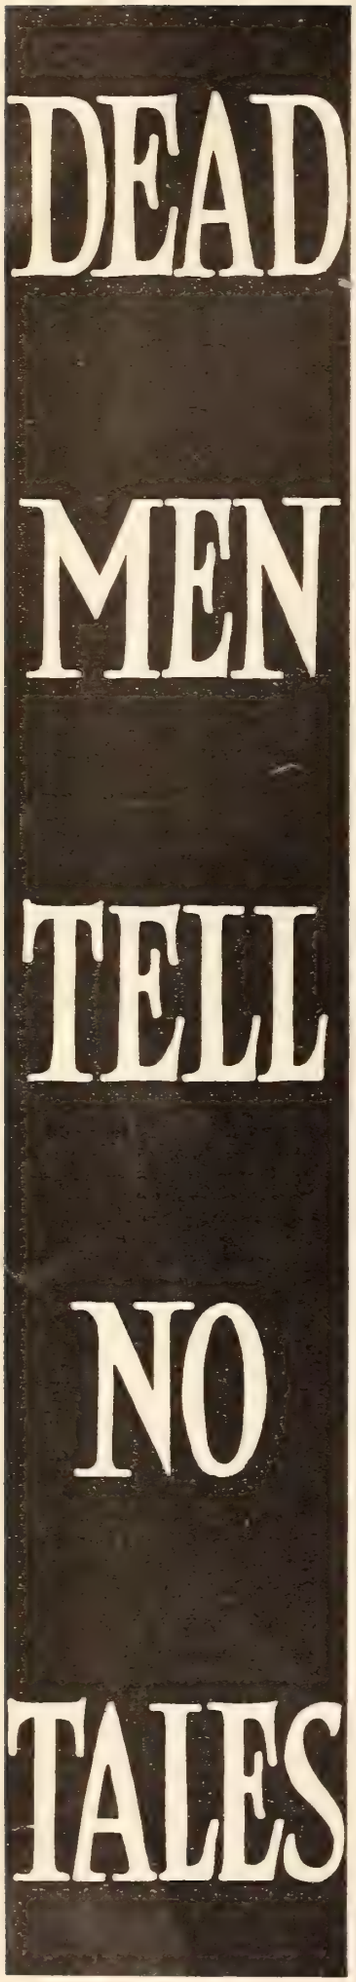
"Mr. Gollos was selected as Equity's franchise-holder because of his record-breaking success as a showman and distributor, covering fifteen years of business in several states. There are few exchange men who command greater confidence from the exhibitors in their territory, and few who have been instrumental in raising the standards of the industry and the profits of the exhibitors to the same extent.

"Gollos has been in the motion-picture industry since 1905, and in the course of a few years acquired a chain of theatres in Illinois that were known for their clean and public-spirited policy. He released his theatre interests some years ago to distribute a few choice features, his last production being 'The Birth of a Race,' with which he has had phenomenal success.

"Gollos, as everyone in Chicago knows, does not believe in half measures. At present he has twenty-eight men on the road working on one single picture, 'The Birth of a Race.' His idea of selling, which is responsible for his success, is that the sale of a picture to the exhibitor does not end with the signing of the contract, but includes advertising, exploitation and all other aids for the exhibitor.

"As a result of the Equity deal, Gollos has taken new offices, at 110 S. State St., and doubled his staff. Many of his salesmen are the best in the field—all of them with long careers of performance in the Middle West. The keynote of the new Equity branch in Chicago will be service to the exhibitor and not merely sales.

"In the course of the next month, the states of Illinois and Indiana will see the greatest advertising and publicity campaign ever launched on any pictures. Gollos, in accordance with the Equity principle of advertising a good thing when you have it, will 'paint the town' with Equity. An investment of money for advertising and publicity has been made which will 'show them' new lines of exploitation.



"To satisfy the demands of his exhibitors to the full, the Equity offices of Chicago have arranged to supply every showman with all accessories—paper, cuts, ideas, etc.—on the Equity pictures and to give personal attention to the success of Equity pictures in every house and territory."

Joan's Serial Said to Have Novel Thrills

Among the new thrills of "The Invisible Ray," now placed on the market by Joan Film Sale Co., is a leap from a speeding automobile to another about twelve feet in front of it, which Jack Sherill takes in the first episode. Another performance occurs in the eighth episode when Sherill dives from an aeroplane onto the deck of a passing train. The jump is said to be eighty feet.

Jack Sherill and Ruth Clifford are featured in "The Invisible Ray."

"Democracy" Closes Its Run

Closes Engagement at Casino; No Other New York Houses Available

"DEMOCRACY" terminated its New York engagement at the Casino Theatre on last Saturday night. Its managers report that the closing of the picture to New York audiences was brought about only because it was found impossible in view of immediate demands upon the Casino to extend the picture's stay at that house. It is also reported that efforts to secure another New York theatre for screening purposes proved futile because of previous bookings entered into by the houses that were consulted. The producers are well satisfied with the reception accorded to "Democracy" at its Casino showing and declare that the production has proved one of the most pretentious motion-picture offerings of recent years.

Commenting on the character of the story presented in this subject of "Democracy," the producers have the following to say:

"It is a stirring drama of to-day, pictured with people in all ranks of life. While it carries a wonderful appeal to every class and faction it is in no way a propaganda picture. There is no preachment or politics. It simply points the way, truthfully and wholesomely to happiness, contentment and life as it ought to be, —showing through the medium of an interesting story of love and intrigue the only logical way to allay the present unrest and the regrettable antagonism of conflicting factions. It shows how labor and capital can be brought together and a great social upheaval be averted. From a point of interest and the exploitation possibilities at this particular time the picture should be in great demand among exhibitors as well as being a great proposition as a road show."

Pinnacle Adds to Its Forces

Leo and Blanche White Will Be Featured; John West to Direct

LEO and Blanche White, the former famous through his work in the Charlie Chaplin comedies from the start of Chaplin's contract with Essanay until finish of his widely heralded agreement with Mutual, will be featured in Pinnacle Comedies, according to a bulletin which comes direct from the Pinnacle studio at Glendale, California, to Eddy Eckels, manager of Independent Films Association, Chicago, distributor of the comedies.

Another dispatch from the coast also brought great pleasure to Mr. Eckels. It was to the effect that John West, one of the best known directors of swift and successful comedies, has been signed up by Pinnacle Comedies, and will soon be busily engaged on the first comedy release, which will be ready for exhibitors about the first of November next.

Mr. Eckels declared that the addition of Leo and Blanche White and Mr. West to the Pinnacle payroll, assures a series of comedies full of snap and fun and of the very highest class as to stars and direction. Mr. West is as well known as a comedy director of the highest calibre in London, Paris and Berlin as on Broadway or State street, and will give his talents exclusively to Pinnacle Comedies. He is, too, as enthusiastic as any of the Pinnaclers over the new comedies.

The well known Al Martin has been engaged as assistant to Mr. West.

Backer States Method of Advertising Will Be Illustrated

IN a more detailed announcement from F. E. Backer, general sales manager of Jans Pictures, Inc., the extensive plans for the promotion and exploitation of the company's super-feature "Madonnas and Men," is given. Mr. Backer states that his organization will not only tell exhibitors how to advertise and exploit "Madonnas and Men" but will go much further by actually showing how it can be done to the best advantage. In other words, Mr. Backer states, exploitation men will be on the job for the first runs in the various cities and put over individual exploitation and publicity campaigns that will be worth watching by the exhibitors throughout the respective territories and which will, of course, very greatly help them by acquainting the general public with the nature of the picture and just why it is such an out of the ordinary photodrama.

It is the intention of the Jans organization, through Mr. Backer's plans, to put through a most painstaking campaign on what Jans considers to be one of the best box office attractions filmed during the past year. This campaign will be what might be termed a two-sided affair. First the independent exchanges will be helped in selling the picture to the exhibitor. The theatre manager will, in turn, be assisted in selling the picture to the public. In each instance publicity and advertising of absolute truthfulness will be used for in this case the picture is actually the kind that is rarely released and can best be advertised by telling just exactly what it is and how really lavishly and elaborately it has been produced.

"It is probably the first time that exchange man and exhibitor have been given such real help in exploiting a motion picture," said Mr. Backer, "and it is because my associates know that 'Madonnas and Men' is a picture that will make box office history if it is propery advertised, that we have given more than the usual thought and attention to the matter of publicity, advertising and exploitation material.

"By arranging for indefinite first runs in prominent theatres of all the key cities of the country the exhibitors can be shown the best way to go after the public and incidentally these first runs will also show the exhibitors what a fine attraction 'Madonnas and Men' is and thus it will also help the exchanges. Exploitation ideas explained in the elaborate campaign book on 'Madonnas and Men' and the specially written newspaper stories, will be used in the key city campaigns, thus illustrating how the material can be used by any and all exhibitors.

"Posters for 'Madonnas and Men' and illustrations for exhibitor advertising, has been done by Anthony Gablik who did the same sort of art work for 'Suds,' 'Broken Blossoms,' 'The Devil's Passkey' and 'The Love Flower.' The campaign book material will also be prepared by an expert in this line. Unusually attractive and elaborate lobby displays, enlargements of players and scenes, have been made up and everything in connection with 'Madonnas and Men' will be of the very highest grade."

Series of Dramas Offered

Six of "Copperhead" Stories Now Ready, Says Photo Products Export

PHOTO Products Export Company has placed on the state rights' market a series of twelve two-reel dramas, known as the "Copperhead" series, featuring stories which deal with the adventures of "Copperhead" Freeman, unjustly accused of killing a member of the Spicer family in feudal warfare. The action is laid in the mountainous country of the Carolinas where feuds still smoulder under the restraint of modern law and order.

The first six of this series, titled "Feudal Blood," "The Winning Hand," "Call of the Blood," "Law of the Mountain," "Blue Ridge Justice" and 'The Under Dog," are now ready for the state rights' buyers.

This series of two-reelers has been pronounced by the buyers who have already purchased territory, to be the best of their kind since the famous "Stingaree" series issued by the old Kalem Company several years ago. The "Copperhead" series is the first attempt, according to the producer, to give to the screen a series of two-reelers equalling in entertainment value the "Stingaree" series, one of the biggest money-making series ever released, according to actual returns.

Urban Prepares New Series

Has Abundant Material on Hand to Be Shaped Into Additional Series

NOW that Charles Urban's "Movie Chats" have been thoroughly established, Mr. Urban is getting in shape his second series of short-subjects for theatre distribution—the Kineto Review. When he has that going, he will prepare for the theatres his Science Series, and thus he will continue until he has all the material in his library in full circulation.

When Mr. Urban returned to America from England he brought with him more than 2,000,000 feet of negative, the fruit of a collection of more than 20 years of work, it is stated. The choicest studies of the world are stated to be in that collection. He has recently completed arrangements whereby he will receive a constant stream of pictures from Europe, and his agents in the rest of the world are constantly forwarding subjects adaptable for the Urban pictures.

America's big producers, states Kineto, are continually finding material from their purchases that they are not equipped to handle as well as Mr. Urban is, and they have established the practice of suggesting to him that he take it off their hands. Besides that he has his own agents in America; so in addition to his already great library he is continually receiving new pictures, the best of which are finding their way into the Urban Popular Classics.

One of the new series under plan is a series of the "Cities Beautiful," which will probably form a chapter of the Kineto Reviews. The Kineto Reviews already include unusual reels of this description, covering Manhattan, Paris, Rio di Janero, Buenos Aires and Constantinople.

Exchanges Views Differ

Questionnaire on "Mary's Attic" Shows Diverse Opinion in Field

ACCORDING to the answers to a questionnaire sent by the Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., to the independent exchanges handling "Up In Mary's Attic," distributors of this production are unanimous in declaring that the volume of advance bookings already exceed their greatest expectations.

In answer to the question "what single thing did you think was most instrumental in making the picture a success as a state rights offering" every exchangeman gave a different opinion.

One said that the national campaign by the Fine Arts Pictures has acquainted practically every exhibitor with "Up In Mary's Attic" and there is very little trouble in selling it to them. Another said that the name itself is a sufficient attraction to secure a big enough patronage for the ordinary exhibitor to pay for the picture. A third declared that the many exploitation angles and tie-ups have enabled the first runs on "Up In Mary's Attic" to be so big that every exhibitor in his territory has demanded a date for it. Another thought that the tie-ups on "Up In Mary's Attic" have such great possibilities that in booking this picture the exhibitor is to a great extent advertising his own house much more than in the case of any other feature.

The object of this questionnaire was to determine for the Fine Arts Pictures not only how the picture was going but also what kind of cooperation the independent exchanges wanted in putting over a production. All agreed that the continued advertising in the trade papers was a very great help by keeping the name and doings of the picture continually before the exhibitor.

ABOUT PLAYERS

THE leading female role in "Three Women Loved Him," the initial production of Cayuga Pictures Corporation, which is now being filmed, is being played by Virginia Lee. Born in Mexico City and a descendant of the F. F. V., Miss Lee came to the States at a very early age and while in her early 'teens made her picture debut. Her first production of consequence was "Beyond the Law," in which she was co-starred with Emmett Dalton of the famous Dalton band. Subsequently she has played with Louis Bennison in "Oh, Johnnie" and "Sandy Burke," with Alice Brady in "The Whirlpool," with George Walsh in "Luck and Pluck," with William Collier in "The Servant Question," with Norma Talmadge in "A Daughter of Two Worlds" and with Marjorie Rambeau in "The Fortune Teller." Recently, also, she was starred in the Burton King production entitled "Love or Money," which was adapted from the well-remembered stage success "The Road to Arcady."

In "Three Women Loved Him," Miss Lee plays a role which is a combination of the familiar characterizations that have become characteristic of Constance Talmadge and Gloria Swanson—it is the type of a beautiful but harmless "vamp."

Mildred Harris Chaplin, First National star, traveled to Toronto, Canada, to be the guest of honor at the opening of the new Pantages theatre. Upon her arrival she was met by a committee headed by the Mayor, escorted to City Hall and officially welcomed. All in the same day Mrs. Chaplin attended the National Canadian Exposition, a reception at the Hotel King Edward and luncheon at which she was the guest of the Mayor, and in the box reserved for the distinguished party she was accompanied by the Premier of the Dominion Government, the Mayor and Sir Thomas Lipton.

William H. Tooker will be seen in the support of Vera Gordon in her forthcoming starring vehicle, now in the making at Fort Lee. Mr. Tooker is not a new-comer to the screen, but is perhaps better known for his work upon the legitimate stage, which he adopted when the loss of his singing voice forced him to abandon light and grand opera. For three years he supported Fanny Davenport in repertoire and has played important roles in support of Blanche Walsh, John Mason, Emma Dunn, Lionel Barrymore. He was most recently seen on the screen in a Robertson-Cole release, "The Stealers," directed by Christy Cabanne.

Scene from the Lt. Ormer Locklear special feature, "The Skywayman," presented by William Fox

Edith Stockton will probably proceed with Plympton-Epic productions, the distribution of which is temporarily disarranged account of a change in release. However, Miss Stockton expects to continue with the picture in which she is to be featured, "Through the Storm." Meantime, awaiting developments Miss Stockton is busily improving her leisure time reading manuscripts for the purpose of selecting her next vehicle.

Matty Roubert, the Juvenile Star of the Reelcraft exclusive Short Subject program, and his producing organization are working at the Solax Studio in Fort Lee, New Jersey, on the third release of the "Romance of Youth" series now being distributed by the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation.

The title of the third picture is "At the Old Swimming Hole" and it was written especially for the young star. It concerns the life of a youngster who has been orphaned and adopted on three occasions until he bears the common name of Matty Jones Brown Smith. How his name comes to be changed to "Deerfielding" leads through a series of comedy situations and happening that have been lived by many grown-ups. The Old Swimming Hole furnishes the background for a most unusual unraveling of the plot, that culminates in a happy ending.

William I. Roubert and his associate Al Young who are producing the pictures are personally supervising the work, and have surrounded the juvenile, Matty, with a cast of capable film players.

Gladys Brockwell not only has not retired from films, but will reappear in an Edgar Lewis production, "The Sage Hen."

Miriam Battista and Bobbie Connelly, the two children whose work in "Humoresque" has attracted attention, will be seen in support of William Faversham in "The Sin That Was His."

In his next picture Douglas Fairbanks will have the support of Marguerite de la Motte, Robert McKim, Charles Mailes, Hamilton Revell, George Periolat, Claire McDowell and Tote du Crow.

Irene Boyle will be seen in the feminine leading role of "The Rider of the King Log" and has gone to Maine where exteriors will be filmed. We last heard of Irene Boyle as featured leading woman for George Walsh in "The Deadline."

Claire Whitney, who is playing the leading female role in Metro's forthcoming production of "Fine Feathers," has discovered a new set of film production critics who, she declares, constitute the most reliable barometer for the success of any particular scene in the production. While working on location at Staten Island, Miss Whitney's company was always watched by scores of children of various ages, who live in the vicinity, and after talking with a great number of them Miss Whitney decided that if they did not like any particular scene as it was made, it had better be retaken.

"Fine Feathers" is being directed by Fred Sittenham under the supervision of Maxwell Karger. Incidentally, Miss Whitney also played the leading woman's role in "Love, Honor and Obey," another Metro Production which has just been released.

Percy Marmont, who recently finished playing opposite Norma Talmadge in "The Branded Woman," which is at the New York Strand Theatre this week, has just commenced work on the forthcoming Hope Hampton production, the third to be turned out by this star's company.

After finishing "The Branded Woman," Marmont was engaged by Vitagraph to be co-featured with Catherine Calvert in the Tom Terriss production "Dead Men Tell No Tales," and because of the lavishness of this picture he was forced to work day and night during the last two weks to conclude his scenes in this production before he could commence with Miss Hampton.

The present production on which Ward Crane is engaged, and in which he is playing opposite Constance Binney for Realart, is tentatively titled "Calderon's Prisoner" and is being filmed in Havana and other cities in Cuba. Crane plays the role of a wealthy young South American, and during his first days on this production he was forced to apply a brown dye to his features to simulate the dark complexion of the South American. A week or ten days in Cuba, however, has enabled Crane to dispense with his make-up, since he already is as brown as the proverbial berry.

Before commencing his work with Miss Binney, Crane played opposite Billie Burke in "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson," adapted from the famous play by Clyde Fitch.

ABOUT DIRECTORS

CHET WITHEY, pioneer director with a long list of successful releases to his credit, will next devote his heralded abilities to the direction of Constance Talmadge. At present the schedule calls for two features in which Miss Talmadge will star and which will also be identified as "Chet Withey Productions."

Mr. Withey, who does not crave to talk about himself, was more or

The American Director in England

IT occurred to us that Edmund Goulding, who recently returned from England, would be able to recite a few things which would be interesting to the American producer and director, especially those contemplating activities abroad. We arrived at this conclusion because in the first instance Mr. Goulding is a Britisher, by birth, and a director as well as being among the most favorably known scenario and continuity writers in America.

Therefore, we "bearded the lion in his den." But he proved to be only a "motion-picture lion," very docile and what he termed himself a "sort of school boy in the game." But remember! Even Noah Webster and Benjamin Franklin were once school boys!

Mr. Goulding "plunged" at once into reminiscence of—not so very long ago, in fact, so recently that it seems indented upon his memory—that of his most recent trip to England and his hurried return which was occasioned by a cable from his manager, Edward Small who insisted that he return by first steamer and all because it was Edmund Goulding who must write the scenario, in continuity form, for the screen version of "The Devil!"

With the words of the title, unspoken, hovering about his lips, Mr. Goulding set them aside for a "flash back" while he kissed his mother and sister "good bye"—almost before they had realized that he was "home."

To get down to facts, however: It was soon apparent although Mr. Goulding had been in England only ten days that he had, in the vernacular, "got an eye full."

"The first thing I think the American director may look out for," volunteered Mr. Goulding, "is the growing doubt in the minds of the British producer as to whether an American director is any better than their own. This was brought about by the fact that Mr. Britisher's game over here insofar as to attempt to purchase American implements of production equipment (and I suppose the director is a part of that equipment) was beyond his expectations. He found available directors, good, bad and indifferent—plenty to pick from—BUT Mr. Britisher carried a small purse. He soon felt like a Harlem landlady in Tiffany's 'They all look so lovely, mother, but we can't afford them—so let's go to a cheaper shop' and with all due respect to American supremacy, there is, very definitely, a 'cheaper shop.'

"So the Americans who have graced England with their presence up to the time being, have been the kind who have obtained the great result that one cannot sell a British film in America, yet."

"These gentlemen, unfortunately in a desire to impress all and sundry by their importance, apparently adopted the temperamentalism and eccentricities of some of our greatest in America, without the ability to 'back it up with the goods' with the result that when poor Mr. British producer who had paid the large sum of three-hundred-fifty dollars a week to what he thought was a great American director, found that the great American director he had employed could not make him film good enough to sell in America, he began to wonder if American directors could direct or whether Edison had invented a secret potion which was injected, privately, into these individuals in the American studio, which made the very salable American picture!

"So, I would not advise any director to go to England now unless he is perfectly sure and can point to a definite association with a representative company as well as to a 'string' of successful pictures. They are not taking any chances 'over there' with a man simply because he is an American. They might have done so a year ago—but unless one has done well here—don't try it over there.

"Another thing. It is not because the Englishman is 'slow.' We are learning that he is not, despite the fact that he may seem to be—but he has that paramount characteristic now, that is impeding his progress in pictures. He is going through the same phase that American production went through about five years ago before some of the giant brains now engaged in the industry, had taken it up seriously.

"Primarily the fault is the absence of studio organization. Most of the directors that are doing anything are the owners. They cannot direct but they keep on trying to because they are afraid to trust their pounds, shillings and pence to anyone else. They think that a cameraman ought to be very happy on fifty dollars a week. They think that a young man knocking about the scenario department for perhaps fifty dollars a week should be perfectly capable of writing suitable script. They use what are little more than cupboards for studios."

Mr. Goulding said a great many more interesting things, which shortage of paper prohibits "jotting down" for readers of this department, but in conclusion let us quote him in saying:

"What they (meaning English producers) need more than anything else is to realize, as our own big men have realized, that while of course there are instances which contradict us, that to make consistently salable pictures, there must be an institution, and a cooperation between departments of an organization."

Mr. Goulding, who was serious in paying the Selznick organization great tribute as having given him what he called his first "glimpse into the business" and in commenting upon Donald Crisp being headed for England, he said:

"Mr. Crisp is fortunate in going to one of the best equipped and best organized studios in the world. Through the efforts and organization abilities of Messrs. Lasky and Hoffman, they have, admittedly, put over one of the greatest things from a British point of view, ever attempted. The respect and admiration which some of the biggest people have for the executive genius and tact of the Famous-Players advance corps, has firmly established them in England as people to be patterned after. Even those who were first so diametrically opposed to a Famous-Players invasion, are coming around to the belief that the organization's foreign activities are conducted upon a foundation of honest purpose, which will reflect to the advancement of the motion picture industry in England. With an organized unit to receive him, Mr. Crisp is facing an entirely different situation than the director who simply 'goes to England to direct,' despite the fact that he may have his troubles, too. What we need is missionary work—what is needed is to 'show them' why we pay competent people the kind of money which will buy competent service."

less reticent regarding his plans. However, he had a few things to say about the respect he believed should be paid meritorious feature productions.

"If an exhibitor would advertise that his feature would go on at a certain time," said Mr. Withey, "the public would soon learn to conform to this rule. The New York picture houses do not seat an audience when a singer or musician is on the stage. Is it not of equal importance that during the run of the feature picture which forms the principal part of the program, nothing should distract the attention of the audience from the photoplay?

"Another common evil in the industry is the practice among the bigger exhibitors of cutting pictures so as to conform to their programs. When this is done, it usually follows that the thread, the dramatic quality and the artistic aspect of a production is ruined. A great deal of time and thought is given over to the cutting and titling of a picture, only to have all this wasted insofar as the first showing is concerned because the home exhibitor, who may be very successful, is seldom ever a specialist from a technical viewpoint and is therefore not as qualified to cut a production so as to conform to his special requirements. Some exhibitors, too, in trying to squeeze in an extra performance will instruct their operators to speed up the projector. The result is that the scenes will be shown with the players darting about on the screen, thereby spoiling the artistic and dramatic effect, which cost the director many hours of painstaking endeavor. Is it fair?"

That there might be no delay in production activities once they are started, Ida May Park has begun work on the continuity of her second production. Thus, when she commences work, she can proceed uninterruptedly with the filling of two pictures. "Red Pottage" is to be the first.

Tom Terriss, director of "Third Degree," "The Lion and the Mouse," "The Climbers," "The Vengeance of Durand" and the screen version of Winchell Smith's long to be remembered "Fortune Hunter," is announcing his first Tom Terriss Production—"Trumpet Island"; from the story by Governeur Morris. Congratulations are being written and wired Mr. Terriss from Maine to California, and a special letter of "we are glad you are one of us" has been forwarded him from his brother members of the New York Lodge of Motion Picture Directors' Association.

John William Kellette, former director of Briggs comedies on the Paramount program, wrote the big song hit "I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles." He has written a new song around Metro's "Heart of a Child," dedicating the song to Nazimova, who wrote him a letter of thanks which has made the director-composer undecided between publishers of music and of film despite the fact that a certain trade paper is delivered at his door, every week?

Charles Giblyn, will, with the completion of "The Thief," screen dramatization of Bernstein's immortal play assigned the painstaking director for the reason of its peculiar twists, will direct an all-star production under Fox banner. "The Thief" is Mr. Giblyn's third picture starring Pearl White. He will be succeeded, in directing the star of many famous serials, by J. Searle Dawley, who directed Marguerite Clarke in all pictures in which she was starred for three years in succession for Famous Players, with the exception of two. Miss White is about the only well known star of today who is not indexed in the long list of those directed by the pioneer maker of film plays.

"During the last year," says Henry King, director for Jesse D. Hampton, "a wave of music madness has swept the studios. Itinerant orchestras have made their appearance and become an established part of a good many companies. They accompany the actors on the travels to various locations, play for them on the stages of the home studio, and act as a sort of eternal obligato to their every movement. Some stars, both male and female, have become so enamoured of their music that they now declare it impossible to register the proper emotions without suitable accompaniment on the side.

"The psychological effects of music on the emotions must be admitted. At present studio music is merely an innovation. Eventually I should not be surprised to see it regarded as an institution. And why not? Have you ever been in a theatre when the music suddenly stopped? Absorbed as you may be in the picture you will immediately become aware that there is something lacking. The picture seems to lose its reality. A good deal of the glamour of it is gone, too.

"If the effect on stolid audiences is so great why should not the actor, whose profession hangs upon the sensitiveness of his or her emotions, be even more radically affected? The producers are gradually awakening to this. The incongruities, such as a mouth organ playing an accompaniment to a death scene, are slowly being eliminated.

Why Donald Crisp Goes to England

WHEN cast as "The Battler" in "Broken Blossoms", which performance identified Donald Crisp to the world—to those who were not already acquainted with his abilities, he proved himself an actor capable of losing his own personality entirely for the sake of his art. He also proved that he could "battle". He can—for his own country, for the information of our country regarding the people and customs of English; in fact he can "battle" for anything he believes worth the effort.

In order that via the cinema, we, of fortunate, beautiful America may have a clearer understanding of England, just as England, through the incalculable footage of American film shown there, has learned to know us; in order that the English may see their own favorite players in plays they thoroughly understand—Donald Crisp sailed for England. Facing the most colossal attempt of his career, which he believed will be equally mental and physical, he will, with the customs acquired in the eleven years he has been in America, be informed as to how to proceed. He will direct the picturizations of English plays, with English peoples, with an omnipotent thought—that of "battling" for a correct portrayal of the subjects according to his American-trained directorial ability.

Mr. Crisp evidently expects to accentuate the reflection of his already noted eye for detail, for he expects that the action along with the story will be as enlightening as entertaining. And by way of outlining his ambitions he said: "I want you, in America, to know your brothers and sisters of England, as they have learned to know you, via the greatest exchange of information the world has ever known—the motion pictures. And I will fight to have these pictures fulfill the important mission I attach to them."

Mr. Crisp said, also, "that he did not anticipate an easy time of it, and pointed out some of the reasons why. For instance: The numbers of players or people engaged in the amusement profession are comparatively few when we number the thousands engaged in some end of the profession, in America. Players are few. What ones have reached a pinnacle of favoritism are perpetually engaged. It is not so much a question of talent, as being able to secure enough of it. The pictures will be filmed in the actual locations according to the stories and will be composed entirely of English companies. Each player will be of English subject, laborers, studio attaches, cameramen.' And, with the "cameramen" Mr. Crisp hesitated in telling about his hopes and ambitions.

"You see," he explained, "it is not that photography abroad has not been perfected to compare with American photography. Matter of fact, in many ways it is more wonderful, and one cameraman I am to have was (he recited his connection in the British air-service) but —while he can and did photograph through clouds, and was able to photograph the location of 'Big Bertha'—yet when it comes to lighting the hair, photographing the leading women of the screen such as we have in America—when it comes to photographing through gauze rather than clouds of heaven—what then?"

We reiterate—"What then"?

But being fully informed as to what he is encountering and having accepted such an assignment, we believe Mr. Crisp will be able to direct the cameraman who photographs through clouds and will probably have fathomed a way before he reaches Liverpool—his name signed to a contract to remain for one year!

Mr. Crisp maintains that he has absorbed a lesson from every picture in which he has played or directed, and he referred to "It Pays to Advertise" as one of the lessons which decided his going to England.

"To take pictures in the locales which are historically correct, or fictionized, to open the hearts of the English people, photographing their visions of roles, will advertise, more than anything which has gone before, from an informative and educational standpoint, the realities of the English. At least I am willing to spend a year of my life in the attempt to popularize English-made film in America and to make it possible for the English to see their beloved players on the screen the same as Americans would demand to see the American screen favorites.

"You think you can look into the heart of Ian MacLaren's "Beside the Bonny Briar Bush' by reading between covers. But how much better your understanding will be when its beauty is photographically before you! I shall eagerly await the release of my pictures made in England."

Donald Crisp in London. Perhaps he will show us some close-up views of "Limehouse" types such as we have never seen. In any event, to fulfill what he believes is a need, and at the same time be working in his beloved profession, with a year in the land of is his birth—is why Donald Crisp has gone to London.

Big News!—Wally Van Is in Town

HEREAFTER, when there is a seeming need of a search warrant for a director of motion pictures and it must be that director, no other—save time, telephone calls and patience by trying telepathy. It is a new sort of "double exposure" that some clever photographer will possibly introduce in one of next season's photo-marvels, but in the case of locating a director for a friend-producer, who would have words to say to Wally Van, the new method worked like an automatic ticket seller.

"Could you please find where I might get in immediate touch with Wally Van?" was the request. Sounded easy. Everybody in filmdom knows him and we wondered why it was necessary to resort to offices of a trade publication, but when the answer "The last I heard of him he was on the coast supervising the direction of a serial" became as if stereotyped, and as indefinite, it didn't seem so easy. The popular belief was that he was "in New York now." Also indefinite.

But the "telepathy" solved the problem, for after having exhausted our efforts, suddenly without even a music cue, came Wally Van toward us, hurriedly sprinting along as if he were keeping a projector operator waiting. He was the answer to a continuous thought, "find Wally Van," so when he was near enough to recognize that he was being "hailed" to "stop," with characteristic alacrity he extended his hand in friendly greeting.

"Where have you been?" with such accent on the "have" that Mr. Van immediately felt he had been lost.

"I've been in New York some time—that is when not on Long Island, where I have been summering. But who wants to know, besides Jules Brulator?"

The information was, after the search, somewhat surprising.

"Been in New York—directing?"

"No, not exactly, that is, not directing pictures and the reason for it is that after completing my last work, under the most severe adverse conditions a man was ever subjected to, I finished the chore of supervising the direction of one of those 'continued next week' photographic entertainments and have been so busy closing up matters with the people with whom I was associated, that I have been granting myself what seemed a necessary rest."

The delivery of the message scratched another item off the memorandum book. Further, it brought an explanation from Mr. Van. After having been in the business many years, producing every kind and style of motion picture known to the history of celluloid entertainment, from a split reel comedy to a six-reel feature (including three serials) he proferred the information that he is considering going into the producing end of the business for himself!

He ought to know just "how," for Wally Van is one of the few directors in the industry today who knows the production end of it from the time the film goes into the studio as a raw product until the day a picture is released for a publisher's inspection. His experience alone may well be rated high among his company's assets, for in conjunction with his work directing and supervising varied forms of film product, he has also made a study of the releasing end of the business, following closely the many changes affecting distribution from the "old days" to the present. He admits all this was done with a view to making special productions of his own, or for an organization in which he would be personally and financially interested.

Through a producer of the early period of motion picture making, Wally Van had his introduction to the cinema. He accepted his first engagement more or less to satisfy his curiosity. Like many of our most successful directors, Mr. Van became interested in the writing end of the work and before the first year had passed, he had acted, directed and written scenarios! The first of his own screen plays, in which he was co-starred, was with Lillian Walker in "The Street Singers," and looking back Mr. Van can now see the possibilities of exaggerating it to 7,650 feet of film, rather than confining it to two reels. "In those days, when film was not so expensive, we did not waste it!" said Mr. Van. "We were allowed 1,250 feet of negative on a 1,000 foot subject—but that was when we took pictures over."

The first hand Mr. Van took at directing was "Love, Luck and Gasoline" which title would be more significant today. It was one of the first feature comedies which will be remembered by admirers of John Bunny and exhibitors who bought it on each of several reissues. The next one was "The Man Behind the Door." By this time Wally Van had become the star as well as the director. It said so—on the screen.

Speaking of historical date in connection with the makers of among our initial productions. Mr. Van remarked that he could recall perfectly the first studio ever built in America when Vitagraph put up their first structure in Flatbush, and when, among other trifling difficulties under which directors worked, was the use of perforating machines, cameras, printing machines and lights, all manufactured by the producing company.

Busy Season for Hollywood

Lasky Studio Taxed to Capacity in Preparing for New Pictures

THERE has been no cessation of activity at the Famous Players-Lasky studio in Hollywood through the heated season, and every stage at the big plant is reported to be taxed to its capacity to accommodate the many sets that are erected or in course of preparation for forthcoming Paramount Pictures.

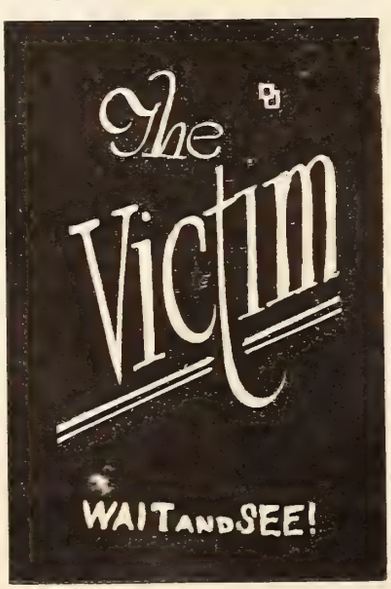
William DeMille is completing "Midsummer Madness," adapted by Olga Printzlau from Cosmo Hamilton's story. "His Friend and His Wife," and is preparing for his next production for Paramount. Cecil B. DeMille is making rapid progress on his current Paramount special, written by Jeanie Macpherson. It is stated that some exceedingly beautiful gowns have been designed by Clare West for the feminine principals, and it is understood that among other features this will be one of the outstanding characteristics of the story, which has not as yet been named.

Wallace Reid, under the direction of James Cruze, making "Always Audacious", from a scenario by Tom Geraghty, has accomplished another of his flying trips to San Francisco, and will be back this week to make the final scene for the picture in the Lasky studio. As soon as he is through with this story he will begin work on "Free Air," by Sinclair Lewis, adapted by Byron Morgan and again directed by James Cruze. Margaret Loomis is his leading woman in the current production.

Thomas Meighan is making some important scenes for his new Paramount picture, "Easy Street" under the direction of Tom Forman. The story is by Blair Hall and the scenario by Beulah Marie Dix. Gladys George is his leading woman.

Following the completion of "Brewster's Millions," upon which he is now engaged under the direction of Joseph Henabery, Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle, will do an original story by Walter Woods of the Lasky scenario staff, entitled, "The Dollar a Year Man."

Metro Satisfies Its Authors



Writers No Longer Complain at Ill-Treatment of Their Stories

THE old attitude of authors to producers who picturize their literary efforts was always one of protest and indignation at the way in which their works were mistreated. And it is this attitude that Metro Pictures Corporation are anxious to defeat. And it seems probable that they will conquer.

After viewing some scenes from the picture version of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" which were not in the original story, Vicente Ibanez, its author, stated that he was astonished at the vivid picturing of these scenes and that he endorsed them without qualification.

Another instance is the filming of "The Right of Way," with Bert Lytell. "I had heard all sorts of complaints from writers in regard to the adaptations of their works for the screen," said Sir Gilbert Parker, "When I sold the rights to 'The Right of Way,' I was prepared for the worst. Like George du Maurier, when he was told that 'Trilby' was to be dramatized; I felt like saying, 'Heaven help them!' Heaven in that case apparently intervened. I fancy that more people saw 'Trilby' than read the book. Now I believe more people will see 'The Right of Way' on the screen perhaps, than read the book."

Frederic and Fanny Hatton had two of their stage successes adapted for the screen and produced by Metro. These were "Lombardi, Ltd., in which Bert Lytell starred and "The Walk-Off," used as a starring vehicle for May Allison. Frederic Hatton, asked about the screen productions said, "I have nothing but praise. Not a word from either myself or Mrs. Hatton. We may not be thoroughly orthodox in indorsing the Metro productions of our plays."

Callaghan Tells Next Bessie Love Vehicle

Andrew J. Callaghan, president of Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Inc., has left New York on a hurried trip to California. On the eve of his departure he announced that a picture version of "Penny of Tophill Trail," the novel by Belle K. Maniates, will be Bessie Love's production.

Accompanying Mr. Callaghan to the coast was Arthur Berthelet, who has been engaged as director for the star. Mr. Berthelet has to his credit a long list of successes, both on the stage and before the camera.

Viola Dana, star of Metro's "The Chorus Girl's Romance"

Vignola Complimented by Spanish Prince

Impressed by the production of "The World and His Wife," H. R. H. Prince Alfonso Louis Jerome de Bourbon Infante, a member of the reigning house of Spain, and a close relative of King Alfonso, has paid Director Robert G. Vignola a gracious and spontaneous compliment upon his work. This is the first instance, of which there is any record, of royalty deigning to comment publicly upon a motion picture or any person connected with motion pictures.

Rose Shulsinger with International

Rose Shulsinger has been appointed publicity director and advertising manager of International, succeeding Theodore C. Deitrich. Miss Shulsinger has been Marion Davies' personal representative for two years and will continue to handle Miss Davies' personal affairs in addition to her new work.

Wally Van—Director

Who remembers one of the first serials entitled "The Perils of Pauline?" It bears another distinction. It was the first to be burlesqued and Wally Van did it in three reels with Clara Kimball Young as the star. It was called "The Fates of Flora Fourflush." Perhaps it was Mr. Van's acknowledged foresight and perceptive which introduced what has developed by modern methods into the nucleus of our best comedies, but in those days we did not recognize the foundation of comedy as overdone drama.

Time prevailed upon Mr. Van, however, to take serials more seriously and before leaving Vitagraph, he directed one of their most melodramatic offerings of lengthy footage with Earl Williams as the star. While, in the meantime, he has directed many features, his most recent work was an eighteen episode serial which he said might just as well have been eighteen hundred, so far as he is concerned, for he does not anticipate making any more! Instead, he expects to devote his time to special productions.

DOINGS IN LOS ANGELES BRIEFLY TOLD

Production on the West Coast

BY J. C. JESSEN, 412 WEST SIXTH STREET

ROBERTSON-COLE

THE last scenes for the Robertson-Cole special production, "Kismet," which will star Otis Skinner, are now ready for the film editors as the last scenes for this film were taken by L. J. Gasnier on September first. All scenes in which Mr. Skinner took part were completed more than two weeks ago as the star was forced to return to New York to begin rehearsal on his new stage play.

Complete cast for the first Dustin Farnum Robertson-Cole subject "The Trail of the Axe" will consist of Winifred Kingston as leading woman, George Fischer, Joseph and Mrs. Dowling, Joe Ray and others. Ernest C. Warde is directing this subject and the troupe is working at Brunton studio after two weeks in the Northern California timber country.

"The Girl Who Lived In the Woods" is the present title of the Mae Marsh subject being directed by John G. Adolphi at the Hayworth studios. The interiors will be finished within the next week and the company will then go to Big Bear Valley, 150 miles from Los Angeles, in the mountains for the exteriors. The cast includes Charles Meredith, Kathleen Kirkham, Tully Marshall, Greta Hartman, Herbert Prior and little George Bertholon takes the child part.

Pauline Fredericks under the direction of Henry Otto is working in the last scenes this week for "Iris" the Arthur Wing Pinero play. The principal players of this picture are Nigel Barrie, Willard Lewis, Howard Gay, Maud Lewis, Daisy Robinson, Ruth Hanforth and Arthur Hoyt.

Director Colin Campbell is now busy with two plays. He is doing the final editing of "The First Born" starring Sessue Hayakawa with Helen Eddy as leading woman and also working on the next story for this star which will be put in production within a week. No title has been announced but it is said Tsura Aoki (Mrs. Hayakawa) will play opposite the star in this subject. This well be the first time the couple have played together in almost two years.

1st NATIONAL

THE Ralph Conner story of the Canadian foothills "The Sky Pilot" has been selected as the story for the next King Vidor First National Production. The story is now being cast and filming will be started with Ira H. Morgan as camera man.

Here are Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven as they appear in a new comedy, "Kids Is Kids," released by Famous Players-Lasky

William A. Vanderlyn has been added to the Vidor organization as art director following several years experience with a number of producing organizations.

Edwin Carewe has completed his work in directing "The Second Latchkey" the Katherine MacDonald vehicle and left for New York August 30th. This film is now being edited.

A camp composed of more than 800 is being conducted in the rocky foothills of Chatsworth Park where the scenes for the Amazon period of the Alan Holubar production starring Dorothy Phillips, which will be the first Al Kaufman film for First National, is being made. Using the natural setting in part and adding a small portion of artificial set, Holubar has a most wonderful stone entrance to the city. In this locality the famous battle for supremacy between men and women is being fought. The scenes which will be used in an allegorical way show the historical events which finally resulted in the men overpowering women because the women found it necessary to care for their babies. The camp is a very complete one, having hospitals, large mess quarters with needed kitchens and almost 200 tents which serve as living quarters for the players. It is estimated the cost of the camp is greater than $10,000.00 daily which will add materially to the expense to date for the making of "Man, Woman and Marriage," which now totals, according to report, more than $400,000.00

Henry Lehrman is now filming his third comedy for First National and the cast includes Charles Conklin, Billy Richie, Al Ray and Charlotte Dawn.

The Sidney Franklyn company filming "Parrott & Company" from the Harold McGrath novel with Richard Dix and Sylvia Breamer as featured leads, is spending a week at Del Monte securing exterior scenes.

The Charles Ray studio has taken on the appearance of the imaginary hick town of Vixville and Charlie has been seen strutting about as the real swell of the village. In "Ninteen and Phyllis" the Frederick Stowers story now being filmed Ray is the Beau Brummel much in demand until the swell dandy from the city arrives. The story deals with how Ray by the aid of several true friends outwits the rival and wins the town belle. Vixville has a rapid transit company that operates street cars and a narrow gauge railroad with vehicles the size of a small auto bus romp about the studio at the rate of four miles per hour.

The title for the second Mack Sennett comedy feature for First National has been changed to "Love, Honor and Behave." This is now completed and gives Charles Murray the role of a judge who deals out advice to a newly married couple which results in complications. The statements of the judge are shown on the screen, thus telling his story of innocent implication which brought on a maze of comedy entanglements.

BRUNTON

B. B. HAMPTON is now working with his scenario department at the Brunton studio in preparation of the film version of the Stewart Edward White novel of San Francisco "The Gray Dawn." No cast for this has been named but it is intimated that Jack Conway now playing the lead in "The Killer," will be featured in the coming production.

The Dial Film Company which has made "King Spruce" and "The Tiger's Coat" at the Brunton studio has this week completed negotiations for the purchase of a three hundred acre ranch in Coyote Pass near Los Angeles. This property was used by the company in the making of two subjects and necessary buildings will be added there for its continued use.

Robert Brunton gave a final preview of his initial all star feature "The Devil to Pay" at the studio projecting room this week, prior to the shipment of the film to W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for distribution. Members of the producing staff only were in attendance.

METRO

BAYARD VEILLER has selected "Rings and Things," a story by John A. Morosco as the next vehicle for Viola Dana. This gives Miss Dana the role of an orphan girl who is adopted by a band of crooks at which point the hero, a young lawyer, fights for her liberty in a legal way. Waldemar Young of the Metro scenario department is now preparing script.

French army records of the battle of the Marne are serving Director Rex Ingram to accurately reproduce this historical battle for the "Four Horsemen." The scenes for this portion of the story are now being filmed at the Metro ranch and more than 1,000 men will participate in it. The Metro technical staff are now putting the finishing touches to castles and villages necessary for this scene and correct war machines have been secured for use in these scenes. In making the battle scenes Ingram will have the cooperation of a number of army officers who had overseas service and are thoroughly familiar with conditions of this battle.

The third Buster Keaton comedy for Metro has been completed and titled "The Scare Crow." This as with previous comedies was directed by Eddie Cline. "The Scare Crow" has a rural setting and probably the most sensational thrill is that of Buster making a trip through a threshing machine.

Virginia Fox who has played in Sennett and other comedies has been selected as Keaton's next leading woman. She is just tall enough to stand under Keaton's extended arm and both Manager Lou Anger and Director Eddie Cline agree that she is beautiful enough to please both male and female eyes.

The new fireproof paint and carpenter assembling shops at Metro studios have been completed and these departments are now moving to the new quarters. The new buildings are of two stories with underground storage tanks for paint material.

UNIVERSAL

UNIVERSAL CITY is particularly quiet this week for most of the companies are absent working on location. One new production titled "The Orchid," from the Marguerite Storrs novel, has been put in production under the direction of Marcel de Sano, recent addition to the U directorial staff. Irving Cummings was engaged by the New York office as leading man for Carmel Myers in this subject.

Lyons and Moran this week shipped their third feature comedy "Once a Plumber—" and are now engaged in selecting a cast for "Fixed By George."

Rolin S. Sturgeon with the making of exteriors at Santa Barbara, has completed the filming of the "Gilded Dream" which stars Carmel Myers and will spend the next two weeks in editing this subject.

VITAGRAPH

THE first intimation that Vitagraph is to feature Jean Page, who was co-starred with Joe Ryan in "Hidden Dangers," became known this week when the information was given out that she will play the feature role in the coming Vitagraph special "Black Beauty" now in the making under the direction of David Smith. Other players have not been selected. Sets have been built at Culver City and at Sunland where scenes in which Miss Page is the only one to appear are being taken. The company will go to Santa Barbara within a few days where a month will be spent on locations.

Director Jess Robbins has leased a farm on the Ventura Highway for the filming of the next Jimmy Aubrey comedy. Leila McCarthy is the new leading woman of this troupe.

A preview of the most recently made Semon comedy was given at a Pasadena theatre during the past week at which time the comedy was known as "The Suitor."

Work on the three Vitagraph serials, "The Wizard Spy Glass," starring William Duncan, "The Veiled Mystery," starring Antonio Moreno," and the "Purple Riders," starring Joe Ryan, are all absent from the studios this week working on exterior locations.

While Director Chester Bennett is editing the recently completed comedy drama "Romance Promoters" Earle Williams, the star, is working with the scenario department in the selection of his next story.

GOLDWYN

CONTINUITY for "The Concert," adapted from the Herman Bahr play by J. E. Nash of the Goldwyn scenario department, has been completed and Victor Schertzinger will begin the filming of this subject with an all star cast next week. Lewis Stone, Myrtle Stedman, Raymond Hatton, Gertrude Astor, Russ Powell, Francis Hall and Louis Cheung are the principals.

Everything is now in readiness for Director Mason N. Litzon to film the eighth of the Edgar series which will be titled "Fans." Continuity for this was completed this weeks by Eleanor Flori.

Work has been delayed on the filming of "Canavan," starring Tom Moore, because of the illness of E. Mason Hopper, who will probably be able to return to work during the coming week after an absence of more than ten days.

HERE AND THERE

THE Dickens classic "Old Curiosity Shop" has been selected as the next vehicle for Bessie Love and will be made by the Andrew J. Callihan Productions within the near future. Script for this subject is now being prepared.

The C. L. Chester west coast publicity department has sent out the information that James A. Ramsey, cameraman, has been missing for two months. He was last heard from just before starting on a trip up the Salmon River in Idaho. Ramsey has photographed a number of Chester Outing subjects.

Paramount Productions Please Australia

Paramount super-specials are scoring successes throughout Australia, according to advices received at the home office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation from Alec Lorimore, managing director of Feature Film Ltd., of Sydney. "On With the Dance," the George Fitzmaurice production with Mae Murray and David Powell, is the third of the recent Paramount specials to be released for a first-run engagement in the Auditorium theatre, the first-run house for Paramount pictures in Victoria. Crowded houses have greeted every showing, it is said, new box-office records being established for Australia since the opening of this feature.

Tom Geraghty Is Made Producing Editor

TOM J. GERAGHTY has arrived in New York from California and immediately enters upon the duties of Eastern production editor of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. On his way East, Mr. Geraghty made a short visit at his old home in Rushville, Ind.

"The rise of Tom Geraghty has been an epic of ability," says a statement just issued from the Famous Players-Lasky headquarters. "From grocery counter to printer's devil, and from printer's devil to star reporter have been certain steps to his present eminence as a writer for the screen. It was his newspaper work in the little Indiana town that attracted the attention of Samuel G. Blythe, the famous political writer, and it was not long after that he was drawing pay on the New York Herald.

"But the moving picture bee slipped into my bonnet," he relates, "and I went the way of so many good newspapermen—I began writing film publicity. After exploiting Metro productions for some time, I began reading in their scenario department, then titling and cutting.

"From that time to the present he has occupied a a high place in the profession, and has been the author of many of the most successful original stories and adaptations that have appeared on the screen."

Gladys George Opposite Thomas Meighan

Gladys George has been engaged to play opposite Thomas Meighan, the star, in his new Paramount offering, "Easy Street" which is being made at the Lasky studio under Tom Forman's direction.

Miss George is a native of Maine. She played her first role at the age of three with Poli stock at Waterbury, Conn. She continued in stock for a time and when she was old enough appeared as the beggar girl in the big Winthrop Ames revival of "The Betrothal." Later she was with Mr. and Mrs. Coburn in "The Better 'Ole" and with DeWolf Hopper in the same play. She has also appeared with James K. Hackett, and other notable stage stars.

Cleo Madison Returns Again to Screen

Metro announces that Cleo Madison will again grace the screen, after an absence of more than a year, as a member of the all-star cast in Metro's forthcoming production of "White Ashes." This picture is described as a "villainless drama."

In her new picture, Miss Madison will return to the "fans" in a role that should delight their hearts—that of a brilliant stage star who figures in a three-cornered love affair that lacks the usual bad man of the stage.

Marshall Neilan Signs Colleen Moore

Marshall Neilan announces the signing of Colleen Moore on a long term arrangement. This contract was awarded Miss Moore as a result of her exceptional work in "Dinty," the new Neilan-First National picture now being completed at the Hollywood Studios, and in which Wesley Barry plays the stellar role.

In the character Miss Moore portrays in "Dinty," she is given a big opportunity in the dramatic field. Her success in handling this part, it is expected, will prove one of the notable features of the production.

Frank Elliott to Appear With May Allison

Frank Elliott, veteran player of the speaking stage and screen, has been engaged by Metro to play a supporting role with May Allison in her new starring production, "The Marriage of William Ashe," which is to be filmed at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood. Edward Sloman is the director of the picture.

The story was written by Mrs. Humphrey Ward, dramatized for the stage by Margaret Mayo and adapted for the screen by Ruth Ann Baldwin.

Herbert Standing Will Act for Realart

It will be a matter of interest to note that Herbert Standing, veteran of the stage and screen, returns to active film work in "Her First Elopement," a new Wanda Hawley comedy-drama for Realart.

Some months ago, Mr. Standing was severely hurt in an accident. Careful medical attention has now brought him around

"The Law of the Yukon", Charles Miller's picturization of Robert W. The production played a day and date engagement of seven days at both houses last week.

American Films Supreme

Czecho-Slovakia Prefers Our Film to All Others, Statistics Prove

THE supremacy, over all other competitors, of the American-made pictures in the Czecho-Slovakian Republic is maintained in a recent statement from the office of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. The reason ascribed for this supremacy, says Universal, is the combination of romance and adventure found in the average American photoplay. The type of action found in American films is characterized by the middle European photoplay fans as a "manly adventure" type, greatly in contrast to the "erotic sentimentality" of the German films.

"The Czechs are exceedingly fond of serials," continues the Universal statement. "Among their most favorite pictures are 'The Red Ace,' 'The Bull's Eye,' and 'Liberty', three Universal serials. Eddie Polo, Marie Walcamp and Elmo Lincoln are among the leading favorites of the Czecho-Slovakian screen.

"The public taste for the cinema is more marked in Czecho-Slovakia than in any other Europeon country, figures show. Almost ten per cent of the population are daily patrons of the various moving picture theatres.

"Universal recently has tied up with a stock company organized in Europe to promulgate American films in Czecho-Slovakia.

Holubar Is Engaged on Spectacular Scene

For the most spectacular scenes of "Man, Woman, Marriage," the Allen Holubar production to be released through First National in which Dorothy Phillips is starring, 200 bareback girl-riders, all the players in the cast and the entire technical staff of the company will be taken to Chatsworth Park, Calif., for a sequence of scenes.

"Man, Woman, Marriage," Holubar's independently produced superfeature, has been four months in the making. It is now nearing completion. While Dorothy Phillips takes a rest, Holubar will begin cutting in collaboration with Mrs. Frank Lawrence.

More time, care and expense are reported to have been expended on this feature than on many of the spectacular pageants of a few years ago, when the twelve-part efforts of the big producers were screened. This production, which is to be held to a seven-reel limit, is said to embody many thrills and punches. The story is essentially a modern one, but the periods rapidly change from the modern day back to the Stone age and by way of the Medieval period back to the present.

The story of "Man, Woman, Marriage" was written by Allen Holubar in collaboration with Olga Linck Scholl.

Edward Jobson Engaged for Metro Cast

Edward Jobson, well-known as a member of the Metro stock company, has been selected to play an important part in "The Marriage of William Ashe," May Allsion's new Metro starring picture. Mr. Jobson recently appeared with Viola Dana in "The Chorus Girl's Romance," and previous to that he had a leading part in "The Saphead," in which William H. Crane and Buster Keaton co-starred.

Wanda Hawley Begins New Picture

Alice Duer Miller's magazine story, "Her First Elopement," has been adapted for the screen by Edith Kennedy, and work on the production of the picture has been begun at the Realart studios with Wanda Hawley as the star and Sam Wood as the director.

Wanda Hawley has just completed "Food for Scandal" and "Her Beloved Villain" for Realart.

Bob Kane is in our Village.

Mabel Normand is in New York.

Robert McKim can't decide whether his son now aged two months is to be a screen villain, president of the United States or a corporation lawyer.

Wedding bells are shortly to ring for Harry Bucquet, Alan Holubar's assistant. He is to marry a San Francisco girl and Al is to be the best man.

Buster Keaton said he wouldn't lose his trousers for a lot of money. He means those baggy ones he wears in pictures but nevertheless the expression is significant.

Si Snyder has taken his ideas, adjectives and publicity stunts to the offices of the Rockett Film Corporation and now the waiting world will hear all about "The Truant Husband."

The Goldwyn Edgar series are being made by Masons. First E. Mason Hopper did four and then Mason N. Litzon did one, then Hopper one, and now Litzon is at it again. It looks like a labor union deal.

Vic Schertzinger is growing a mustache and compiling a book on Quips which will be composed of advice given to him by his friends on how to grow a mustache.

A man in Boston wrote to Universal City "Please send me 150 actors and actresses." The publicity department mailed him a photograph of an "Outside the Law" mob scene.

"Smoke" Turner's real name is Brodwick. He was given the name of "Smoke" because he played the part of a negro yars and yars ago back in the old Essenay studio and there seemed to be a fog about Turner ever since for "Smoke" stayed with him.

Realism and admosphere was put in a scene which required some 150 negros to all sneeze at once for an Edgar Picture at Goldwyn. As soon as the powder was scattered director Mason Litzon thought a cyclone had arrived. Some are still sneezing.

"NOTICE"

"To members of the scenario department — all teeth must be extracted by September first—Bayard Veiller."

The above sign is conspicuous on the bulletin board in front of the Metro scenario department and it is intimated the writers have had many a half day off.

Hokum's editor was entertained by Al Kaufman with a trip to Chatsworth Park where he vivewed Alan Holubar's after the stone age set for "Man, Woman, Marriage." About the most sensational event of the day was nine Amazon female warriors being carried out on stretchers real stuff (not for the cameras) after the male and female Amazons rode home in harmony from their battle for the supremacy of the sexes. It's a great life!

Bill Rogers is scheduled to debate before the City Club of Los Angeles on Sept 7th. The larient throwing gum-chewer will defend the affirmative of "Resolved that cow-boys have done more for humanity than preachers." The defense of the men of the cloth will be by the Rev. J. Whitcomb Brower, pastor of the Auditorium Baptist Church in Los Angeles and nationally prominent in Baptist association. Brower married Mary and Doug and was criticized. Can it be that he is now trying to soothe his fellow workers by defending them?

Gouverneur Morris Has Original Script

Gouverneur Morris, whose popular novel, "The Penalty," directed by Wallace Worsley, has just been released by Goldwyn, has completed his first original scenario which is tentatively called "The Water Lilly." Charles Kenyon, author of "Kindling," now a member of Goldwyn's scenario staff at the Culver City studios, is writing the continuity with the assistance and advice of the novelist who has been spending several weeks at the studio.

Carter DeHaven Claims Comedy Knockout

Carter De Haven's picturization of the Selwyn comedy hit "Twin Beds," starring Mr. and Mrs. De Haven, for First National release on October 18,, received a wholesome welcome by a New York audience who were given a pre-view recently. Mr. De Haven arrived in New York with a sample print a few days ago and established his headquarters with his New York affiliation, Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation.

Mr. De Haven states that he has preserved not only every situation but every comic line and through the addition of a number of clever sub-titles has made the piece more engagingly funny than ever.

A Plea for More Thought in the Designing of Theatres

Mr. Exhibitor—You Can't Afford to Miss This Article by an Architect

BY HARRY M. PRINCE, DALLAS, TEXAS

WITH all the charges and counter-charges going on relative to an "Octopus," cries of monopoly and tight squeezing, and the innumerable other family and trade quarrels and accusations, why is it that one of the most necessary requirements of success to any motion picture is so little thought about?

I refer to the plan, design and equipment of the modern motion picture theatre, with particular stress on those intended for the small town or city.

No matter what an exhibitor pays for the rental of his films or on what basis, what repeat patronage can he expect if his patrons leave the theatre with a "crick in the neck"; if the ventilation is bad, projection poor, and sight lines worse. Why cannot exhibitors be made to realize that the plan, design, construction and equipment of modern motion picture theatres is an art and profession. That a theatre to embrace all these features in a successful and economic manner must not be the result of guess work, but should be the result of careful study, thought and experience by an architect making a highly specialized study of the problems involved.

The Motion Picture News is to be complimented in being progressive enough to devote a valuable portion of its space to the publishing of views and drawings of new theatres. Its purpose in trying to help exhibitors familiarize themselves with the latest in design and plan, ventilation and equipment, etc., is indeed commendable. It is, however, at fault in publishing the good and the bad indiscriminately and calling them all good; whereas some have been aberrations and monstrosities and showed the designers had the remotest conception of what constituted the simplest fundamentals of good motion picture theatre design.

In the capacity of advisory architects for a large exhibitors' corporation in the south and southwest, the firm with which I am affiliated have been called in again and again to rectify mistakes that have made me feel there should be a law compelling those guilty to refund moneys accepted in the form of commissions for services rendered, as being money received under false pretenses.

Think of hard headed, reliable business men investing $100,000 or more for the erection of a theatre, giving no more thought as to who they will employ as architect than they do to the shade of black of their colored porter.

The profession of architecture is no different than any other. When you need advice for some physical ailment you don't go to the corner drug store for it; and if your case is a specialized one needing a specialist, you don't go to your family physician except for advice as to who is the best specialist in that particular branch of medicine. Think of requiring a highly delicate operation and going to a veterinary surgeon to have him perform it. Yet for some unexplainable reason, the average exhibitor about to build a new theatre does exactly that latter thing. He goes to "Mr. Ima Builder, Contractor—Plans Furnished Free," not because he knows Mr. Ima Builder, Contractor—Plans Furnished Free, is a specialist in theatre design, but because of the fact that said Mr. Builder possibly designed Mr. Theatre Exhibitor's home, assuming therefore that Mr. Ima Builder, Contractor—Plans Furnished Free, is well qualified. He asks him not how much experience he has had in the design of theatres, but how cheaply he can build one. If the price is what Mr. Exhibitor thinks it should be, a deal is closed and our horse surgeon begins his delicate bodily operation to Mr. Exhibitor's pocketbook. I write this with reservations, for there are enough contractors with level heads who insist that the owner at least have some sort of sketches made on which to base a contract, the sketches being made either by the contractor or anyone the owner may select. Usually the operation is as above; the contractor prepares the sketches on which his contract is based.

In one case I have in mind, the owner went to a local contractor and told him he had a size lot that should accommodate 800 seats, and asked him if he could build a theatre including equipment, a full stage and all the additional features for a motion picture house for a specified amount. Mr. Contractor never having built a theatre in his business career, but assuming that it could be done on the usual cubic foot basis of commercial buildings, immediately signed a contract. Bear in mind that the question of architect at no time entered into the negotiations, beyond the fact that it was taken for granted that the contractor would furnish all the necessary drawings as part of his building contract, for did he not advertise himself as "Mr. Ima Builder, Contractor—Plans Furnished Free." What was the result? The contractor engaged a young draftswhose experience in theatre work consisted in being employed in a lumber mill as a mill draftsman, to make all the plans, at a salary of twenty dollars a week.

California Theatre, an 800-seat house in San Diego, Cal.

When the building was well along towards completion, our clients considered leasing and requested that we visit the theatre and make a report. This is what I found. The orchestra floor pitch would have made an excellent slide in a swimming pool. Our young draftsman acting also in the capacity of engineer, had calculated twelve inch I beams to be sufficient to carry the ceiling over which there was a two-story hotel. Mr. Contractor knowing these were insufficient, proceeded to substitute some six foot girders that he had left over from another job. He later admitted that he made no engineering calculations but he wanted to be sure that he had enough steel in there to support any future twenty-story building that some day might go on top of the theatre. Result: He had completely killed the line of projection. The ceiling of the theatre was only twenty-two feet high and the girders projected down below this height six feet. The projection booth was about sixty feet from the screen, located on the top of the balcony. It does not need much mathematics to know why it would have needed an acetylene torch on those girders to get the projection thru (incidentally that was one of the brilliant ideas offered by the contractor to overcome the difficulty).

The only way our clients would take the lease after our report, was that the entire orchestra floor be taken up and relaid, the balcony dropped and the girders removed and replaced; and this only after we had made a complete set of drawings and our services properly paid for. The owner fully realizing by that time that he did not even have a theatre that could be dignified by the name, went ahead with the changes and paid one half again as much as his original building was to cost him. The finished theatre is still a makeshift and only the very best pictures

Kinema to be Materially Altered

THE Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, owned and managed by Sol Lesser and Gore Brothers which has served as the premier house for First National productions during the past six months will be closed August 15th to undergo material changes. The building will be deepened so as to permit a stage 30 ft. in depth from the footlights to the back wall and also the installation of a series of five elevators for orchestra and manual of the Robert Morgan orchestral organ which is being installed. Other innovations to be introduced at the house will be an entirely new mushroom ventilating system. In the summer this will operate to pull the air from the bottom to the top of the auditorium and so arranged that this may be reversed in winter. The foyer will be fitted with 150 colored spot lamps which will play upon the patrons with soft hues changing the colors of their clothing as they walk from the entrance to the auditorium.

The auditorium on both first and second floors will have a decidedly novel decoration consisting of eight sets of imitation French windows which will be fitted with lighting effect machines. Minature drops representing scenes of the photoplays being shown at the theatre will form the back ground for these windows and it is the intention that they shall be changed weekly. The lighting effects will be operated from the stage switchboard, thus keeping the auditorium in harmony with the picture at all times.

The elevators for the orchestral and pipe organ manual will bring the players into full view of the audience during overture or special musical numbers. The advantage of having five elevators being that a portion of the orchestra which may be used in any given number may be in view of the audience while those who are not taking part in the number are not seen. To add this feature to the house the management found it necessary to practically rebuild the auditorium which will be done. This feature. requires the excavation making possible two floors below the auditorium floor.

AlbanyStrandProgressing

In order that the Strand theatre in this city, which has been in process of construction for over a year now, can open by December 1, a day and night force is being employed. It is said that the house will cost close to $600,000 before completion, and with recent advances in materials, it would approximate one million dollars. Decorators are now busy on the interior. The house gives evidences of substantiating the claim that it will be the most magnificent of any motion picture theatre between New York and Chcago.

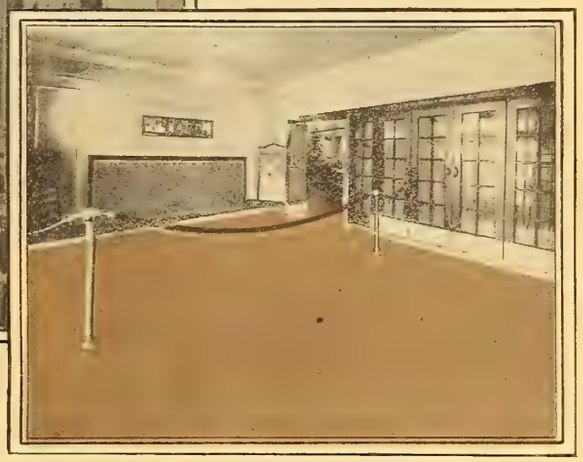
The bell hops at the famous Chateau-Frontenac, may be used as models, in so far as the uniform is concerned, for the ushers at the new Strand. H. M. Kramath, who is building the house, spent a few days recently in Quebec, stopping at the Chateau, and being much impressed by the snappy appearance of the bell boys, in their tight-fitting scarlet jackets, blue trousers and round scarlet cap. As ushers, the boys would carry swagger sticks, completing the costume. Mr. Kramath, however, realizes that he must use considerable care in selecting just the right type of boy in order to carry out the general appearance in which the uniform as well as the wearer must be in thorough accord.

Work on American Resumed

Building operations on the new American theatre of Cherokee, Iowa, have been resumed after being held up for several months due to the inability of the contractors to secure materials. It is planned now to have the theatre open about November 1st. The theatre will cost about $200,000 which is worthy of note when it is further considered that the town has a population of only 5,000.

New Boston Theatre Opened Sept. 3

A new $1,000,000 theatre opened in Boston September 3, at Broadway and F. street, which is known as the Powers' Broadway theatre. The new house will fill a long felt want in South Boston and undoubtedly capture much of the trade that is now going to the up-town theatres.



A big stage is equipped with the latest lighting and scenic properties and the architects have included a ventilation system which will keep the air fresh and well tempered in summer and winter. It will seat 2,500.

The theatre has been built by the Broadway Real Estate Trust and is controlled by the Powers' Broadway Amusement Company of which James F. Powers is president. Associated with Mr. Powers are James A. Doyle and Owen F. Farley. The program will include the best screen productions and will be in charge of Joseph J. Raymond. An expensive Robert Morton orchestral organ has been installed which rivals any instrument in Boston. Roy Frazee will be the organist.

Capitol Opens in St. Paul

WORK of completing the interior decoration and installation of equipment in The New Capitol theatre, Finkelstein & Rubens' handsome $1,500,000 picture palace is now being rushed to permit the opening of the house to the public on September 5, as originally scheduled.

Due to the fact that never in its history has St. Paul seen so much building, contractors having the work of erecting The New Capitol have found difficulty in getting sufficient help to make possible the speed thought possible when construction first began, but with only four weeks remaining to complete their task, plasterers, equipment men, artists, textile workers and carpenters are working night and day so that the thousands of Minnesota State Fair visitors who will attend the big annnual exhibition here Sept. 4 to 11 inclusive will be able to see the Northwest's greatest theatre before they return home.

The Twin City theatre magnates, Messrs. Finkelstein and Ruben, have spared no expense nor effort to make the New Capitol the rival of any theatre in the country, and realizing that they have more than just a beautiful theatre building, the owners are taking great pains to secure only the most fitting films, musicians, employees and exploitation for the new venture.

Lowell V. Calvert, for several years prior to service in the army overseas manager of the Minneapolis New Garrick theatre and since last fall director of the New Garrick, St. Paul, will become director of The New Capitol. Mr. Calvert is recognized as one of the leading theatre managers of the country and deserves full credit for the artistic presentation of films, using special stage settings several years back when other exhibitors felt such elaboration would prove "too high toned for film audiences." At both the St. Paul and Minneapolis New Garricks Mr. Calvert's stage settings and programs have won the plaudits of thousands, and won for the theatres a class of patronage that makes for the permanent success of the silent drama as an art.

Mr. Calvert recently visited New York, Chicago, Pittsburgh, Boston, Detroit and other leading cities of the East and West studying the latest styles of picture presentation and combining this newly acquired knowledge with his recognized store of original ideas there seems to be little doubt but what as director of the New Capitol he will be able to give the people of the city motion picture entertainment that will challenge superiority.

Mr. Calvert has not as yet announced the personnel of his assisting staff nor of his orchestra, but such an announcement is expected shortly. The policy of The New Capitol will be to offer the best of the very latest film releases and to show each feature one week or longer. The scale of prices of admission has not been decided upon as yet, but it is believed they will range from thirty-five cents plus tax for the second balcony to fifty-five for the first few rows of the first balcony and last few rows on the main floor to seventy-five cents plus tax for orchestra and parquet and balcony loges.

When the New Capitol theatre in opened the New Garrick, which serves as St. Paul's most exclusive playhouse at the present time, will be turned into the home for the New Garrick Players, a stock organization now being formed for Finkelstein and Ruben by William E. Mick, former manager of the 3,000-seat New Palace vaudeville theatre of St. Paul. It is believed probable that the Shubert, a former stock theatre at Exchange and Wabasha streets, will be converted into a photoplay house. No arrangements for such a change have been made to date, however.

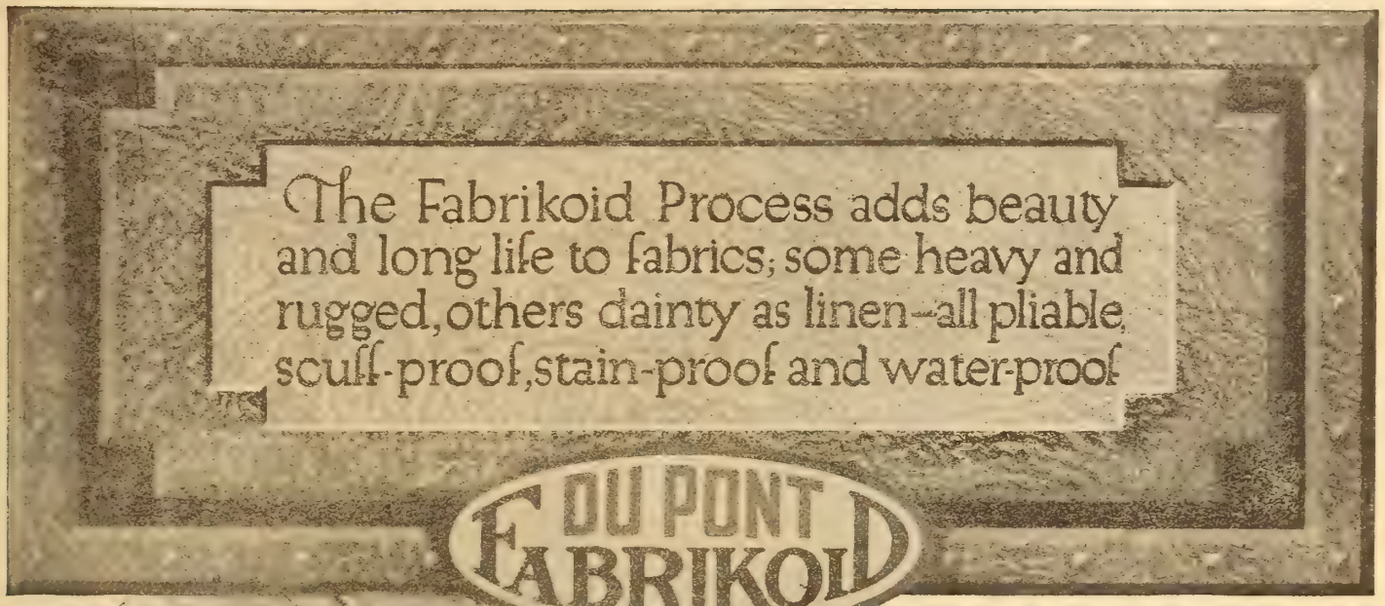
shown will attract the public. This is but one of the many similar cases we have come in contact with, but it will suffice to illustrate.

Any question as to why our clients leased the theatre at all, may be readily answered by knowing that it was a boom oil town needing a picture house at once; that the owner was glad to get any fair price offered for the lease. I do not believe the entire operation is now paying over two per cent to the owner on his money.

A great deal of publicity is being given to the fact that many of the large producers employ the best of architects and interior decorators to design their sets. A most laudable advance. One of our architectural publications is now devoting a serial illustrating the work of Mr. Haas of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to show the great advance made in this field of production.



If it is a self-evident fact that the public demands correct attention to architectural details in picture production, by what reasoning do exhibitors believe that ural fundamentals in theatre planning and the same public is less critical for their own bodily comfort and correct architect-equipment? Mr. Exhibitor, think it over.

Gastonia, N. C., to Have Theatre

J. White Ware, President Third National Bank, Gastonia, N. C., and his associates, J. E. Simpson and Jas. A. Estridge, have purchased a lot on Main street 60 feet by 135 feet, and plans are now being drawn for an up-to-date moving picture and vaudeville theatre with 1,600 seating capacity. Construction will be hurried as fast as possible, considering labor and material conditions, as the owners wish to have the theatre open by the 1st of January, 1921. The building and theatre completely equipped will cost about $100,000.

Holmstrom Off Again

Mr. Holmstrom, erection superintendent of the Monsoon Cooling System, has just returned from an extended trip through the West where he has spent nearly three months superintending the installation of Monsoon Systems in Western theatres. He had just about a week in New York, and then he started off in another direction.

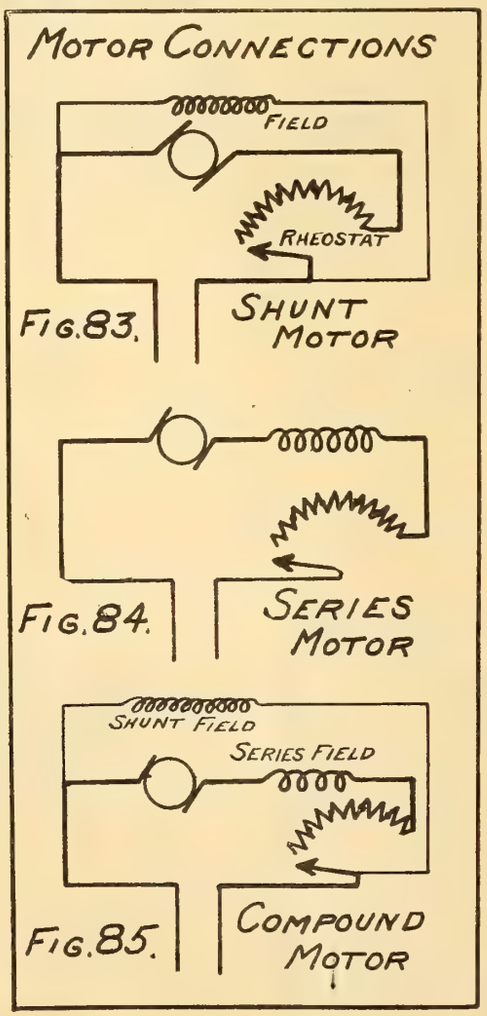
Motor Operation

WHEN a voltage is applied to the terminals of a motor, current is caused to flow in the armature conductors. Then since these conductors are carrying current in a magnetic field, they are acted on by a force which causes them to rotate in a direction given by the left-hand rule, already stated. When the armature starts rotating the conductors cut lines of force and an e.m.f. is generated in the windings in a similar way as when the machine is driven as a generator by some outside force. This generated e.m.f. is opposite to the applied e.m.f. and therefore opposes the flow of current in the armature conductors, and is known as the back or counter e.m.f.

Since in the case of all motors there is a back e.m.f. generated which is proportional to the speed of operation, in order to maintain a current flow in the armature it is necessary that the applied voltage, which may be designated as E_a, shall be greater than the counter e,m,f, or E_b. The following equation may then be given to show the relation of the voltage drops:

$E_a = E_b + I_aR_a$, where E_a is the applied voltage, E_b the counter e.m.f. and I_aR_a the armature drop necessary to force the armature current I_a through the armature resistance R_a.



In the above equation the armature drop necessary to cause a current to flow in the armature is a small per cent of the applied voltage, the greater per cent being necessary to overcome the back e.m.f. of the machine. Thus when starting a motor from rest, because the back e.m.f. is not generated until the armature begins to revolve, it is necessary to have some additional resistance in the armature circuit to cut down the excessive flow of current. The regulation of the flow of current is therefore controlled by the starting rheostat, which inserts a resistance in the armature circuit during starting and is then slowly cut out of the circuit as the motor gains speed.

The wiring diagram for a shunt motor is shown by Fig. 83. In this type of motor the current taken from the supply lines suits itself automatically to the applied load. The terminal voltage of the supply lines remains practically constant so that the field current and consequently the magnetic flux is always the same.

When the motor is at a standstill the conductors are not cutting this magnetic flux and no back e.m.f. is generated, thus if the full voltage of the line was applied to the armature terminals, because of the low resistance of the armature windings, a current sufficient to cause overheating and possibly fusing of the conductors, would be allowed to flow. The rheostat as shown by the drawing is therefore included in the circuit in order that the voltage may be applied slowly. The conductors then carrying current, since they are in a magnetic field will be acted upon by a force causing the armature to rotate. When the motor increases in speed the back e.m.f. also increases since it is proportional to the rate at which the conductors cut the magnetic lines of force. The motor will stop building up speed or accelerating when the back e.m.f. has a value such that the flow of current is just sufficient to overcome the retarding force.

If the load on the motor is increased the current flow will not be sufficient to overcome this increased resisting force and the motor will slow down. When the motor speed is reduced the back e.m.f. is also reduced, since these two factors are directly proportional, and allows a greater current flow in the armature windings. This current then produces a greater torque such that the motor will carry the load but at a slower speed, so that this type of motor will automatically adapt itself to any change in load to which it is connected.

Also the load is decreased the back e.m.f. is increased because of an increase in speed and the armature current is reduced, the equation for the armature current is given as follows: $I_a = (E_a - E_b) / R_a$, and shows that when the back e.m.f., E_b is increased the value of $(E_a - E_b)$ is decreased so that the value of I_a, the armature current, is decreased. The electrical power taken from the line is thus automatically changed to suit the applied load to the motor so that the back e.m.f. of the motor regulates the flow of current in the same way as a governor regulates the flow of steam in a steam engine.

The series motor connections are shown by Fig. 84. In this type of motor the field excitation increases with the load. The torque is thus increased directly as the armature current. As in the case of a shunt motor it is necessary to include a starting resistance in the circuit, since the resistance of the armature and field is not sufficient to keep down the flow of current.

The series type of motor is specially adapted to heavy starting, duty starting, since full load current in the machine will produce full load torque. As the load of a series motor is decreased and consequently the armature current the excitation or flux per pole is also decreased so that the motor must speed up in order to produce the back e.m.f. In the case of light loads the speed may become dangerously high, so that the series motor should always be connected directly to the load in order to prevent any possibility of the machine obtaining a no load condition.

The speed of the series motor is controlled by varying the applied voltage, for this type of motor will tend to rotate so fast as to generate a back e.m.f. nearly equal to the applied voltage so that an extremely weak field is obtained and a resulting high speed.

The compound motor, a diagram of which is shown by Fig. 85 is a compromise between a shunt and a series motor. As has already been stated the field excitation consists of a shunt and series winding. The shunt winding is connected directly to the line and consequently produces a fixed excitation. The series field is connected in the armature circuit and its magnetic flux depends upon the value of the armature current. Unlike the series motor the compound motor has a safe maximum speed so that it will not run away on no load. The speed of the compound motor may be controlled by adding a resistance in the armature for a decrease in speed and by adding a resistance in the field circuit for an increase of speed. This motor also has the characteristic of a high starting torque without, as already stated, the danger of excessive speed.

Toledo's Rivoli Theatre Opens Under the Management of Barrett McCormick

THURSDAY evening, August 19, Barrett McCormick opened the new Rivoli Theatre in Toledo in a blaze of glory, the opening being attended by hundreds of invited guests from all parts of the country. The dream of the builders has been that this show place should be a monument to Toledo's progress, and their dream has become a realization. The owners are proud of the fact that they have given Toledoans something for which there has been a long-felt want. No city in America can boast of a greater theatre.

For one year has the Rivoli been in the course of construction, during which time a million dollars were expended. A theatre which for beauty and elaborateness is unsurpassed and which is equaled in size by probably not over six theatres in the entire country is the result.

The Rivoli has a seating capacity of three thousand. It is constructed of steel and concrete, fireproof from foundation to roof. The thirty exits are so arranged as to make the emptying of the theatre in three minutes possible.

Very Large Stage

The stage is one of the largest in the country, being thirty feet high and having an opening forty-one feet wide. Many elaborate stage settings have been provided for already. Aside from the immense auditorium and stage, a large and beautiful lobby has been included. The floors and walls are of marble, while the ceiling is of ornamental plaster. Two box-offices will take care of the crowds. Looking upward from the foyer, which is 25 by 100 feet, is the large dome, the beauty of which is intensified by an especially arranged indirect lighting system. Around this immense shaft on the second floor is the mezzanine floor lounge room, which is even more spacious than the foyer.

The lighting effects are obtained from large polychrome fixtures of colors to blend with the general color scheme carried throughout the entire auditorium, hanging from the ceiling. Decorated in an Italian Renaissance effect, with old rose, gobelin blue and gold predominating, the auditorium has a most pleasing and restful effect upon the eye.

Many Innovations

Other innovations are the cooling and ventilating system, which takes the air coming from outside the building, washes, dries and gives it throughout the building so that it does not vary a single degree. The chairs are oversize, heavily upholstered and the very last word in luxurious comfort. Ladies' boudoirs elaborately fitted are found directly off the lounge rooms, and huge smoking rooms have been provided for the men. There is a ballroom on one of the lower floors in which patrons may enjoy dancing as well as the show. Orchestras will furnish continuous music and no extra charges are made for admission.

An Auspicious Opening

Many of the city officials were present at the birthday celebration of the Rivoli. Mayor Cornell Schrieber made the dedicatory address, in which he lauded the efforts of the owners, Messrs. Sun, Olson and James, and Manager McCormick spoke of the progress of the "movies" from bygone days when the cinema was little more than a bumpy magic lantern up to the big productions and beautiful theatres of today.

And while we are on the subject of "McCormick" (everyone knows him—he comes to Toledo after four years at the Circle at Indianapolis, and before that had an intensely interesting and varied career as newspaper man, writer, director and a lot of other things), the writer wants to say that never has he seen a cooler, calmer man under the rush and hustle attendant to the opening of a big house.

speaks of. I had something happen up here last week that may interest some of the readers. I had been off for a week on a vacation and I have had a man learning, a man I can depend on. He ran the show for me. Well when I was away another fellow had been telling the owner (not the manager) that he was an operator but had not operated for a couple of years but would like to start in again, so he comes up one evening to see how it was and he could not even thread up the machine but he claimed that it was on account of being used to the old Edison machine (here are four men in town that claim to be operators but have never seen anything but the old Edison hand-wind machines). Well when I got back I got orders to teach this gentleman but I guess you know just what I did.

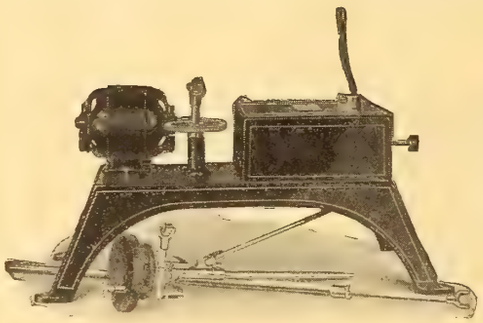
Am enclosing a cue sheet for change overs that I have been using for a while. I also have an idea of my own for dissolving the picture. I saw something similar to it in the NEWS for July 3rd. It is very much alike. As far as punch holes and bad film this is a fright up here especially the Fox Films. The last three Sunshine Comedies have been bad. The first one, "A Waiter's Wasted Life," I only made 64 splices in before I could run it through the machine. It sounds like fiction but it is the honest truth. The second was better. There were only 57 splices and the third I gave up counting as it took me over one hour to go over two small reels. I always go over the film before running them, will not take chances to run them first. Well, I have a whole lot more I could tell you about things up here but am afraid I am tiring you with this and my poor writing and spelling so will quit for this time with best regards to you and fellow operator.

New Reel Designed to Eliminate Film Injuries Received from Undue Take-up Tension

Original Boylan Even Tension Reel Appears in Improved and Perfected Form

It is as great an accomplishment to take a good product and materially improve it as to make the original article. The Boylan Even Tension Reel was a good reel and created a fine name for itself when it was being manufactured and sold by its inventor, Gove Boylan. In its perfected and improved form, carrying the combination name of Simplex-Boylan it is a reel even better than the original.

Following the usual custom, one of the reels was given to the Technical Department of the NEWS for testing and inspection. This test was more severe than would be encountered in actual practise. For instance, the film was caught up just as it left the lower sprocket and a loose loop allowed to form momentarily. When this loop was released the reel sprang into action, doubling its speed and taking up the excess film until the latter became taut. At this point the reel slowed down and rotated normally, taking up the film in perfect order. Throughout this test the "take-up" on the machine itself was screwed down tight, which is the proper mode of operation with the Even Tension Reel.



Many projectionists, through actual use are acquainted with the original Boylan reel. The Simplex Boylan in construction and design incorporates several obviously good features, among them being the method of securing the wooden hub, and the ingenious scheme which makes it possible to use the reel on the rewinder.

Fig. 1—Simplex-Boylan Reel showing steel wire construction

The drawings show the four screws which pass through both end plates and the wooden hub and which are secured on one end by nickel-plated nuts. The specially treated wooden hub, in the new form of reel rubs against a die-casting instead of a wood bearing. If it ever becomes necessary to replace the wooden hub

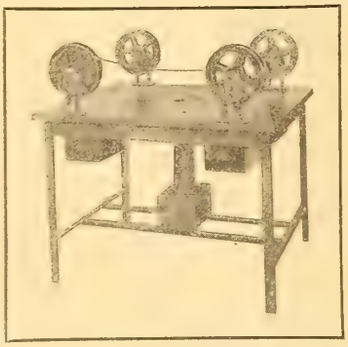
A Real Automatic Arc Control



The Peerless Automatic Arc Control is made for use on all projectors having direct current at the arc. The device is so sensitive that less then one sixty-fourth of an inch increase in gap will start the motor and bring the carbon back to the proper position. Operation is so slow and delicate that the carbon movement is not noticeable to the eye.

Practically frees the operator from giving any attention to the arc, and enables him to attend to other duties. Durably made of best materials. Can be adjusted to maintain any desired arc gap.

this may be easily accomplished by removing the four rods and slipping another hub over them. Thus there is no need of throwing away the whole reel if this one part becomes worn.

In its capacity to withstand punishment the new reel is without an equal. Due to its peculiar construction whereby the sides are constructed of cold rolled wire as shown in Fig. 1, the reel cannot be permanently injured by being dropped from the machine or bench. Although it might be distorted slightly by such usage it could be easily sprung back into position by pressing on the sides out-of-shape. Because of the same construction there is no chance for the film to be torn or scratched by sharp edges since the edge of the Even Tension Reel is a round smooth wire.

From the general design of the reel it can be seen that in rewinding if no special attachment were used, the speed would be slow, inasmuch as the motion would be by friction only. This is taken care of in the Simplex Boylan by a simple cross bar which spans the spindle hole and engages the pressed steel side plates of the reel. With this spanner in place the reel may be turned on the rewinder as rapidly as desired.

With the need for more satisfactory reels in the projection room becoming more and more apparent, this Even Tension Reel will be welcomed by a host of projectionists.

The Boylan Reel was a good reel, but the Simplex Boylan is enough better to find a place in every projection room in the country. In design, finish and performance it has the entire endorsement of this department.

Has a Misty Screen

CARL WRIGHT, Sac City, Iowa, writes: Some time ago I received a letter from the News offering free advice to those who were not quite satisfied with their screen results and I have decided to take advantage of said offer as I am dissatisfied with my projection.

My picture appears to have a mist or scum in front of it and it is impossible to bring it to a sharp focus. I have tried to eliminate this fault by setting the shutter in different positions and by using different combinations of condensers but without success. Up until January of this year our "juice" was supplied through a generator driven by a gas engine and I had no difficulty getting a steady sharp picture but now we are using a 7½ h.p. motor to drive the generator and the light is unsteady.

Now I'll give you a line-up of what I have and possibly you can find out where the trouble lies. I am using a Powers 6A and a Powers 6B. Both machines are new and put on a rock steady picture. I pull about 50 amperes at the arc with ⅝" carbons above and 5/16" silver tips below. The throw is 88 feet and the picture a trifle over 9 x 12. The condensors are 6½ and 7½ with a 6" projection lens. Now, I may be using the wrong condensor combination although I have tried several different ones. What I wish to know is this: What size should my condensers be? How far should center of condenser be from the aperture plate? How far from aperture should shutter be placed? How many revolutions per minute should drive wheel have running at normal speed? If you can give me a bit of advice after reading this rough description I will feel greatly obliged.

Reply:

We do not believe from what you have said that the trouble can be in your generating set. If anything, the light from the motor driven set should be more steady than from your gas engine driven set as the driving torque of the former is much more uniform.

Your optical system seems to be O.K. Your condensers are the right sizes. The trouble must lie in your objective lenses. If the misty appearance was found in only one machine we would judge that someone had experimented with the objectives and in reassembling it had placed the elements in the wrong positions. There seems to be something mysterious about objective lenses that make many beginners at the game want to take them apart to see what makes them go. And in replacing the several elements it takes but one mistake to seriously affect the screen results.

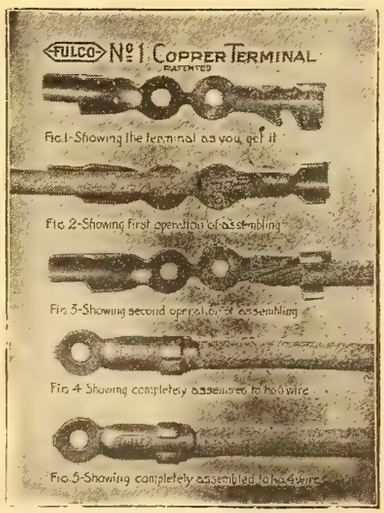
Stop, Look and Listen Suggestions

E. Paulson, Ketchikan, Alaska, writes:

I want to thank you for publishing my letter "From Alaska." Will write a few lines about a Stop, Look and Listen for the projectionist, to see if you agree with me. I just saw a sign that set me to thinking. So will give you my idea of it. So, here goes:

Stop to consider your responsibility, not only to get the best picture—possibly—but also that you are responsible for the lives of the people attending the show. Your manager and the people in whole may not think so, but in case of a big fire, who gets the blame? You will hear, nine times out of ten, he is a poor operator.



Look over your film, new or old, before running them. Something may be the matter with them. Look over your machine, electrical apparatus and connections every so often. It may save you lots of trouble and extra work.

Listen to what people say about your show and listen to suggestions. You may be able to use some of it one way or another.

Editor:—Your version of "Stop, Look and Listen" as applied to the projectionist is well worth consideration, and every projectionist would do well to add this to his code of rules as a means to better projection.

Camera Laboratory — Picture Making — Studio Technique

A New Camera Drive Motor Especially Adapted to the Bell and Howell Camera

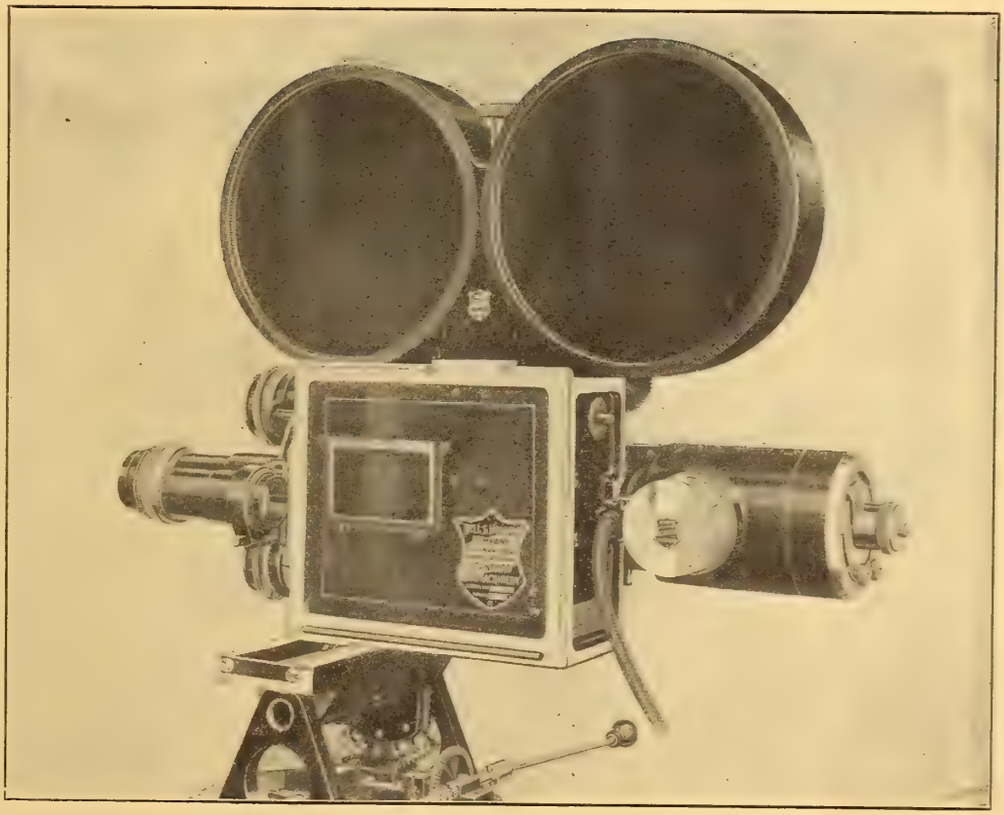
A Device That Accomplishes What Many Designers Have Previously Attempted To Do

WITH the adoption of machinery to replace the human equation in the handling of film throughout the laboratory and cutting rooms, notable of which has been the Developing and Splicing Machines, considerable attention is being focused on the utilization of power driven cameras. From a technical viewpoint the camera is undoubtedly the vital link in the production of motion pictures and heretofore was operated entirely by hand, due principally to the lack of reliable apparatus of a suitable design to cover the exacting requirement necessary for a duty of this nature. Long ago the foremost designers of motion picture machinery anticipated the ultimate necessity for a motor driven camera and have been conducting exhaustive experiments toward this end, the Bell & Howard Company being the first manufacturers to offer to the trade a complete device embodying both electrical and mechanical features which admirably fit their Cinemotor for all purposes incident to the propulsion of their camera for all classes of work.

Owing to the nature of the duty imposed upon a camera drive motor and the extreme uniformity of action required, regardless of outside influences, both electrical and mechanical, its development for use with the camera demanded an application of skill covering problems that were somewhat different from the usual equations met with in applied mechanics.

Being primarily an electric motor and susceptible to the disturbing factors of electric phenomenon that results in irregularity of action, one of the first difficulties to overcome was the resultant variable speed due to the above contingencies. Obviously a constant camera speed was essential and in order to insure this the designers of the Cinemotor employ a centrifugal governor of extreme sensitiveness which automatically maintains any speed of operation predetermined by the Speed Regulator. This phase of operation is vitally important as it is apparent that other electrical apparatus in close proximity and using heavy currents, is usually operated from the same circuits resulting in a wide fluctuation of voltage. Variable speeds are obtained at will by the application of the potentiometer principle thus maintaining a constant torque.

The Bell & Howard Cinemotor consists of an aluminum housing suitably shaped to hold the motor and controlling device and designed with a view of harmonizing with the other equipment both in compactness and pleasing lines. The weight being approximately four and one half pounds, the total weight of the outfit is not appreciably increased.



The Cinemotor is attached directly to the rear of the camera engaging with the cam shaft commonly known as the trick crank shaft and is held in position by readily accessible screws.

The device incorporates a combination switch used for either alternating or direct current and also determines the direction of rotation of the motor. Positive variable speeds are obtained by the manipulation of a control knob carrying an index hand traversing a scale calibrated in pictures per second. The scale is graduated to cover a latitude of from one to thirty-two pictures per second. A clutch is provided for engaging or disengaging the power shaft from the camera shaft without necessitating the stopping of either.

A feature of primary importance to the camera man is the extreme flexibility of action, as for instance a reduction or increase in exposures of from twenty-four to four per second or vice versa may be made instantaneously.

Apparently a radical change like this would have to be accompanied by a change of the shutter in order to insure negatives of even densities, this is taken care of by hand attachment for changing the shutter opening. The Hand Dissolve Attachment whose function is to vary the shutter opening of the camera without employing the automatically operated dissolve for this purpose, is equipped with movable limit stops in order to predetermine the exact opening in degrees to which the shutter is to be set when the speed of the camera is changed, thus by using the Cinemotor and the Hand Dissolve Attachment in conjunction with each other the manipulation of the shutter is greatly facilitated.

In point of rigidity the Cinemotor has proven remarkably free from all vibrations which is due in a large measure to the unique design and high state of equilibrium attained by all the moving parts.

Camera with Cinemotor attached

Camera Motor Drive

Modern methods of picture making and presentation demand the utmost in artistic effects and frequent dissolves, fade-outs and visonary effects are very much in vogue at the present time, the manipulation of these being usually attended to by the assistant camera-man necessitating two or three to each camera. In this connection the value of the Cinemotor will readily be appreciated as it allows the camera-man ample freedom for working the auxiliary apparatus and relieves him entirely of the duties of actually turning the camera.

With producing units of a smaller magnitude or where it is imperative that the director operate at a great distance from the camera the advantages afforded by the use of the Cinemotor are very apparent. In the production of comedies the variable speed feature will probably be most appreciated and can be relied upon without the least apprehension as to results obtained.

The unlimited possibilities offered by a device of this kind, along the lines of remote control of the camera, is commendable to the producer on large exterior sets as the distance at which it can be operated depends only on the length of the connecting cord supplying current and many ingenious applications of the motor drive can be devised by the adept camera-man, thus increasing the general efficiency of the camera staff.

Stage Setting in Metro's Hollywood Studio Reveals Unusual Color Tones

Tauszky Photographic Color Scheme Used to Make Photography More Realistic

WITH the completion of "White Ashes," the Luther Reed story now under production at Metro's West Coast studios, picture patrons will be given a first glimpse of a series of elaborate sets of a variety never before attempted.

D. Anthony Tauszky, famous portrait painter, has provided a series of backgrounds in accordance with a "camera color chart." Every scene is painted with a view to the requirements of the camera and, although the picture will possess the richness of warm color tones, it actually has been produced without the use of any but the primary "camera colors" designated by Mr. Tauszky.

The story opens with an elaborate banquet scene in which all the liquids that became obsolete with the death of John Barleycorn are much in evidence. About the circular table passes an endless array of Grecian maids who, clad in the all but invisible costumes of other days, serve the guests.

It was a setting which, judged by all ordinary picture theories, would have called for a riot of color to indicate the wealth and lavish expenditures of the host. But Mr. Tauszky insisted that the "camera color" scheme be used in it, with the result that the set, as it stands on one of the enclosed stages on the company's Hollywood grounds, looks more like a photograph than reality. It reveals only the color tones that are to be seen on the screen. The mural decorations, furniture and table ornaments run from rich pearl grays to black.

The Tauszky "photographic-color" scheme was first used by the artist in a Metro picture in which Alice Lake is being featured. The story called for a life size semi-draped portrait of the girl-star. Since the plot hinged upon the showing of a perfect likeness of the heroine, and one that might really be recognized as such as soon as flashed upon the screen, it was obvious that the usual sketchy dash of oils on canvas would not serve the purpose.

But another obstacle presented itself in the fact that the oil portrait, as produced with the colors usually drawn upon by the portrait painter, cannot be reproduced by the eye of the camera with anything approaching its original sharpness or contrasts. So Mr. Tauszky painted the portrait with the aid of his "photographic colors," with the result that the portrait tells the story as convincingly as a whole reel of action.

"The whole point is that the camera lens and the human eye do not see color contrasts in the same way," said Mr. Tauszky. "In erecting a set under the present method, the director does not know how it will look on the screen until it has been completed and a trial test made. Then, if it is found that a rich red comes out a dirty black, or a beautiful blue looks so much like white as to provide no contrast when shown with whites, it is necessary to reconstruct the set and make another try at it.

"But if only the colors that are caught by the camera are used, we know as soon as a set is completed just how it will look. There is no such thing as experimenting under this system."

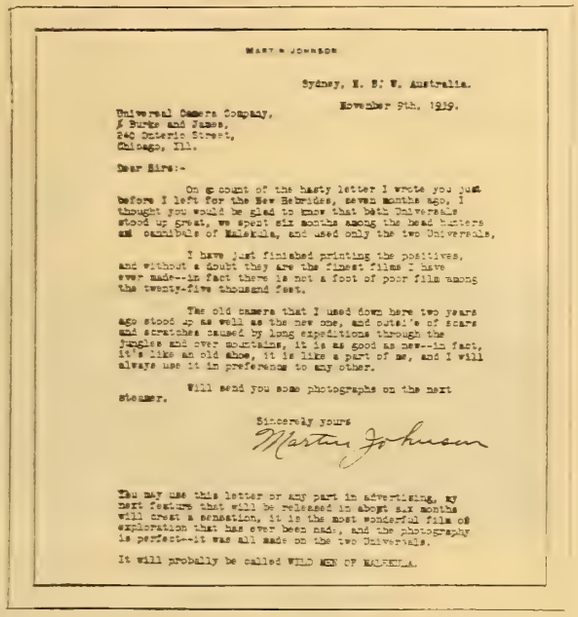
ANIMATED CARTOONS, by E. G. Lutz. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York, N. Y., 260 pp.

THERE is a wide difference between book-maker as an author and an expert as an author. In the former case it is often possible to gather facts from here and there and to arrange them—particularly if the author is clever at it—in a pleasing and instructive form. But always there seems to be something lacking, something that can't be readily analyzed but that is present, nevertheless.



But when the author is the possessor of wide and complete knowledge of his subject the result comes so much nearer to what the reader wants.

In this book by Edwin G. Lutz, the author is thoroughly equipped for his work and he accomplishes what he sets out to do. The book will be found to be interesting alike to the worker in the motion picture industry and to the outsider who has seen and wondered just how the popular animated cartoon of today is put together.

Mr. Lutz takes the reader back to the beginning of the cartoon, which, by the way, was not so long ago, and with the help of a large number of excellent illustrations carries him through the first stages of the art. With wonderful clarity the author explains the somewhat techni-

Dear Sirs:-

On account of the hasty letter I wrote you just before I left for the New Hebrides, seven months ago, I thought you would be glad to know that both Universals stood up great, we spent six months among the head hunters and cannibals of Malekula, and used only the two Universals.

I have just finished printing the positives, and without a doubt they are the finest films I have ever made--in fact there is not a foot of poor film among the twenty-five thousand feet.

The old camera that I used down here two years ago stood up as well as the new one, and outside of scars and scratches caused by long expeditions through the jungles and over mountains, it is as good as new--in fact, it's like an old shoe, it is like a part of me, and I will always use it in preference to any other.

Will send you some photographs on the next steamer.

Sincerely yours
Martin Johnson

You may use this letter or any part in advertising, my next feature that will be released in about six months will creat a sensation, it is the most wonderful film of exploration that has ever been made, and the photography is perfect--it was all made on the two Universals.

It will probally be called WILD MEN OF MALEKULA.

'Shooting' the wild men with a UNIVERSAL

THE UNIVERSAL Motion Picture Camera is the favorite camera of the explorer—the man who risks his life to get pictures.

The compactness, strength and reliability of the Universal make it the ideal machine for work where the "going" is rough and conditions are bad. The Universal stands up under the hardest kind of usage and gets perfect film under the most adverse conditions.

Read this letter from Martin Johnson, the intrepid explorer, whose pictures of the savage cannibals of the South Sea Islands create such a sensation. The pictures show him filming the "Wild Men of Malekula." He uses a Universal exclusively.

Write for descriptive booklet of the Universal Motion Picture Camera. It explains why this machine has attained its position as the most efficient motion picture camera on the market.

cal details of actual production and emphasizes the points peculiar to the correct rendition of the individual drawing.

There is a fine chapter on the movement of the human figure which is a study in anatomy in itself. Following that, animal locomotion is similarly treated.

Although some audiences may claim that Plot is unknown to the cartoon Mr. Lutz shows in one section that there is no reason why this belief should be allowed to continue. There can be real plots carried out in much the same way as the plot on the half tone screen.

The remaining chapters are chock-full of hints for the artist who may have been looking with longing eyes at the Animated cartoon. Photography is explained at considerable length with drawings and diagrams showing the processes through which the final cartoon is made to do its droll or instructive action on the screen.

It is surely a book that advances the general knowledge of the craft.

Old Studios Brought Up to Date

BY means of an ingenious arrangement of magnetic switches and special control boxes any old-fashioned studio switchboard equipment can be converted into one which can be remote controlled by using all the present equipment and making some slight alterations and additions.

In order to make this change, it is only necessary to re-sectionalize the bus bars on the various switchboards and "cut-in" circuit, remote control switches of proper capacities.

One objection in the past to using magnetic switches on the stage floor was the noise occasioned by the slamming in and out of the magnets and oftimes interfering with the players or directors. This objection has been overcome in the E-J Electric Installation Company's system where the magnetic switches operate practically noiselessly by use of a special Vacuum Dash Pot. The wear and tear on the switchboard equipment is also minimized by use of the remote control system since the breaking of current and producing of heavy arcs is taken care of entirely by the magnetic switches which are provided with magnetic blowouts and carbon contacts.

On old equipments, the breaking of heav currents and the necessity of special efforts such as lightning, etc., very often means replacal of switch parts or the blowing of fuses, all of which go to interfere and retard production.

The principles of the Remote Control System are by no means new. For the past ten years it has been developed and applied to the largest industrial plants in the world. The steel mills at Gary, Indiana, and at Bethlehem, using hundreds and hundreds of horse-power, emplay remote control for the operation of their equipment because it saves time, and minimizes maintenance expense and delays due to breakdowns.

The importance and necessity of Remote Control was exemplified by its many applications to the equipment uhed by Army and Navy during the recent war. It was not until less than a year ago that it proved its value and superiority as applied to motion picture studio equipment. A few of the advantages of a Remote Control System are as follows:

It gives the director complete command of the lights, eliminating positively the old-time confusion and noise, misunderstanding of signals as well as economic loss occasioned by waste of time on the part of high salaried players and principals. It reduces maintenance charges to a minimum. It makes possible the control of lights from any point by either the cameraman or director personally at the stage. It eliminates shouting, gongs and whistles.

Another noteworthy feature of this system is that if the effect requires that the actor operate the lights on his own stage, he can do so by either pressing a button on the wall or turning on a key under a lamp shade or do whatever the action of the play requires.

A new development in connection with the remote control system is that of the "Monitor" control station which has been developed, designed and patented by J. R. Manheimer of the E-J Electric Installation Company for the new Famous Players-Lasky studio in Long Island City.

In the beginning, remote control systems were equipped with banks of standard push button switches which were easily obtained from stock similar to those used for turning "on" and "off" lighmts in an office. These were made up into large steel boxes which was very cumbersome and did not provide the flexibility which was possible through a system of this kind.

The new Monitor Control Station is a series of special "break back" switches which are thrown from one side to the other or hold in a neutral center position similar to the listening keys on a telephone switchboard.

These stations are ruggedly made and are designed to stand all the abuse which equipment of this kind is subjected to in a studio. This control station is illustrated herein. The Pin Plug Connector Couple at the top permits removing the station from the portable cable so that it is unnecessary to hoist the heavy box out of the way. This connector couple is also of special design and contains as many contact points as there are magnetic switches.

The Left Vertical Key of the control station is a Master which controls the left position of all of the sectional keys. The upper Right Vertical Key is a Master which controls the right position of al lthe sectional keys. By means of both the Master keys, two large groups of lamps can be controlled in one operation. One of the section keys can throw "on" or "off" as many as 24 lamps with the operation of a single key.

Another development in this class of equipment is that of the magnetic switches themselves. In the beginning standard type of apparatus was used but on account of the high inductance of Cooper Hewitt lamps, standard magnetic switches failed to function satisfactorily.

After considerable experimental and research work, the E-J Electric Installation Co. designed and put on the market a magnetic switch would function under all conditions regardless of type or kind of studio lamps to be controlled, and in addition would operate under 100% overload without any perceptible heating or deterioration.

No. 15

"The Story in the Music"

By Charles D. Isaacson

THIS, if you please, is a continuation of the general subject, "Ways of Announcing Your Music Venture." In addition to the general appeals to the public (as indicated in the NEWS of August 28th) I told of ways of advertising violin music and piano music (September 5th) and orchestra and organ music (September 12th).

This time I want to return to the more general discussions and try to express for your use my most useful method of getting more out of music.

For the purpose I seek to affect in your work, I will therefore talk to you as if I were a theatre manager and you were a theatre-goer. You in turn can then repeat this message to your people in advertising, stories, etc. Conservatively speaking, I can tell you that I have packed four years of newspaper stories, advertisements and lectures to 2,000,000 people into the following concentrated extract of the idea.*

Everybody admits that music is the universal language—that the same compositions which delight Americans are equally pleasing to Italians, French, Germans, and all civilized peoples. If it is the universal language, however, only a few have realized just how truly this applies. Music talks to every listener in a way which is intelligible and can be translated into words, pictures, actions. Without regard to nationalistic and racial language, music speaks in a higher tongue which is clear to all who learn the secret of listening.

Music speaks in three ways: Through the brain, the heart and the body. The physical effects of music are too well known to be repeated again—you know that a march time sets your feet into motion, a dance theme makes every last dancing boy and girl swing the shoulders, music in factories succeed in making machine workers move faster.

The spiritual effect of music is the accepted idea among all people. It uplifts the listener—it creates a mood of joy or sorrow or anxiety or anger.

But the intellectual effect:—Here is where we come to the big idea. Music makes ideas and communicates them from musician to listener. Instead of using words,—notes and combinations of notes are employed. These notes are capable of making any story or play or pictures, and where the great composers are understood it is seen that they are also novelists, storywriters, dramatists and even motion picture makers.

There is nothing mysterious about this idea; nothing to worry you or make you annoyed that you cannot understand it. Ask any violinist to imitate the crying of a baby—it is the easiest thing in the world. Ask him to play a laugh, a sigh, a moan, a fretting sound. Ask the pianist to represent for you the playing of chimes, the chriek of an engine, the rumble of thunder. Ask the harpist to play the sound of a breeze rustling the trees, the sound of a mountain brook, the whisper of fairies. Ask the clarionet player to represent a shepherd call, the lowing of cattle, the sob of an old man. So you will understand that in music instead of describing ideas and action, as with words, the thing itself is actually reproduced in symbols. Thus when you hear a certain composition, and this idea has gained upon you, will you discover that you are actually seeing the story, the play, the description.

The trouble with music and the public is this: that a few snobbish conservative people have tried to keep music a thing for the aristocrats and the wealthy set—have tried to make music a mysterious and difficult to understand idea. These few persons have done a great deal of harm. How could ordinary, common sense audiences as are made up by the great majority of people expect to sit down to a symphonic concert or an instrumental recital and for an hour and a half or more simply hear strange sounds? Without meaning?

I would have a very little idea of the great masters of music whom I now revere and adore, if I thought that all they planned to do, was string together a lot of notes which didn't sound out of harmony—and had no story or idea or emotion in mind. But this is not the case. I have known some of the most famous composers of the present decade and I have examined pretty thoroughly into the lives of the masters, Beethoven, Mozart, Wagner, etc., and I can say it as a fact that every famous composition was written with a picture, a story or a definite idea in mind of some sort.

Once the average man gets this thought with him, music becomes a different world. When he realizes, that the music he is about to hear contains a message which he can understand and interpret in his own of thinking, music then becomes what it ought to be now—the nearest and dearest method of being entertained and educated. He sees that he has the key to the whole situation. He wants to find the story in the music. Now we come to the point which makes music such an extraordinary joy to all people.

The story in the music has variations to suit the listener. Let me explain this more in detail

A professor of history and a bricklayer would find in music different variations of the same idea. In essentials the story would be the same, but in dress and details it would be different. Thus the professor and the bricklayer would both realize that a tragic element were being enacted, but the professor might make it the story of an Emperor who had been taken from his kingdom and bemoans his fate, while the bricklayer might find it to be the story of a mother who had lost her son and was bemoaning her fate. Another composition might be interpreted by the professor as a description of Niagara Falls, by the bricklayer as the noise of a building in progress. In both excitement, volume of sound would be present.

When you read a story or see a play you only see what is there. Your own imagination doesn't get a chance. And whether you agree with me or not at this minute the greatest pleasure of all is where your own ideas and imagination get a chance to exert themselves. In music, there is the composer's original mood and reaction to an idea plus the interpreter's idea (the musician who is playing the composition has his own feelings) plus your own environment and point of view.

Now the theatre which presents fine music to its public and enables that public to gain a conception of the meaning of music—the stories that are in it—is doing not only a big educational and uplifting work for America, but is making itself the natural gathering place for those who seek the enjoyment and pleasure of exercising their imaginations and minds and hearts in music. It is a great game! You would be amazed to see audiences after they have this idea in their minds. They are working out their own stories—heads back, eyes closed sometimes, ears open. The music carries them out of themselves and they "come back" refreshed and rejuvenated. Tired out men and women forget their worries in being taken out of themselves by the music. And they come back for more.

 I urge every musician to read this and the preceding issues very carefully. Several scores of conductors and musicians have written to me asking me to explain HOW TO SELECT MUSIC FOR THE SCREEN. If every musician could digest and thoroughly understand the meanings in this article, I feel that he would have no difficulty in making up his cue sheets from his own music library and do it successfully and to the best interests of himself and his audiences.*

I know because I have met the condition thousands of times with millions of people. At first the people may take the idea with a "grain of salt," but when you show them by your own descriptions and they see how accurately your description fits then they are ready to try their own stories. And once they do this—they belong to you—they are slaves to the habit—they will come back for more and more and more.

To show you what I mean, I shall publish a few of the Music Pictures I have used myself—my imagination at work—may interpretations. These you may use in your programs in connection with these popular classics. I will begin with the most popular "classic" piano number of the day:

C Sharp Minor Prelude (Rachmaninoff)

An American soldier is taken prisoner. He is now heard in the cell, as the little stream of light breaks through the tiny window. He stirs, his heart is breaking; he realizes that he is the victim of his hated enemies. He rises, paces up and down slowly at first, and then furiously. Finally losing all control of himself, he rushes up and down and beats his hands and head against the walls. Madly he cries out—he has lost all control. But useless is the man's agitation. Worn out, he drops to his knees and then sinks to the ground, and there, barely breathing, barely living, he realizes his utter desolation, his complete defeat. No hope—there is no hope—no hope.

Here is a very much used violin solo:

Tambourine Chinois (Kreisler)

Down a narrow street in Chinatown the little mandarin comes. Dark the streets, except for the lanterns hanging out of the windows—see! He walks with tiny steps, oh, so little steps. His pigtail is down his back and his eyes are glittering. He comes to the house of the lady—and stops underneath her windows. (Yes, even in China they have sweethearts). He lifts his little tambourine and strums the twanging strings and sings—sings in a squeaky, piercing voice, which sounds so sweet to the lady. See her peeping out from the window in delight. Then he goes away, the little mandarin, but he comes again, with his little steps, and then the lady joins him.

Here is a very authentice idea for one of the Liszt Hungarian Rhapsodies:

Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2

See the tents of the Gypsies. It is early morning. The dawn rises slowly, the mist disappears. Slowly a man creeps out from one of the tents and stretches as he surveys the new day. He is soon followed by others and in a few moments the encampment has sprung into life. Bonfires are lighted. Breakfast is soon sizzling. The day advances. The men go out to hunt. The women sit over their work, tending to the little ones. There is the sound of an argument. There is the sound of a mad fight. Laughing, cursing, singing.

Just a typical day among the gypsies. Toward nightfall the band gathers around the bonfires, and the crackle of the wood can be heard in the still air. The dancers jump up and swirl around and the fiddlers tune up, while the Hungarian gypsy airs resound. Off in the distance, in the dark of the wood, a pair of romantic lovers escape from the rest and tell each other the love that is in their hearts. Again at the fire, the community at large is voicing its loud-mouthed ideas. And soon it is time to go to sleep again, drowsily to sleep.

Here is something more ambitious—an orchestral story—for one of the symphonic works. Note that the description in addition to just telling a story, attempts to give an idea of the meaning of the symphonic form.

First Symphony of Beethoven

The symphony is the final goal of all composers—it is music in its purest, noblest, most ambitious form. Nothing but music is in it, and the whole drama of life can be expressed in its tones.

Greater than any mere solo or combination of instruments, the whole family of instruments are participants of the action.

In the opening of the First Symphony, there is a brief introduction. A dissonance off the key would seem to indicate that Beethoven was describing the state of things about him and announcing that he was about to lift himself into a new expression. He was not happy, but he wanted to be. The rest of the symphony has been called an idyl—we might say, and idyl of Beethoven's imagination. The second movement is written in fast time, allegro; the strings take up a brilliant theme that is somewhat descriptive of flying. One feels that the spirit is winging itself into flight, encountering the joys of anticipation as described by the flute and wood wind. But the spirit meets with obstacles. You can hear the bass instruments calling ominously. "Be not too free—beware of what lies below you!"

Then it would appear as though the spirit found a new plane. In the andante cantabile movement slow, gentle, and oftentimes sad, the spirit of Beethoven is in one of those love moods, so characteristic of the man, a love devoid of all self and sex, a love as chivalrous as the knits of old entertained for their ladies. The violin carries the solo theme; the flutes give voice to the partner of the love episode. Everything is idealistic and wonderful. But Beethoven, always with a sense of humor, realizes that such a love is not for earth, and he has given to the drum a gentle, laughing mockery, a sarcastic monotone. This monotone is taken up by the other instruments, though the love theme scarcely seems to notice it, and goes right on.

The third movement is a minuet—the most noted part of the first symphony. This is a different plane than the andante. In the andante the lovers merely sang to each other as if from far distant places; but in the minuet there is a dance, a scherzo, that is full of the joy of life. The lovers are whirling and all the world joins in the dance. The violins, the viola, and the basses take up the principal theme, and we feel that not only the love spirits are engaging in the festivity, but that the flowers and the trees and the brooks and all of nature are laughingly forgetting every care and woe in the world, in the abandon of the dance. In the last movement, the finale, it seems as though the lady is not what she appeared to be. She is a coquette. Well, it was a pleasant idyl, it gave voice in the andante to the noble love avowals of the poet soul. In the minuet there was that glorious rythym of the dance; but now the illusion is gone.

Yet it's laughable—even the poet himself laughs. She a coquette, this lady of the angelic mien; she makes love on and on to all about him, and he laughs, the poet laughs. So, back to earth comes the spirit; back from an adventure, that was nothing after all but a summer idyl.

Questions, Answers and Discussions

"There has been a great deal of controversy recently with reference to the tax imposed by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers on exhibitors using certain copyrighted music.

We understand that some exhibitors have paid this tax, while others have protested, and i some cases have declined to use any music coming under provisions of the above organization. We notice, too, from recent trade papers that certain producers have issued instructions that in the construction of their cue sheets any music subject to tax must be eliminated.

We have recently received a demand for payment of this tax, which you know is based on the theatre seating capacity, and before we take any action we would like some expression from you covering your opinion as to the fairness or unfairness of the request, together with other recommendations which you might offer.

It occurs to us that in the use of this music the exhibitor is popularizing same, and in that way is benefiting both the author and publisher."
—A. B. Cook, Majestic Theatre Co.

Your letter of the 11th brings up an important question which confronts the theatre managers of the country, and in as much as the subject is coming to the front at the present moment, I am going to try to answer your letter to the best of my ability as an outsider who is interested neither in the special causes of the manager, musician, or the composer, but in the success of the amalgmation of music with motion pictures.

I have had several letters from the theatres objecting very strenuously to the payment of the tax imposed by the American Society of Composers. Immediately I communicated with that society and later had a detailed discussion with the executive secretary.

I discovered that some three thousand or more theatres have already taken out the license; that most of the important publishers are members, and certainly most of the composers are in the lists.

It is a fact that the best of the present music available to the theatre among copyrighted numbers is protected by the society, and that the theatre which refuses to purchase the license is limited to the smallest percentage imaginable of the worth while copyrighted music.

Of one thing I am convinced; that the society has been justified by due process of law and that the theatre which comes under conflict with rules of the society and uses its music without the license, is open to suit which is bound to go against him. Several cases are sufficient precedent to cause the theatre managers to think a long time before openly using the society's music without the license.

So much for existing conditions.

The society insists that the composer is entitled to payment for the privilege of playing his music; that he is in the same position as the producers of the pictures, and that his revenue will thus count not only in royalties on sheet music, music rolls, and records, but on such performances also.

To be sure, the composer would be lost if he were denied the right of performance, in places like theatres, restaurants, dance halls, etc. The likelihood of the sale of the sheet music, the value to the record or roll manufacturer would not warrant the making of the roll or record.

Knowing the publisher as I do, I am sure you are perfectly justified in saying that the more advertising by performance a composition is given, the larger its sales in other channels.

But are we to figure what are the indirect or even direct results of our actions in this matter? Or are we to look at the matter purely from our own results?

Without this music the picture performance would surely be weakened, and the show as a whole would have less pulling power and less interest to the audience. If the music makes the performance more interesting and has a value, the equasion of the theatre with the composer, ought to be put aside.

The money paid for this license is certainly more than recompensed by the value you rereceive through the music.

You argue that you are advertising the music. "Very well," says the composer, "I do not consider this advertising sufficient pay." Then you have to decide whether the charge made for the performance of the music is an equitable one.

As I understand it the largest theatre in the United States could not pay more than one dollar a day. This figure is certainly trifling and while all of these trifles contribute to the large cost of maintenance and upkeep of your theatre, the question resolves itself in my mind to the simpler point. That is, if the music is valuable to you and the price charged for the license is equitable, you can consider that you have made a fair bargain.

If you advertise music, that is a by-profit. Then you are also advertising the stars whose names you put in electric lights outside your theatre.

I am trying to be perfectly frank and fair with you, and in as much as I am speaking for the Motion Picture News in this connection advising eleven thousand theatres who read these pages, I am open to conviction. If I have overlooked some point or if I have been mislead perhaps by the arguments that have seemed to me to be so important, I wish you would call them to my attention.

Please write to me and let's try to work this matter out together, and then when you have come to the conclusion to accept or decline the license, let me publish the complete correspondence as a guide for all of the theatres of the United States.—C. D. I. Music Editor.

Love Theme: "Love's Old Sweet Song," Molloy
Farm Theme: "Serenade" from "Rural Symphony," Goldmark

IMPORTANT NOTE

Mr. Crawford, organist for Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre, at California, suggests as a farm theme such old characteristics as "Down on the Farm" and "Reuben, I've Been Thinking." As a love theme, Mr. Crawford suggests a popular tune entitled "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm."

Mr. Crawford's selections are from an atmospheric standpoint excellent, but in compiling this musical cue sheet, the editor cannot under any circumstances mention Mr. Crawford's suggestions as official themes for the reason that these compositions are very difficult to obtain at present. However, musicians who are in possession of same should use them in preference to the themes mentioned on this cue sheet.

The editor also suggests that during the various election scenes portrayed in the film, musicians play such numbers as "Hot Time In Old Town" or "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here," or any typical election song popular in their vicinity.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the last twenty weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to May 8, 1920.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"Way Down East"

(David W. Griffith Production—Premiere at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, New York, September 2d)

AFTER tampering with all manner and sort of themes, from the ragged edges of spiritualism to the extreme of beautiful scenic nothings, David W. Griffith has travelled back over the years to find the elementally human and basically thrilling. In "Way Down East" Griffith has produced his first real, all wool, sure-fire "audience picture" since "Hearts of the World."

To call it an "audience picture" is putting it mildly. Never, since the rushing charge and swirl of the Ku Klux Klan scenes in "The Birth of a Nation," has the screen presented anything that will so thoroughly lift spectators, so strongly seize their emotions as the snow-storm and ice-break of "Way Down East." The wind and snow that toss across the screen seem to sweep through an audience; the machine-like tempo of the cuts and flashes finds a reaction in gasps and heartbeats. "Way Down East" captures you by the very spirit of the elemental.

There is a temptation to carp at David W. Griffith; a probably natural desire to find flaws in the work of anyone who is too often referred to as "The Master." The writer will confess that he took his seat at the Forty-fourth Street theatre somewhat in that frame of mind. The attitude was maintained with fair success throughout the first part of the picture. We felt that Griffith was over-stressing the seduction element in an attempt to infuse a "theme" into the hack framework; we still recoil at the brutal frankness of the child-birth scenes; we can't figure out yet just why Griffith is so reckless in cutting and matching long shots and close-ups.

But the hypercritical and cynical pose could not be held firm. Lillian Gish undermined it slowly but surely with a triumph of emotional acting, a delineation of womanhood in torture that was ever in key, never over-played, never so strong that still greater strength could not be brought forth for the scenes that followed. Through scenes that cannot be said to have always escaped dragginess Miss Gish had full command.

Touches of rustic comedy aided in winning the spectator. Where the play's rustic setting offered the opportunity for "hokum," Mr. Griffith accepted the "hokum"—and then gave it a fresh twist that brought real laughs. "Way Down East" moves along as a "pretty good picture" for most of its length—until the gathering storm clouds form a sweep on into a climax that crashes through all bulwarks of the blase.

Griffith has scored with "Way Down East" because in every scene and every title he has made the most of each last drop of the human that the play offered. Never is this more prominent than in his climax. Here he has gone a step further than the play and introduced an ice-break on the Cennecticut River. With the heroine helpless on a cake of ice that is rushing towards the falls, hero floundering along to her rescue, Griffith plays every string in his instrument; almost, one feels, to the point where the suspense might break and turn to a s
But at the precise second Griffith plays his rescue.

Aside from the unlimited credit that must be given to Lillian Gish, too much cannot be said for the merits of the cast that Griffith assembled for "Way Down East." Richard Barthelmess, as the hero, Lowell Sherman, in the role of tempter, stand out. It warms the heart to see Burr McIntosh's consummate art. Creighton Hale surprises with a capable vein of comedy. Vivian Ogden is a village gossip true to life. Mary Hay, Porter Strong, George Neville, Edgar Nelson, and Kate Bruce are others that must be mentioned.

Griffith turned to Anthony Paul Kelly for his scenario. Credit for the photography is given D. W. Bitzer and Hendrik Sartov. The beauty of the pastoral seftings, real photographic gems, and interpolated touches of Prizma color gained applause at the opening performance.—ROBERT E. WELSH.

"The Kick in High Life"

(Lehrman-First National—Comedy—Two Reels)

THIS Henry Lehrman comedy for First National presents an assortment of tried and true tricks, with no original effort being visible anywhere. The slapstick brush is applied quite strenuously. There is considerable whacking of head and the hinter portion of one's anatomy. A bathing pool is used to supply the ducking, and another scene is the extension plank outside the window of a skyscraper. A tiny youngster toddles out to the end and manages to stay there, while the burlesquers inside fight to effect his rescue.

The weakness of this comedy is the absence of spontaneity. The scenes are not inspired. They are conceived and executed for the mere sake of slapstick. It's a knockabout piece with a good deal of tumbling and falling and spanking on the part of the tumblers and spankers. Albert Ray, formerly a star in feature pictures, has the fat part. But it strikes us that he is not exceptionally talented in a comedy direction. He should be used as a straight foil to Charles Conklin or some other player who is gifted with a sense of burlesque. The audience at the Strand, New York, didn't enthuse over the offering with loud guffaws. A trickle of laughter was heard now and then. The fault here is the recourse to old stuff.—LAURENCE REID.

"Edgar Takes the Cake"

(Fourth of the Two-Reel Comedies from the Booth Tarkington Stories, with Johnny Jones Starred—Produced by Goldwyn)

AS real comedies the "Edgars" take the cake with us, and "Edgar Takes the Cake" lives up to its predecessors with Master Johnny Jones growing in finesse as a screen star but showing no apparent desire to "act" which would most certainly detract from a portrayal of Mr. Tarkington's "not the best boy in town or yet the worst."

This number of "Edgar" is just a series of incidents having to do with the delivery of a cake by "Edgar" to one of his sister's young men friends who has been ill. The cake arrives safely but not sound and "Edgar" is taken to task for his careless handling of the article. As an alibi he tells a story founded on a very small portion of fact that he figures may win exemption from a prospective paddling. Later for the benefit of his boy pal and his "girl" he again enlarges on the story. This last bit of fiction proves his undoing. Father overhears and administers an old fashioned spanking.

The offering is not uproariously funny but it is amusing in its humorous incidents that will recall what has happened in the lives of most boys that have now become men, and has been faultlessly acted not only by Johnny but by his supporting cast of children and grown ups. Any audience which has been pleased by the preceding "Edgar" releases will find this one enjoyable.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"Darling Mine"

(Selznick)

OLIVE THOMAS has been given a suitable vehicle in "Darling Mine," her late release on the Selznick program. The story is by John Lynch and Larry Trimble. Larry Trimble directed. In much of the reelage Miss Thomas is shown in the role of a little urchin and in this sort of role she does some of the best work of her career before the camera. "Darling Mine" presents some beautiful photograph and Director Trimble has seen to it that the proper atmosphere invades the picture throughout its reelage. It represents one of Miss Thomas' best screen appearances and the picture represents one of the best from an entertainment standpoint that this star has done in some time. Length 5 reels. —JOSEPH L. KELLEY.

"MILESTONES"
(Goldwyn)

Long on Atmosphere and Scenic Stuff, But Short on Screen Drama

"MILESTONES" as a picture is all that could be expected considering the source from which it came, the famous play of the same name by Arnold Bennett and Edward Knoblock dealing with the age old conflict of ideas and aspirations between youth and old age, especially when viewed from an English standpoint. The production interests like a series of beautiful paintings explained by captions. It impresses with its attention to detail, its splendid atmosphere, its careful costuming, its beautiful scenic backgrounds, its cast of competent players, each as they grow old before your eyes in marking off the milestones of time, 1862, 1885 and 1912, the periods of the story, demonstrating their skill in the art of make-up, but it does not register as real vital screen drama.

The story does not progress except by titles. There is little action until the very last scenes, where some melodramatic mob stuff has been interpolated without adding much to the offering's entertainment values.

Viewed from the standpoint of America we fear also for the story. The wishes of our elders providing they conflict with our own have never been of such paramount importance as to induce us when loving one to marry another. The honor of the family and caste are matters of lesser concern here than in England. Also we care less for tradition and more for our own opinions than do Britishers.

We would say that this is a great picture for English consumption, which reminds us that possibly the producers had this in mind when making it. For American audiences, however, it is apt to be considered a rather dry affair. Its message is going to miss its point. All the appeal it will have for us will be from a historical and scenic standpoint, which is not enough to satisfy present day audiences who are paying real money to be entertained. If "Romance" pleased your patrons this one will. It is very much the same sort of a production, done in about the same way.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Milestones," the famous play of English life with its theme based on the ever existing conflict between the ideas, aspirations and hopes of the aged and the young, has been adapted to the screen by Goldwyn and comes to the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ———— as one of the notable productions of the season.

Enacted by a flawless and carefully selected all star cast, among which is Lewis Stone, Mary Alden, and others of international reputation both on the screen and stage, the picture is a marvel in the matter of the art of make-up. You see the players young, full of vigor with their frock coats, stock collars and gray top hats in the period of 1862. In 1885 they have reached middle age, grown old before your eyes. Again in 1912 you see what has happened when another milestone in their lives has been reached, bent bodies, white hair, wrinkled faces, a change wrought by grease-paint and wigs scarcely believable. "Milestones" is a wonderful series of portraits about which has been woven a story of infinite tenderness and interest. It tells how history repeats itself. How the years change our ideas, our desires, our hopes and our aspirations. Three generations fight the traditions, the wishes of their elders, only to find their position reversed when they themselves have children grown to the age of love and marriage. There is a big vital message for every father and mother in this picture. There is a lecture for every business man grown old in the harness who finds himself opposed to new ideas. See "Milestones" as one of the classics of the year, a picture as rare as a wine of an old vintage.

PROGRAM READER

The charm and audience appeal of "Milestones," the famous stage play by Arnold Bennett and Edward Knoblock, remains in the memories of those who saw it as has that of "The Old Homestead" or "The Music Master." The play was in a class by itself, a classic of real dramatic worth. It is this play that again lives in picture form that will be the attraction at this theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

All that made the stage production a success has been retained in the screen adaptation. The fine contrast of characters, the wholesome logical story with its great message for the elderly who have forgotten the great hopes, desires and aspirations of their youth and now oppose their children as they too were opposed by their parents, is fully as vital in the picture as it was in the play.

A splendid cast, all star in fact interprets the various roles. Lewis Stone is the "John Rhead" and others of quite as much fame and ability, including Mary Alden Lionel Belmore, have important parts. As a production the picture is one of the notable events of all time. Never has a picture been more carefully produced, never a greater attention to detail,especially in the matter of costuming and in securing scenic backgrounds.

CATCH LINES

Ever do the ideas and ideals of youth and age conflict. This is a story of what happened when parents interfered with the love affairs and business plans of their children.

"A FULL HOUSE"
(Paramount-Artcraft)

Stage Farce Loses Its Punch on the Screen

AFTER its life on the stage Fred Jackson's farce, "A Full House," has finally reached the screen with scarcely any of its original humor. While it is a close adaptation insofar as the development of the plot is concerned, the situations, minus the dialogue and the horseplay of clever comedians, carry little entertainment value. As a picture it is not so interesting as when it appeared as a musical comedy under the title of "The Velvet Lady." And that version fell far short of the original. For one thing the part played by Washburn has been emphasized too much to the detriment of the other characters. These figures on the stage were all evenly balanced. And the part of the maid, played with a deep sense of burlesque by May Vokes behind the footlights, is almost neglected in the screen version.

The picture is quite deadly for three reels, after which it brightens and finishes with a fair comedy flourish. Washburn has been playing in good fortune of late, but this picture is certainly not a full house in his hand. It misses fire in several places, due to faulty interpretation. If we must have screen versions of successful farces let us at least have them interpreted with farcical appreciation. The plot hinges upon two traveling bags, one belonging to a newly married husband, the other to a crook. The men pick up the wrong bags upon leaving the train and when the pretty spouse opens hubby's she is somewhat disillusioned. Complications develop with the maid stealing the necklace in order to gain the reward. A policeman comes who, stationing himself at the door, exclaims, "You can come in, but you can't go out!" Which introduces an assortment of characters for the finish.

The picture picks up in interest when the copper comes on the scene. And one or two laughs are generated. A director with a good sense of burlesque could have derived some amusement from the play. Instead he has developed it with a legitimate touch. The result is it never sparkles or moves out of its beaten track. Really the players have nothing to do. Most of them walk around in circles, flying from one room to another, and assume expressions as if they had swallowed large doses of castor oil. The titling is no brighter than the dull situations.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Bryant Washburn's latest picture, at the ———— next ———— is an adaptation of Fred Jackson's stage success, "A Full House." This is a farce-comedy which carries a poker title and offers the star and his capable company plenty of opportunities to amuse the spectator. Mr. Washburn plays the part of a young newly-wed, who is forced to recover a packet of sentimental letters for his friend, Penbroke, in order that the latter might be married to Daphne, with no tangible evidence lying around. Nowell is safely on the train when he accidentally sits down with a crook. When he reaches home the men pick up the wrong bags.

And great is the pretty spouse's surprise when she opens it to find a complete burglar outfit as well as some stolen jewelry. Complications build until nearly everyone is suspected. The crook comes to regain his bag and is caught but only after a policeman has locked everybody in with the warning—"You can come in, but you can't go out!" The picture is breezy and bright and uncorks a deal of fun. Mr. Washburn makes the most of every scene. James Cruze has given the picture an adequate production from Alice Eyton's scenario.

PROGRAM READER

He went away from his young bride and carried a new traveling bag. When he returned he thought he had the same bag. But she discovered it filled with burglar tools and stolen gems. Had she married a crook? She didn't know what to think. Yet she trusted George. He would square himself. But try as he might he only succeeded in building up a tissue of lies. Until finally the entire household, friends, guests, servants were locked up and told not to depart. A policeman was at the door and he said—"You can come in, but you can't go out!" And everyone that came in was compelled to stay. It's a bright, little picture which carries a deal of snap and ginger. Bryant Washburn is the star of "A Full House" which comes here ————.

SUGGESTIONS

You have a corking title to play up here. You can work it with your artist and advertise your picture through means of a poker hand. Put the cards on display in your lobby and ask your patrons if a full house always wins. Emphasize the fact that the picture is an adaptation of Fred Jackson's stage farce of the same name. Play up his name. He has written a lot of screen and stage pieces. You can link up a lot of advertising matter with your title, using it in a way which shows that your house is always full. And it should be more than filled up when "A Full House" is shown. Treat it as a farce-comedy and write it up in a light fashion. Tell that it devolves around men, maids and traveling bags.

"THE ROUND UP"
(Paramount-Artcraft)

Colorful Western With Fatty Arbuckle as Feature Star

IT is going to surprise many picturegoers to discover Fatty Arbuckle (perhaps Roscoe should be the name used exclusively now) in his first feature picture and a serious one at that. Not that Fatty or Roscoe has a serious role, but that the contents of the offering are identical with what has been projected under the classification of "Westerns." This is an adaptation of Edmund Day's popular success in which another Arbuckle (Macklyn to be exact) was the star. The picture differs from the play in the fact that the principal character, "Slim" Hoover, the sheriff, is subordinated. On the stage this figure carried the burden of the story and emphasized its captivating humor.

Fatty Arbuckle appears in the cast, but hardly in the picture. In fact it is Wallace Beery as a sagebrush desperado who walks away with acting honors, though Tom Forman runs him a good race for second position. The humorous qualities of Fatty's part have been lost sight of, though the star is funny enough to extract the necessary humor. But Macklin Arbuckle played the fat sheriff in a semi-humorous manner. The expression he used—"Nobody loves a fat man," made him a distinct personality. One sympathized with him. Fatty Arbuckle plays it as a straight caricature.

"The Round Up" reminds us of the Westerns which established the name of Thomas H. Ince. It abounds in action and whooping cowboy stuff. Desperadoes are present to supply conflict. Guns are toted, villains are chased, and romances figure to some extent. When the serious moments take leave for a brief spell at times, then Fatty Arbuckle comes into the scene and executes some peculiar trick of gesture which accounts for the dash of humor. This note it strikes us could have been used more effectively. There is no denying that the picture is a first class western—one which is abundant in atmosphere and highly colorful backgrounds. It carries for its working plot the idea of a sentimental youth, who by intrigue outwits his best friend for the love stakes. It sends forth quite a bit of suspense, even though it is obvious to a degree. But the acting honors go to Wallace Beery. His personality is seen in nearly every scene until he bites the dust in the climax. Mabel Julienne Scott is an attractive heroine.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Roscoe Arbuckle, who has heretofore been identified with comedies, will come to the ———— theatre next ———— in his first feature play, "The Round Up," a picture version of the play of the same man by Edmund Day. Patrons of the ———— will doubtless remember the offering when Macklin Arbuckle appeared in it. They will remember the characterization of fat "Slim" Hoover, the Sheriff, whom nobody loves, and Fatty Arbuckle in the role is certain to afford the audience a rare treat.

The scenes of "The Round Up" are in the Southwest where the Apaches dwell, and in the development of the plot, Indians, renegades, frontiersmen and young women are employed in vast variety. The theme is one of self-sacrifice and as a result the climaxes are highly dramatic. The picture carries no little humor which is excellently capitalized by Mr. Arbuckle. Slim Hoover is a good-natured, human, likeable fellow who is certain to create the utmost sympathy in the heart of the spectator. The star is supported by a cast including Tom Forman, Mabel Julienne Scott, Irving Cummings and others. Mr. Forman scenarioized the subject while George Melford attended to the direction.

PROGRAM READER

It will interest our patrons to know that Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle will appear at the ———— next ———— in his first feature picture. He has left the comedy field, temporarily at least, to find expression in more serious subjects. "The Round Up," a screen version of Edmund Day's famous play of the same name in which Macklin Arbuckle starred for many seasons, has been selected for his debut. It is a Western laid in Apache land and presents a line of action which is guaranteed to hold the interest. Mr. Arbuckle plays the part of a portly sheriff whom nobody loves. An excellent cast has been chosen to assist him. George Melford has given the picture a splendid production. Come and see Fatty Arbuckle in a new type of picture.

SUGGESTIONS

By making the announcement that Fatty Arbuckle will appear at your theatre in a new type of play for him should be the biggest angle to exploit here. Bring out that he has forsaken comedy to appear in subjects of more serious import. Tell that he has chosen Macklin Arbuckle's famous stage success, "The Round Up," for his debut. Play up this feature, telling the immense hit it made upon the stage. Go after the publicity. Exploit it in newspaper briefs. Go in for atmosphere. Dress your lobby accordingly. Play up the star as much as possible. Tell that it is Western full of action, humor, pathos, thrills and romance.

CATCH LINES

They called him "Slim" Hoover because he was fat. See Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle in the celebrated play, "The Round Up."

"THE BRANDED WOMAN"
(First National)

Plenty of Melodramatic Fireworks in This Sob-Sister Story

NORMA TALMADGE has in "The Branded Woman," a picture of the old, melodramatic school wherein the heroine is forced to pay and pay and pay before she can erase bitter memories from her mind and find ultimate happiness. It is a story which has for its sole appeal the sympathetic interest felt for the harassed woman. She has been brought up under a cloud because of the stigma attached to her mother's name. It is the duty of her grandfather to have her happily married and taken out of the country where the past and future worries will not trouble her. But melodramatic conventions must be obeyed.

On the stage or screen, at least, it has never been good policy for wives to tell their husbands of the clouds that hover over their names. Everything is serene in the household of the young diplomat who has been engineered into matrimony by our heroine's grandfather. They are happy in Paris with their tiny daughter. Then out of the past comes a haunting shadow in the shape of her mother's partner. He will recoup his losses through blackmail. And so the wife pays in jewels, tears and heartaches. She has no faith in her husband knowing the truth. When he does discover a trick or two and being ignorant of past affairs, the jig is up and accusations are in order. He denounces her and a separation takes place. When the heartaches of both have been allowed full expression a reconciliation takes place and the story is over.

The offering resembles an old-fashioned "pot-boiler," when it was fashionable to draw the characters sharply—to differentiate them distinctly in terms of black and white. The heroine certainly always wore a halo, and the villain had cloven hoofs. The action never leaves its well-worn track and depicts a monotonous series of sequences. The shadows are brought out distinctly. In order to extract the last ounce of sympathy for the distressed heroine, Miss Talmadge plays the part with the utmost feeling, but it hardly measures up to the mark. Her name and talent will doubtless popularize it, but the patrons aren't going to take away any great recollections. Percy Marmont as the husband, Vincent Serrano as the blackmailer, and George Fawcett as the grandfather, contribute effective work.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Oliver D. Bailey's play, "Branded," is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— as a motion picture under the title of "The Branded Woman," and offers Norma Talmadge with a role which demands the utmost in histrionic capabilities. The star extracts a great deal of feeling from the character of Ruth Sawyer, who is forced to go through life with the stigma of her mother's bad name. Circumstances compel Ruth to flee America and happiness is her reward when she accepts the young diplomat. Courtenay, for her husband.

But this happiness is of short duration since some of her shadows from the past come to haunt her. In the end, however, she is safe from the clouds of yesterday. "The Branded Woman" permits Miss Talmadge to express nearly every emotion known to a feminine heart. The picture offers a goodly number of tense situations which develop into a climax of gripping dimensions. There is a good moral established too, which points out that no truths should be hidden when one takes a partner for life. The star is excellently supported by Percy Marmont, Vincent Serrano and George Fawcett. Anita Loos and Albert Parker adapted the play, while the latter directed.

PROGRAM READER

She was happy in boarding school. The sunshine, the friendships were hers, until a shadow of her mother's past came to haunt her. It brought with it storm clouds. The girl was forced to leave. In order to escape these black shadows she went to Europe and found happiness until the oppressive shadows again broke the sweet illusions. What happened? This you will find out when you come to the ———— theatre next ———— and see Norma Talmadge in "The Branded Woman," a picture of a woman's search for happiness when the whole world seemed black. In the cast are Percy Marmont, Vincent Serrano, George Fawcett and others. This picture permits the star to display the whole range of her histrionic capabilities. Don't miss t.

SUGGESTIONS

Here you have Norma Talmadge—a sure box-office attraction. Play up the fact that the picture permits her the whole range of her well-endowed histrionic capabilities. Play up the title and treat it as a moving drama of a woman's search for happiness.. Play up the sympathetic character of the heroine. Tell that her name was branded because of her mother's mode of life. Bring out that the shadows haunted her but that happiness came to her at last. The title is a winner and is sure to bring them in. But Norma Talmadge doesn't need any great boosting. Her name in lights is a magnet which draws the crowds.

"ONCE A PLUMBER"
(Universal)

Average Comedy Which Should Interest

LYONS AND MORAN have produced an average comedy feature in "Once a Plumber." The principal fault with the picture lies in the fact that the story is lacking in farce comedy incidents.

Although these situations appear, they are rather infrequent and with the exception of a few scenes are not spontaneous. However, the picture will interest, for the reason that it is well directed and acted, has a very smooth continuity and shows that attention has been given to the arrangement of sets and the selection of exteriors.

The stars are excellent in the characters of the two plumbers who try to enter society by the wrong door and receive a "bump," in the form of a trick, which is played upon them by a scheming millionaire and which nearly lands them in jail.

They have forsaken their former sweethearts, have become enamored of two society "queens" and are getting along "luciously," when they are discovered by their loved ones.

The latter in jealous rage inform the townsfolk, who enter the house of the millionaire, seize the imposters and in a very funny comedy situation, beat them and tear their clothes to shreads.

Lyons and Moran are subdued in their acting throughout and have the right idea in selecting stories of the better class variety where slap-stick is eliminated.

George B. Williams in the role of the scheming millionaire does some convincing character work and Lillian Hackett, Ethel Ritchie, Edna Wilson and Jane Elliott, four pretty ingenues, are good foils for the stars.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

THE CAST

Felix O'Day ..... H. B. Warner
Lady Barbara O'Day ..... Marguerite Snow
Annette Borney ..... Lillian Rich
Austin Bennett ..... Ray Ripley
Jules Borney ..... Karl Formes

Directed by Robert Thornby.
Story by F. Hopkinson Smith.
Scenario by Fred Myton.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Lyons and Moran in their latest Universal comedy, "Once a Plumber," will appear at the ———— theatre on ———— of next ————.

That these two light comedies are reaching the highlights of their profession in farce comedy cannot be more clearly demonstrated than in their latest production.

In order to make mirth and laughter the predominating feature, the two stars have forsaken the flashy dressed "tailor mades" which they wore in "Everything But the Truth" and "La La Lucille," two riotous farces and descended to the garb of the plumber.

Ambition enters the mind of one of the young aspirants to highest honors and this causes all the trouble.

He has outgrown the environment in which lead pipes and village maidens predominate and when opportunity presents itself in the form of a millionaire who has a job for the boys in his home, it is accepted.

The young gallants repair to the millionaire's home where fun, intrigue and dramatic moments have their fling.

All of which means a pleasant evening's entertainment.

PROGRAM READER

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran will appear at this theatre on ———— of next ———— in their latest Universal feature "Once a Plumber."

That these two comedians are gradually scaling the ladder to the top rung of popularity cannot be more clearly demonstrated than in their latest success.

The feature contains about all the necessary ingredients for a pleasant evening's entertainment and concerns the lives of two young plumbers whose worldly ambitious lead them to social, financial and romantic heights, from which they drop with a dull, sickening thud.

In this picture, as in all previous productions of Lyons and Moran, the stars have never resorted to horse-play or slap-stick, giving the audience credit for intelligence and at the same time endeavoring to give them a good story with comedy interest.

The feature is well produced and has a big cast among whom are George B. Williams, Sidney Deane, Jeff. Osborne, Lillian Hackett, Edna Mae Wilson, Jane Elliott and Ethel Ritchie.

SUGGESTIONS

Although this comedy is of the average variety it should interest your patrons and give them interesting entertainment.

Play up the name of Lyons and Moran and make a point in your advertising that these two comedians are given to the better class of production, eliminating entirely the horse-play that is so common in comedies

Use the telephone or send post cards to the officers of the various trade unions in your town telling them that Lyons and Moran, the Universal Comedians would like to demonstrate to them the new ways of "wiping a joint," etc.

Place as many stills as you can in prominent places. They will attract attention.

CATCH LINES

"See how wise we are, we deserve to be millionaires." How did their scheme turn out? See Lyons and Moran in their latest production "Once a Plumber."

Plumbing is the best policy for plumbers," said the young workman after he had had his experience. See "Once a Plumber."

See Lyons and Moran in their latest Universal feature, "Once a Plumber," at the ———— theatre. They will drive away dull care and send you home in a happy frame of mind.

He was not satisfied with the plumbing trade; he wanted to be a millionaire. See Lyons and Moran in their latest Universal success, "Once a Plumber," and find out how the scheme turned out.

"FELIX O'DAY"
(Hampton-Pathe)

A Good Production From All Angles

H. B. WARNER has put another good one over in "Felix O'Day" which is suitable for any house regardless of locality.

The picture is full of incident, has its dramatic moments and strong heart interest. And then to give it contrast a pretty little love story is introduced which acts as a relief to the heavier drama.

The story which is from the pen of F. Hopkins Smith is exceptionally interesting, although not entirely new, taking for its theme the wronged husband who comes to America in search of the man who has stolen and dishonored his wife.

When the climax is reached a new twist is introduced which comes as a surprise and is a fitting finish to a well told story.

Instead of bringing hero and villain together in a thrilling fight in which guns are brought into play, a shot from which usually ends the affray, hero after disarming the villain announces that he will kill him with his own hands.

Suspense is well sustained here and is turned into surprise when the bad man escapes and meets death by jumping from a window and hanging to a clothes line which breaks.

The role of "Felix O'Day" seems to have been made for H. B. Warner, for he fits into the characterization as naturally as he does his clothes.

In the lighter scenes he is the polished gentleman and in the heavier he is dominating, reposeful and convincing.

As far as production qualities go, the writer has seen few pictures which have excelled "Felix O'Day." The direction is absolutely faultless, the interiors are correct in detail, and the exteriors contain many beautiful shots. And the cast is a good one.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

H. B. Warner in the Jesse D. Hampton-Pathe production "Felix O'Day," will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of next ————.

It is an appealing story that reaches to great dramatic heights and is an adaptation of the novel of the same name by F. Hopkins Smith, directed by Robert Thornby.

The picture is also strong in human interest and should find ready appeal among present day patrons.

Felix O'Day, sportsman and gentleman with a lovable character, wakes up one day to find that his trusted friend, Austin Bennett, has betrayed him. He had persuaded O'Day's father to entrust him with the family fortune in order to promote a business scheme. The speculation failed and the old man died of a broken heart. Bennett was then forced to flee, but not before he had persuaded the weak-willed, pleasure-loving Lady Barbara to forsake her husband and accompany him.

How O'Day tracked, trailed and searched for him and what happended when he found him will all be told in this human interest story.

PROGRAM READER

What would you do if you found that the friend whom you loved and trusted had persuaded your poor old father to invest his fortune in a "Wild cat" scheme, which of course failed, causing the old man's death and then as though that was not enough punishment to inflict, had succeeded in stealing the affections of your weak willed, pleasure loving better half and had prevailed upon her to flee with him?

This is what happened to Felix O'Day in the Hampton-Pathe production which will be seen at this theatre on ———— of next ———— with H. B. Warner as star.

The story which is by F. Hopkins Smith, one of our greatest modern writers is strong in heart interest and dramatic appeal.

Mr. Smith has emphasized the human angle strongly in developing the character of Felix O'Day, running the scale up and down and not missing a single emotion.

The picture which is well produced, was directed by Robert Thornby and has a splendid cast.

SUGGESTIONS

You can play this feature up as strongly as you like without any fear of a comeback.. If your patrons care for authors, play up the name of F. Hopkins Smith for he is well known and has written some wonderful stories.. Tie up with a book store if you possibly can.

Your biggest bet, of course, is the name of H. B. Warner. Play him up in your headlines as strongly as you can for he is well known and does some splendid acting in the title role.

Run a short synopsis of the story in your town papers for it certainly is interesting and for this reason is worth printing.

Play up the cast, every member is worthy of mention and are well known to screen followers.

Tell your people that Marguerite Snow who was so well known as a star a few years ago, is back again as leading woman to Warner.

"CIVILIAN CLOTHES"
(Paramount-Artcraft)

Entertaining Picture With Meighan as a Star

PARAMOUNT has picked a good one for Thomas Meighan's first appearance as a star. "Civilian Clothes," by Thompson Buchanan, is calculated to score as decided a hit upon the screen as it did upon the stage. In the first place it is founded upon a true premise, and because of this is certain of arousing a responsive attitude with the spectator. During the lately deceased war it was the custom of American girls who had found life dreadfully monotonous in their social circles to enlist in Red Cross work on the other side and eventually marry a dashing officer. Mr. Buchanan has emphasized the psychology of the uniform—how easy the average girl responds to it. Then he has her disillusioned and she reverts to type when the officer appears in civilian clothes. The glamour is gone and the romance with it.

Moulded into a play this idea proved a sure-fire hit. And it seems to have lost none of its charm and appeal, its humor and high lights, in the screen translation. The heroine here, thinking her husband is dead, has returned to America. She has taken up her social whirl. But the ex-officer bobs up very much alive and she is disillusioned to find that in civilian clothes he is a poor imitation of a man. He will teach her a lesson in democracy by becoming her butler. The bright spots in this picture come from this sequence and develop easily and vividly. While there are no outstanding humorous bits the incidents are so well balanced, the idea is so logical that interest is certainly aroused and held to the finish. And his lesson serves its purpose.

The climax may be a trifle far-fetched. It is hardly reasonable that a husband would allow his wife to elope with another in order to register his indifference. He had succeeded without going to such extremes. But a subtitle informs us that the wife is fully chaperoned. And in the end she is happy to find refuge in his arms. Mr. Meighan has been deserving of stardom for a long time. Perhaps the dearth of good leading men has kept him back since he has been needed to round out an all-star cast or two. He plays his part with manly restraint, scoring the humorous bits like a happy philosopher. Only an actor of Meighan's physique and vigor could have made the character ring so true. Martha Mansfield is charming as the spirited wife. Hugh Ford has turned in a good production.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Thomas Meighan, who will be remembered for his distinguished performance in "The Miracle Man," is to make his first starring venture in the screen version of "Civilian Clothes," by Thompson Buchanan, which comes to the ———— theatre beginning ————. As a play this picture met with popular approval and the new version is said to be as rich in entertainment values. The story concerns an overseas captain who marries a pretty American girl in France. She is attracted to him because he looks so well in his uniform. Later after returning to America she learns of his death.

But he comes back very much alive just at the time she has renewed her acquaintance with a former admirer. Disappointed at his appearance in "civvies," which show bad taste in style, she snubs him. But the gallant ex-officer thereupon obtains a job as butler in his wife's household with the avowed purpose of teaching her a lesson in humility. The results, naturally, are amusing to a degree. Mr. Meighan's personality fits the role like the proverbial glove and he gives a sympathetic performance. Included in the cast are such favorites as Martha Mansfield, Frank Losee and Alfred Hickman. Clara Beranger adapted the play while Hugh Ford directed.

PROGRAM READER

Many a girl has discovered that a man may look like Beau Brummel in khaki—in the uniform of an officer, who is quite an ordinary appearing fellow in civilian clothes. There is no question that clothes makes the man—in some instances. The girls certainly did worship the soldiers and sailors. But take these same fellows and put them in citizen clothes and romance is gone. Upon this idea is based that diverting comedy-drama, "Civilian Clothes," the Broadway play by Thompson Buchanan, which met with such popular approval a short time ago. It comes to the ———— next ———— with Thomas Meighan, who appears in his first starring role.

CATCH LINES

"THE SECRET GIFT"
(Universal)

A Pretty Story with Appealing Value

PICTURES in which character parts are featured seem to be coming into the spotlight again as instanced in "The Secret Gift," with Lee Kohlmar and Rudolph Christians playing the principal roles.

Although the plot is written along the lines of many we have seen before, having two alternate characters, one the sympathetic, kindhearted, lovable old man, adored by all and the other, the cold, cruel, calculating man of finance, determined to conquer, it is so well told and acted that interest is aroused from the start.

To give the story appealing value, the author has added a rather new twist, for it deviates from the usual run, in that the financier sticks to his old friend and abides by his decisions.

Lee Kohlmar, who has played many prominent parts in Broadway productions and in vaudeville, does some splendid comedy-character acting, making his role stand out by injecting new bits of business and never overacting or losing the sympathy of his audience.

Randolph Christians is a splendid type for the part he plays. He adds contrast in the role of the finanicer, which is portrayed with firmness and decision.

The supporting company is a good one with two pretty ingenues, Doris Baker and Gladys Walton in the cast.

Peter Harlingen and Jan Saxe, Hollanders, love the same girl. Peter, the aggressive, wins her but Jan, the kindhearted, always holds her in his memory.

When she dies and leaves a young daughter, Jan is as interested in the child as her father. And when the time comes for her to marry, he selects the right man.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Universal's latest production "The Secret Gift," with Lee Kohlmar and Rudolph Christians as the featured players, will appear at this theatre on ———— of next ————.

It is a simple story of simple people, well played and well presented. It tells the tale of two comrades, Jan and Peter, who come to America to seek their fortunes. One of them is the good-hearted, sacrificing kind, always willing to share in the troubles of others that happiness may be had, and the other is the aggressive, forge-ahead type.

These two men love the same girl but it is not the kind-hearted Jan who wins her. And although his heart is broken when his comrade announces that the young girl has promised to marry him, he is willing to hand her over, even lending all the money in his possession that they may get a start in life.

When she dies and leaves a young daughter, he takes as much interest in the little one as the father, and as she grows to womanhood he watches over her until the time comes for her to choose her sweetheart.

But the fellow she likes does not suit her father, for he is not of the wealthy variety. How Jan keeps peace in the family and brings his old comrade around to his way of thinking so that his "little sweetheart" may marry the man of her choice is all told in "The Secret Gift," one of the prettiest stories ever written.

PROGRAM READER

Stories are ever changing upon stage and screen. Sometimes we have the play with the beautiful heroine or the handsome hero featured; or at other times it is the pretty, petite, ingenue who comes into the foreground and attracts all the attention. Just now there seems to be a demand for pictures of the character type, with stories that are strong, appealing and interesting.

Universal has had its ear to the ground and the result is "The Secret Gift," featuring Lee Kohlmar and Rudolph Christians.

The story tells a simple tale of simple people and is produced in a splendid manner. It has two principal characters, one the sympathetic, kind-hearted, lovable old man and the other the cold, cruel, calculating man of finance.

They come to this country as immigrants from Holland, both loving the same girl whom they meet on the voyage over. One of them wins her, but it is not the kind-hearted one. Although the latter is deeply chagrined he does not hesitate to lend his comrade the money with which to get married. In the years that follow he remains a true and faithful friend and when his loved one dies, leaving a young baby girl, he watches over the child until she has attained womanhood, when he aids her in securing the man of her choice, although another one had been chosen by her father.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this feature play upon the fact that it is something different from the usual run of features in which leading men and women are featured, tell them this picture is strong in characterization with an appealing story.

Play up the leading players, Lee Kohlmar and Randolph Christians, for they certainly do some fine character work. The press sheet gives an account of their previous history.

If you go in for street exploitation, a splendid idea would be to dress up a young man and woman in Dutch costumes and let them walk through the town. The young man should carry a small immigrant trunk upon his shoulder to bring out the character.

If you can get stills of the cast, use them, especially those of the character players, which would attract attention in any store window. And don't forget that the two ingenues are very pretty.

CATCH LINES

He loved her and yet he did not have the courage to confess it. Did he win or lose by so doing? See "The Secret Gift."

Mack Sennett

Comedies

Class!

—No other two-reel comedies have ever reached the standard of the Paramount MACK SENNETT Comedies.

How could they?

For no other two-reel comedies have the same amount of money spent on making them 100 per cent sure-fire.

No other two-reel comedies are backed by the genius that is Sennett.

No other two-reel comedies can boast a Ben Turpin, a Charles Murray, a Ford Sterling, a Louise Fazenda, a Harriet Hammond, a Marie Prevost, a Phyllis Haver, a Kala Pasha, a James Finlayson, a Billy Bevan, a Bert Roach, a John Henry, Jr., a Teddy the dog or a Pepper the cat.

No other purveyors of feminine pulchritude can ever equal the glorious ideals of the original and widely imitated Mack Sennett beauties. Eyes right!

"Don't Weaken," "It's a Boy," and "His Youthful Fancy" are the first three of the new season.

Every two weeks, rain or shine, each one better than the last!

Book one and you book 'em all!

A picture of splendor and magnificence; rich in its color and settings; tremendous in its dramatic force and elements of surprise. Filled with those alluring elements of fashionable elegance that make all Louise Glaum productions remarkable in their power of appeal to women. It is even greater in its power and lavishness than the spectacularly successful picture, "Sex." This production has been four months in the making and reports of its immensity have caused hundreds of exhibitors visiting Los Angeles to go out to the studios and watch it in the making. All over the United States there is a keen realization that "The Leopard Woman" is one of the great pictures of recent years.

HOMESPUN FOLKS

All Star Cast with Lloyd Hughes

Story by Julien Josephson

Exhibitor's Herald says: "'Homespun Folks' is 'sure fire' as concerns entertainment value and will identify the Associated Producers insignia with 'good pictures' in the public estimation."

Observer in the Chicago Examiner says: "Thomas H. Ince is first in town of the rural dramas with his 'Homespun Folks.' He has the shrewdness to insert a Republican-Democrat battle and the touch of the real country that is convincing. This is hot stuff in every city and crossroads in America."

Rob Reel in the Chicago American says: "Now the 'mother story' is the fashion. Thomas H. Ince's 'Homespun Folks' like 'Madame X' and 'Humoresque' has a mother story that holds considerable of audiences' attention.. It's sweet all through with scenes like exquisite etchings... It has action, good healthy fights and villainy and Mr. Ince's 'new find,' Lloyd Hughes, who doesn't have to be compared to Charles Ray to establish him. He has a personality all his own....You'll laugh a lot, cry a bit and come away saying it is 'some picture.'"

Genevieve Harris in the Chicago Post says: "It is in every way a typical Thomas H. Ince production and you are certain to enjoy it. There is a depth and softness to many of its scenes that pleases your senses. It is also quite exciting and it is safe to say that everyone will stay right to the finish."

BRAND NEW MERMAID

ARE YOU SHOWING COMEDIES ON THE RECORD OF THE "GOOD OLD TIMES" OR ON TODAY'S PERFORMANCES

MERMAID Comedies are new—new in ideas, new in vigor, new in the youthful ability to appeal to your audiences with a power that you have never before found in two-reelers.

Mermaids are not living on the reputation of the past—they are not trading on traditions. They are not asking you to book them because of what some one did so many moons ago.

Mermaid Comedies offer you themselves for your judgment. They ask but a showing for you and your audiences. The result is certain. From the biggest city to the smallest hamlet in which they have been shown the answer has been the same—

COMEDIES IN TWO REELS

WHEN Educational decided to enter the two reel comedy field we found that the demand was strong for a series of "slap-stick" comedies of the highest order—filled with action in every foot.

We were deluged with offers of material. They received our careful consideration, but they failed to meet the mark that we demanded—something superior to any slap stick comedies ever made—all but one.

Out of this field we selected Mermaid Comedies, our own brand name, made by directors and players of our own choosing. No element of the best is spared in their production.

Every exhibitor who has shown them has declared that we were right. I want every exhibitor in the nation to have the opportunityof showing the best in this form of amusement—Mermaid Comedes, which carry our guarantee of the nearest perfection ever reached in this field.

LESS than four months old, Mermaid Comedies today have won a volume of contracts that compares with any comedy series on the market—WITHOUT EXCEPTION.

The roster of the first run houses showing them looks like a list of America's best theatres.

Made with the same cast, by the same incomparable director "Nonsense" surpasses its predecessor. Seems impossible, but remember we said that "A Fresh Start" was the funniest picture ever made.

EVERY Mermaid offers chance for unusual exploitation. The titles are attractive, they have players of merit, directors of accomplishment and are filled with the MEAT of fun.

If you are content with "just a comedy," you do not want Mermaids in your theatre. They demand something more than one line mention—they'll overshadow most "features."

THE LAND of LAFAYETTE

A one reel Americanization Picture that should be shown in every Theatre

ONE million children of France were left fatherless in the Great War. Hundreds of cities and towns of the United States have adopted these little ones, these boys and girls they have never seen. They are shown in this picture bearing banners with words of gratitude to the communities in the United States which have undertaken their support and education.

The people of Wichita, Kansas; of Bisbee, Arizona, and of scores of other cities can see the little tots they have helped. Ask to see this reel at a Pathe Exchange and see if your home town is represented.

The great Paris parade of July 4th is shown and the leading heroes of the late war for "The Land of Lafayette" are grouped in a remarkable series of pictures. This thrillingly patriotic picture should be shown in every theatre in the country. It is released as the Pathe contribution to Americanization movement fostered by the Motion Picture Industry of the United States of which the American exhibitors are the most important factor.

"High and Dizzy"

(Two-Reel Harold Lloyd Comedy—Released by Pathe)

HAROLD LLOYD has been coming through with real comedies so long that exhibitors and audiences would forgive him if he slipped just once, but instead his record for consistency grows like the proverbial mushroom and now in presenting "High and Dizzy," he has given the public two reels of entertainment that for novelty, genuine laughs and thrills has not been equalled since "Shoulder Arms."

The work of the star throughout the picture is entirely legitimate and establishes him firmly as a talented comedian in light comedy. There is nothing "slapstick" in his work in "High and Dizzy." Every laugh is earned by clever acting, original incidents and truly humorous titles. The genius deserves to be featured in every theatre where it is booked. The exhibitor who doesn't feature it is passing up a money making opportunity.—J. S. McKERSON

THE BEST TWO-REELER COMEDY IN MANY MOONS

The Boy	Harold Lloyd
The Girl	Mildred Davis
The Boyle Friend	Roy Brooks
The Girl's Father	Wallace Howe

The day for batting beauty, slap-stick, extravagant comedy is done—and Harold Lloyd, so far ahead in every field, is about to realize that. He is by far the cleverest comedian the screen today—has a better technique and handles himself with the feature picture, or with the biggest theatre. And his popularity is based on the solid foundation of honest, hard work and stick-to-it-iveness. He doesn't do a picture and then loaf for six months or a year—he works and works hard. And he deserves the fame and fortune he is acquiring.

The "business" is new and interesting, funny—and the thrills are plentiful. The suspense and thrill of the scene in which Harold follows Mildred around the narrow ledge of the third-story window, is keener than the most powerful feature we have seen in a long, long time. The titles by H. M. Walker deserve a whole paragraph to themselves. The picture, on the whole, is simply GREAT!

PART 8—PAGE

Harold Lloyd, in "High and Dizzy," I think, is just as funny as Chaplin ever was. He's cleverer than Chaplin often is, and in this picture offers you something new in thrills, which is more than a Chaplin comedy has done for a good long time.

I went into a theater the other day to see the feature picture—got there too early, and had to sit through the comedy, something I usually abominate doing. This time, however, it was different. I found myself entertained every minute, laughing half the time, and with my hair rising on end the other half. And how the rest of the audience enjoyed it! They shrieked with laughter—just the way they used to do at the Chaplin pictures—and during the hair raising parts of the comedy there were signs, squeals, and all the other peculiar sounds human beings make when they think something terrible is just about to happen and they're about to see it.

There is a heart-winning character—Richard Gormley, welfare worker in the prisons and metaphysician extraordinary. Once a hypnotist, himself, he put a man through hell. He learned the error of his ways through bitter suffering, that of having a man he hypnotized turn on him and rob him of his most precious possession—his baby son.

Years later he finds his son grown to manhood, and working by the same method of hypnotism he had once used—which the son inherited. Without knowing that it is his son, he attempts to lead the boy into the way of truth and light. His final success, and what happens to bring it about makes "The Crimson Cross" among the most interesting photoplays of the year.

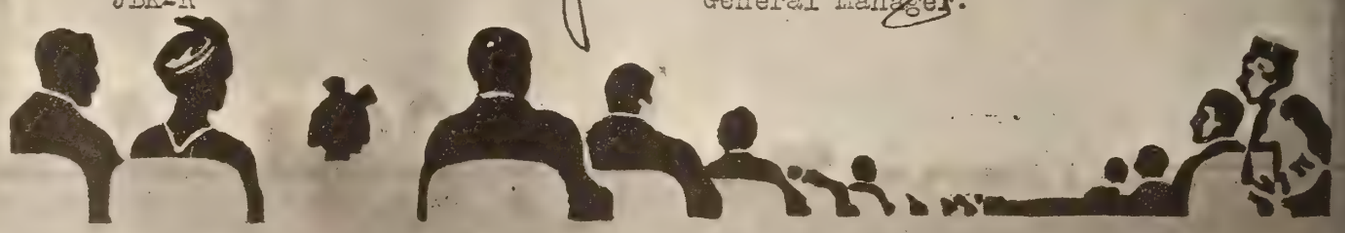
New York, N.Y.

My dear Mr. Beecroft:-

Permit me to give you a few facts in connection with my FIVE WEEKS SERVICE FREE OF CHARGE campaign recently appearing in the trades papers.

I received 3,291 replies by wire and mail. Of these, 1,784 mentioned "Motion Picture News"; 542 mentioned other papers and the balance did not mention any paper at all.

Assuming that those who did not specify any paper would have mentioned papers other than the "News", which is hardly possible, you can plainly see that over 50% of the results of my unusual campaign were due to the effectiveness of the columns of your valuable paper.



In other words, our "ad" in the Motion Picture News, had a greater "punch" than that in all of the other publications put together, which proves conclusively, that your paper has a wider circulation among Exhibitors than any other trade paper in existence.

I believe that information of this kind is a valuable asset and would be mutually beneficial to other advertisers in selecting a 100% advertising medium.

Appreciating all courtesies and trusting that you will keep the good work up, and with kindest personal regards, I am,

Yours very truly,
James B. Kelly

"SAVE A SUCKER," BIG IDEA IN FIRST PINNACLE COMEDY

That bold baby who piped, "Gimme Liberty or Gimme Poison" (and who, incidentally, got what he asked for) must have been a married man, and John West, director of Pinnacle Comedies, went back to the fence for the four-sack idea that will predominate the first Pinnacle Comedy—"Don't Never Marry."

The capable Mr. West naturally figured that there was more truth than poetry in the title he selected for the first Pinnacle laugh-grabber, and with the corking cast of funsters—headed by the internationally famed Leo and Blanche White — "Don't Never Marry" ought to boil the nation with mirth.

The first comedy will deal a death blow at matrimony—a la-mucilage and wield a nasty argument for the inducements offered by chorus children and slipper sockers. There will be a laugh a second, which has the 20th Century on the bench.

And as to the girls—

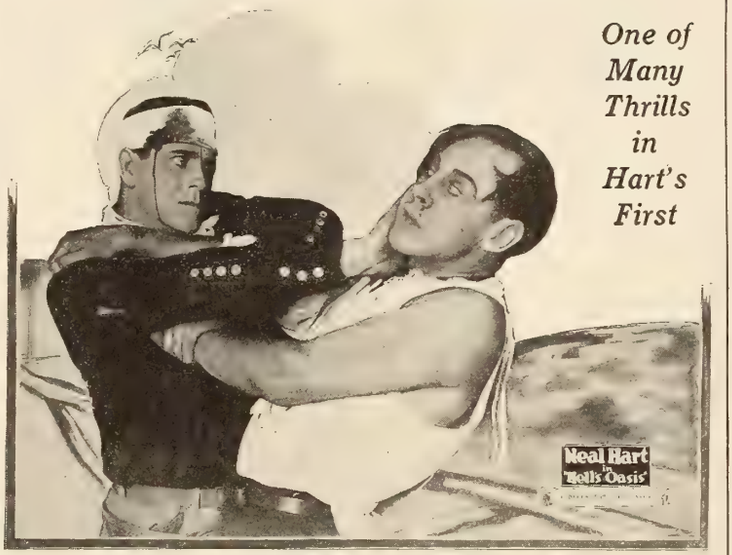
Well, that little old gallery, "Former Wives of Famous Men" ought to get a clientele that would push it into the money quick, and the attractive young vampires who will canter in the Pinnacle Comedies ought to knock the last hair off the first row, and raise the cost of divorces.

The first Pinnacle Comedy will be released not later than November 1st, and there will be one every two weeks thereafter, so the burden of prohibition and sky-cost-living should be lifted.

Pinnacle Pippins—rush!

ALL INDEPENDENT PRODUCERS INVITED TO JOIN THE FOLD

With the 100% flag waving over the national territory on the eight NEAL HART super-specials, the Independent Films Association of Chicago extends to the independent film producers of the world a cordial invitation to join the fold. Independent Films is ready to distribute any meritorious independent productions for any producing organization, putting out two-reel subjects or longer. These productions must be at least two reels in length to be handled by the Independent Films Association and must be a series of pictures, not a single production. Producers from all parts of the country have visited the headquarters of Independent Films during the last few weeks, making inquiry as to Independent Film's distribution plan.



FITZPATRICK-McELROY CIRCUIT BUYS HARTS

W. B. Seifert of the Independent Master Films, Detroit, came over to Chicago last week and signed up the entire circuit of twenty-five Fitzpatrick-McElroy theatres for the eight new Neal Hart special productions. The genial Frank Porter did the booking and is eager to see "Hell's Oasis." Hart's initial presentation, which will be screened for Frank about the fifteenth of this month. Seifert went back to Detroit with a smile as big as Hart's pulling power. The F. M. houses include two at Blue Island, Ill., and one at Marinette, Wis. The rest of them are in the state of Michigan.

TERRITORIAL OPTIONS ON COMEDIES GO FAST

Options have been granted on considerable territory for the new Pinnacle Comedies, but contract action will begin about September 20th, and from reports there will be a landslide of penwork.

FAMOUS WHITE DUO SIGN WITH PINNACLE FOR LEAD IN COMEDIES

Leo and Blanche White, the former internationally famous through his work in the Charley Chaplin comedies from the start of Chaplin's contract with Essanay until the finish of his widely-touted agreement with Mutual, will be featured in Pinnacle Comedies. This news packs a wallop worthy of Babe Ruth, himself, for the Whites are well known in the comedy film world as the color their monickers represent.

John West, probably the best known director of swift and successful comedies this side of the equator, has been secured by Pinnacle Comedies, and West by the time this blossoms out in print black, will be delved deep into the first comedy release, which will cause U. S. exhibs to shake a mean shimmy of glee about the first of November, next. West's success and fame is not confined to the states united by any means. He is as well known as a comedy director of the highest calibre in London, Paris and Berlin as on Broadway or State street, and he will give his talents exclusively to Pinnacle Comedies.

The well-known Al Martin has been engaged as assistant to Mr. West and both of these fun fixers are working night and day on the first of the pictures, which will come in two chapters and get on the job every two weeks during the year.

THIRD HART PICTURE WILL KNOCK 'EM CHILL

Neal Hart, Pinnacle Productions' supreme outdoor star, is now deliberating upon what shall be the subject for his third production. Neal at first favored a cattle yarn, but upon further consideration of material, decided to lay off the livestock and will in all likelihood pick on the big cities for a theme.

THEY'RE READY, BOYS; SHOOT IN YOUR ORDERS

Photographs—22x28's and 11x14's—on "HELL'S OASIS," the first Neal Hart special production released September 15 by Pinnacle Productions, through the Independent Films Association of Chicago, are ready, boys. Shoot in the orders.

WHAT DO YOU CARE, WHAT THEY WEAR?

"Down on the river,
Sittin' on the bank,
Pinnacle girls shimmied,
All the ships sank."

Yes, brother, and you can add to what's been told the world that the sudden capsizal of the marine over the proclivities of the Pinnacle Comedy girls will be reflected in a heap of others throughout this land of freedom, plus one-half of one per cent.

Al Martin, who is helping John West direct the new Pinnacle Comedies at the studios at Glendale, Cal., says that when you say the costumes flaunted about by the Pinnacle girls were "to the last extreme," you weren't saying any talk a-tall.

"They're way past that," chirps Martin.

Hold your breath and throw in the clutch.

ROBERTSON, MOORE BRING PLENTY "NEWS"

Richard Robertson, Pinnacle Productions' advertising and exploitation whip, and Ollie Moore, general manager of Calumet Productions, landed on State street again on the tenth, and it took them nearly 36 hours at a stretch to tell the "news." And it was some news. Enthusiasm is so great on the coast this pair said, that they were figuring on putting some of the most violent enthusiasts in straightjackets (of joy).

Squidgelums

Exhibs everywhere are barking loud for the first Neal Hart release, and proclaiming they intend to do some tall campaigning on "HELL'S OASIS," the initial picture of Pinnacle Productions. The Chicago office is swamped with letters of inquiry from theatre men, large and small, from all parts of creation.

EVRYIISSUREREARINGTOGO

Lee Goldberg, First National's sprinting chief at Louisville, evidently had his big newspaper special "Go and Get It" in mind when the representative for Independent Films Association saw him regarding disposition of Kentucky territory. "Get me a first run in Louisville and I'll buy everything you got," quoth Lee. But it was Lee's little joke, and he's one of us now, strong, and will get his own first-runs. It's a w. k. fact that Lee pretty nearly runs the first-run industry in Louisville.

WELAUGHWITHLEE

Lou Foster, who runs the well-known and equally prominent Fine Arts Film Exchange with Al Weil in Cincy was tickled fourteen shades of pink when he grabbed off Neal Hart franchise for Southern Ohio. "There's only one thing more necessary to make my happiness complete," sighed Lou, with one lamp on the scoreboard. "Them cussed Reds just gotta repeat." Lou doesn't miss many games. And he's got a pile o' jack on the crimson sox to cop.

BOY!PAGEMRMATHEWSON

The bird who penned that "Bad news travels fast" stuff was all wet. Without a still or a press book, and without nothing but rumor and a coupla adjectives, the new Pinnacle Comedies have got the boys so wraught up that we hadda hurl some wires out yonder to find out just when the fun will start.

ITALLHAPPENSNOV1

Mr. Neal Hart is going to do a little history-making. Many exchanges are coming in with the dope that for the first time ever, the biggest first-run houses in key cities are opening their doors (and hearts) to "outdoor features." The "outdoors" is Neal Hart and "HELL'S OASIS" will be shown in the best houses in virtually every key city, early bookings indicate.

JUSTASITOUGHTTOBE

Boy, get your thrill tabulator tested and get set for the large announcement as to the personnel of Pinnacle Comedies. Some surprise ahead, mates. Standby.

WEAREREADYSOSHOOTKID

This bird Kahn at K. C. is way past being a live wire. He's got a flock of out-of-work billboards spotted and flashes: "Let the 24's come." Kahn says his territory is ample sold on Neal Hart and that it's a tedious job waiting for "HELL'S OASIS" to trot along.

The big laugh—the fun in a boy's life, is zest and joy unadulterated — the sortie to the swimmin' hole, the rough-and-tumble snow-ball battle, the rainy day spent in the attic with the rest of "the gang."

It is this spontaneous, clean and wholehearted spirit of laughter that Jimmy Aubrey has captured in his comedies. In "The Decorator" and "Paradise Alley," his latest and best offerings, he has the same fresh whimsicality, mock seriousness and sense of the ridiculous which appeal that universal comic sense of young and old alike. Aubrey is the Ponce de Leon of motion pictures—he has discovered the secret of eternal youth.

DIRECTORS AND PRODUCERS

May Now Use Prizma Color Prints in Their Productions

"What Prizma proposes to do is this: To incorporate into feature-productions color effects which will emphasize the beauty of colorful settings and lend additional appeal to the "high spots" of the production. To do this Prizma has organized a new department to be known as the Commercial Department. Its representatives stand ready, it is announced, to "sit in" with any producer at his convenience and discuss with him the possibilities of interpolating color effects into any of his present or future productions, bringing to this conference all their technical knowledge of the enhancing value of color to the public's visual sense. For these suggestions, the producer will be in no way obligated. Prizma believes it is on the threshold of a new epoch in motion-picture photography and is anxious to confer with the producer to hasten its advent."—M. P. News, Aug. 28, 1920.

¶ Prizma negatives are exposed and developed the same as is usual, differing in the final result only in the fact that they carry color values.

¶ Prizma cameras photograph anything from the growth of a flower to the flight of a bird.

¶ From the negatives, color prints are made that project on any machine, being the same length as your black to white films and joining to them in the usual manner.

Arresting Photodrama!"

The Sun and New York Herald

What the Leading Papers Say:

POWERFUL DRAMA

"Lionel Barrymore appears at the Strand in his initial First National Exhibitors' product, 'The Master Mind,' a powerfully arresting photodrama drawn from Daniel G. Carter's play of that name, which holds that vengeance is a boomerang best left to destiny or the Government."—The Sun and New York Herald.

REMARKABLE FILM

"Lionel Barrymore stars in a remarkable film. For those who like character acting with an unusual theme to keep them guessing, Whitman Bennett's production of 'The Master Mind' at the Strand offers full value for the price of admission. The screen presentation, with Lionel Barrymore as 'The Master Mind,' is the first of a series of productions in which Mr. Barrymore appears for the First National Exhibitors. It is interesting enough to augur well for the future of this new photoplay group.

"There have been so many plots hashed and rehashed to give effectiveness to an otherwise threadbare dramatic situation that the seeing of one of them in which the theme more than makes up for the nudity of outworn development evokes gratitude to those whose ideas and craftsmanship made the production possible."—New York Tribune.

GOOD ENTERTAINMENT

"Lionel Barrymore in 'The Master Mind,' a screen story based on a play by Daniel G. Carter, proves a good entertainment at the Strand. Mr. Barrymore brings repression and a fine intelligence to an intricate star role and carries the weight of three-fourths of the picture upon his shoulders. 'The Master Mind' demands serious consideration."—New York American.

FULL OF SUSPENSE

"The Strand offers Lionel Barrymore in 'The Master Mind' as the leading photo-dramatic feature for the week. The film proves to be a very interesting and suspenseful version of Daniel G. Carter's play of the same name.

"Something new in photo-plays and the piece does succeed in arousing curiosity as to what will happen next.

"The principal role is realized by Lionel Barrymore, who plays quite in the spirit of the piece, and his supporting company contributes good work."—New York Morning Telegraph.

MAKES ROLE CONVINCING

"Barrymore makes the role of the modern Machiavelli convincing. He is assisted by Gipsey O'Brian, who is charming. The film is excellently directed by Kenneth Webb."—New York Globe.

Positive profits

Buying implies the expenditure of money,—selling implies its return. Profit only comes when the second operation is performed to advantage. When motion picture theater tickets are sold in maximum degree a photo-play is bound to show a profit. The one way to sell them in maximum degree is through the use of RITCHEY posters! Therefore the film with RITCHEY posters takes on a greatly added value.

The RITCHEY poster is essentially a motion picture ticket seller. It is just that and nothing more. It calls the exhibitor's wares to the attention of the public in potent pictured phrases. Its expression is vivid,—sure,—strong,—and convincing! Its message is understandable by every man, woman and child who sees it, for the language of pictures is universal. Its appeal is universal,—and the response to that appeal is universal.

As a result the RITCHEY poster is the one thing that tends to make the profits from a photo-play positive!

VOL. XXII SEPTEMBER 25, 1920 No. XIV

Burying the Hatchet

SIGNS indicate that the big development in this business, this year, will be something greater than the decided advancement in picture making, or the betterment of any specific branch of the industry.

The development will be a broader one, of larger consequence and born to meet what we earnestly believe this industry needs right now above all else, above even better product and better theatres.

We shall see this year the beginning of a new relationship between the exhibitor and the producer and distributor, one based upon a mutual faith in each other's business honor and a mutual interest in each other's confidence and business welfare—a new era of trade ethics.

This is not, let us hasten to add, a Utopian dream; nor is it a mere editor's preachment. It is the plainest kind of commonest sense.

Let's not mince matters. This big business has been going along on a trade slogan of "get the limit"—and get it any old way. And, frankly, gentlemen, it can't continue. We don't want to muckrake, we don't purpose to draw a horrible picture. We simply want to call attention to this simple truth: You can't run a big permanent business on "bunk"; you can't sell goods on a "gypping" basis; you have got to have a live and let live principle all along the trade line; and above all, you have got to bring about exhibitor confidence in the men and companies who make and deliver the goods.

And let us make this fact very plain to the exhibitor: it is just as necessary for the distributor to have confidence in you as for you to have confidence in him; you have got to stop holding him up if you expect him to stop holding you up; if you want honesty and trust from him you've got to give him back the same full measure.

Going On Record

AN important resolution was passed recently by the New York Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce. In effect the four hundred members of this exhibitor organization pledged themselves not to book any picture offering a player or made by a director who had illegally broken or in other words "jumped" a contract with the producer.

Last Spring, in Los Angeles, we encountered a few individuals in hotel lobbies who toil not but spin glib yarns of impossible profits—these for the inexperienced ears of stars and directors who have been made valuable assets to their employers.

We believe that this is the individual mostly at fault.

This sort of parasite is not welcome in the business; and if the producer hasn't a stringent enough cure the exhibitor has the power, plenty of it, to stop what is obviously a dishonest and unhealthy practice.

We believe that other exhibitor bodies will regard the action of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce as a wise and constructive move.

There will always be plenty of opportunity in the field for legitimate promotion; but we don't want and we cannot tolerate "contract jumpers," and this fact should be speedily and solidly established.

The Independent's Year

INSOFAR as figures prove their own case, the calculations we presented in a recent editorial indicated clearly that exhibitors need have no fear this year of a scarcity of good pictures. They also offered the conclusion that the control of the best product was not to be vested in one or two organizations, that the sources were evidently to be as broad as the industry.

Reports from observers would now indicate that exhibitors had already laid their plans with some such conclusions in mind. "Exhibitors," one film man has told us, "have never kept so many open days on their schedule, solely with an idea of 'shopping around.' They don't do this when they are afraid of the product."

Quite a bit of this "outside" attention is being given to the state rights field, and justly so, for the independents have this year tackled their problems in a big way, and with broad-minded ambitions. The state righter has always had an advantage in service in his knowledge of his field; this year he is adding to this by wider-gauged production plans and more definite and elaborate advertising and exploitation policies.

This is surely the year of the independent's big chance; as it is also the opportunity for the exhibitor to put the independent to the test.

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

DEALING IN PERSONALITIES

THE rumor market was running strong this week. For the opening forty-eight hours of the week, even though the holidays made Mrs. Astor's hash-house and Madame Claridge's rathskeller look like deserted villages, you could find almost any sort of rumor you desired.

Goldwyn naturally took the lead in the rumor race. This was to be expected after the Duponts took a long stride in and Sam Goldwyn stepped out. Dame Rumor, wise old bird, never lets a news story drop after its first baptism of printer's ink.

There was to be a Board of Director's meeting on Tuesday, so the rumorists declared, and before the motion to adjourn was made the DuPonts would have exploded another charge of dynamite. More changes in personnel. Tuesday came and flew without definite word. Wednesday passed with the news hounds still off the scent.

Perhaps just after we write these lines the news will break—still in time for this week's issue. Most likely it will hide successfully until we tuck the blankets under the presses and then break cover just in time for Joe Dannenburg.

And there's even a chance that this particular item of news never was and never will be.

You never can tell.

Monday found the elevators in 729 working on holiday schedule. We felt lonesome until the descending elevator reached the ground floor, the doors opened, and there emerged—Fred Warren and Tom Moore. 'Aha," we hissed, "Fred is slipping one over!" Then again, maybe they were only fellow passengers by chance. For, as we remark whenever we strive to be original, "you never can tell."

SECOND entry in the Rumor Handicap bears the name of J. Stuart Blackton. A little birdie whispered in our ear—and the news was most interesting.

You remember that the Commodore sailed for England a couple of weeks ago on the same boat with Sir Thomas Lipton. You remember also that during the Shamrock-Reliance tussles the picture producer was a frequent guest on the Lipton yacht. Oh, yes, you remember a lot of things, don't you?

Well, now, the gossipy little birdie whispered to us that all is signed and sealed. That Sir Thomas likes the sound of the movie-made money. That when the Commodore returns from Europe he will come as the head of a new company, rated, roughly speaking, at five million or so.

Isn't it interesting?

So don't be surprised if the coming year gives us the Blackton name on another big winner like "The Battle Cry of Peace."

N.A.M.P.I. Officers

THE following officers and directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry for 1920 were elected at a meeting September 14:

President, William A. Brady, Wm. A. Brady Picture Plays, Inc.; Vice-Presidents: Adolph Zukor, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Samuel Goldwyn, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; Will C. Smith, Nicholas Power Company; E. M. Porter, Precision Machine Company; R. H. Cochrane, Universal Film Mfg. Co.; Paul H. Cromelin, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation; Treasurer: J. E. Brulatour, Eastman Films; Asst. Treas.: P. L. Waters; Richard A. Rowland, Metro; Executive Secretary: Frederick H. Elliott, 1520 Broadway, N. Y.

Mr. "Otis" Brewer is among the visitors to town noticed this week. On Wednesday we also saw Harry Millarde, looking twenty pounds heavier after a year on the coast, and wearing the broad smile of all those directors in town for "New York premieres." Here's hoping that "Over the Hill, etc.," knocks 'em off their seats.

THIRD mention on the Rumor Roster goes to Kessel and Bauman. Our bump of curiosity wants to know just what big plans those boys have up their sleeves for the new million dollar corporation.

Strange part of it is that the official Albany action comes only a week after Ad Kessel declared in our hearing:

"I'm through with the picture business now. I'm away 'over the top' on the Babe Ruth picture and well satisfied. Guess I'll go back and rest again. This picture business takes too much time away from the joy of living."

And then, caramba, comes the formation of Kessel and Bauman, Inc., capitalized at a million, with Ad Kessel, Charles Kessel and Charles Bauman as directors. You can bet that dollar you were saving toward a new felt hat that the discoverers of Ince, Chaplin, Normand and a dozen other lights, don't reach those figures without a good stout ladder.

But in response to all inquiries Ad remarks: "Not ready yet. Wait a few days."

A little item from the Coast concerning the formation of a local booking office by Lesser and Gore contains a zippy little sentence. Says Sol: "This in no way affects our membership in the National Booking Corporation, of which we are still a part."

Huh?

Dare we say it?

THE National Association almost had a new president this week. Then the boys got together in official meeting assembled, coaxed Bill Brady a bit, and then some more,—and it's still "President William A. Brady."

Quite a number of the politicians assured us early in the week it was to be "President Percy L. Waters."

Visions of the old G. F. days! And we'll say right here that if Bill Brady hadn't been prevailed upon to repeat, the industry couldn't have made a wiser selection than efficient, smooth-working Percy Waters.

Jules Bernstein hasn't lost his liking for a good scrap. We have the proof in the fact that he was the only exchange man who took a couple of hours off to journey to the eighth floor of the Astor and listen to the hearing of the exhibitor committee on the complaints against Al Black. Met another old friend there in the person of H. B. Varner of the Carolinas.

Carl Laemmle is doing this Europe thing right. Comes a postcard this week to William A. Johnston and the stamp on the corner is of the infant Czecho-Slavak nation.

"Bill" Keefe, once of the Griffith forces, is in town with some comedies. And also some big producing plans. Watch for action!

Paul Mooney and Martin Quigley are on the outs. They don't eat lunch together more than six days a week now.

Where is Harry Reichenbach?

Can't close a rumor page without saying that Metro's position in the rumor field is unchanged. You can't keep it out. Any time one film man says "merger," another replies "Metro."

Lynde Denig has been appointed Assistant Publicity Manager of Goldwyn, working next in line to Howard Dietz, the Director of Publicity.

"Pop" Hart has broken loose with a "Babe" Ruth song, "Oh, You Babe Ruth!" It will be sung during the Madison Square Garden showing of "Headin' Home." Keep it up, Bill.

Small Theater Owners Take Stand Against Alfred S. Black

Circuit Head Not Present — More Startling Disclosures Promised

BY ROBERT E. WELSH

THEY hauled Alfred S. Black over the coals, dropped him in boiling oil, and picked him to shreds in the Yacht Room of the Hotel Astor, Wednesday morning of this week.

And it was all done in a calm, serene, judicial mood that belied what was actually transpiring.

The occasion was the meeting of the committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to inquire into the alleged methods of Alfred S. Black in extending his New England circuit and such connections as Famous Players-Lasky might have with these activities.

Alfred S. Black was not present himself—so the arraignment was administered by absent treatment. Black is understood to take the stand that the hearing is prompted by political motives, and for that reason did not respond to urgent invitations on the part of the exhibitor organization. He could not be reached for a statement before going to press, but it is to be expected that a reply to the points brought out at the hearing will be forthcoming for next week's trade papers.

Summing It Up

The high lights of the two and a half-hour hearing at which a half dozen New England exhibitors testified, and additional affidavits were read may be summed up as follows:

Senator James J. Walker's statement, referring to Black, that "We shall prove at a later hearing of this committee that this man told a certain producer, 'If you will back me up I will give you a line-up of four thousand theatres in this country.' And as we grow, each one added to the chain will mean that much more pressure to force the next exhibitor into line."

The declaration of Henry L. Saulisbury, representing Adolph Zukor, that the Famous Players organization, "Will not countenance any such methods as we have heard of here today. We will go further and see that wherever any man's theatre has been lost to him through such tactics he will be given every opportunity to get it back under satisfactory conditions."

The presence of a "heavy" in the plot in the person of a mysterious "Mr. Harwood," claiming to belong to the Famous-Lasky organization, and according to the testimony an expert wielder of the "Sell or we build" threat. Mr. Saulisbury denied any knowledge of Harwood, or any connection he might have with the film organization.

Practical unanimity on the part of the witnesses in describing the Black methods as following three lines, "Sell to us at a ridiculous price—or we build an opposition house—or we get a hold on the building your theatre is now in."

Black Replies

IN reply to the charges made at the Sydney Cohen meeting at the Astor, Alfred S. Black on the afternoon of September 16 telegraphed from Boston as follows: "As to charges publicly made on Wednesday will say that all important statements are maliciously distorted and untrue. I have never even heard of Harwood and never met Everett Bean or Harold Bean. I am preparing a full and accurate statement in refutation of all testimony offered."

The atmosphere of the hearing contained all the elements that delight the newsgatherer. Outstanding was the apparent desire of the committee and their counsel, Senator James J. Walker, to maintain an attitude of fair, judicial inquiry, avoiding any appearance of prejudgment.

A touch of color was lent to the occasion by the fact that here, at the Hotel Astor, center of the industry's bigger activities, was gathered a committee to hear testimony from exhibitors of three and four hundred seat theatres, in towns ranging from 1,400 to 6,000 population.

Star Witness of the Day

The center of the spotlight focused on practically the last witness of the day, Mr. Eames, now operating four houses in the Montpelier, Vt., district, and building a house in Barre, Vt. Up till a year ago Mr. Eames operated the Park theatre, Barre, Vt., selling at that time to Black, and entering the latter's employ. Six months ago he returned to independent exhibiting. His account of the sale of the Park is interesting:

"I had secured an option on a plot in Barre for a larger house and one day told this fact to Sam Merchant, then a salesmen for Famous out of Boston. Four days later Alfred S. Black had the option. Then he came to me and told me of the big theatre circuit he was organizing, of his unlimited backing, asked me if I would sell. I figured it wiser to sell and become a part of such a big organization than to attempt to fight and did so. I then became his manager in Barre, also undertaking for a few weeks to travel about the country looking for other theatre properties."

The testimony brought out the fact that Eames, acting in good faith, made offers for six theatre properties at what he and the exhibitor considered fair prices. But later, according to Eames and another witness, Mrs. Dodge, of Morrisville, Vt., Black would offer prices so much lower as to be considered ridiculous. In three cases, according to Eames, houses were secured at these lower figures through fear of the owners that they could not buck the threatened competition of larger interests.

"Black never told me himself that he was associated with Famous," declared Eames, "but Boland, his architect, told me so, and it was the general opinion throughout the territory. Originally he was working with his brother, John Black, a broker of 100 Broadway, New York City. But about December, 1919, we understood that he had become a part of the $10,000,000 organization formed in New York.

"Boland said that chain ownership of theatres would spread all over the country like Woolworth stores. Boland declared that he had a gripful of theatre plans, and that the organization was ready to put up theatres in any town in the territory at any time.

"I believed these statements at the time and naturally they influenced me in urging other exhibitors to sell and join the big organization as I had done. I was not the only manager keeping an eye out for theatres; every manager was a missionary. It was after seeing more of the methods followed by Mr. Black and several disagreements on this point that I left the proposition."

A Widow's Story

Other witnesses were on hand to tell their version of these methods. Mrs. Dodge, of Morrisville, Vt., a widow, was an interesting witness. "Before my husband's death," she stated, "Mr. Eames called on him, representing Mr. Black, and they agreed on a price for the sale of the theatre. This was $1,500. Then one day we were informed by the owner of the building in which our theatre is located that Mr. Black had secured an option on the building. This was followed by a visit from Mr. Black, at which he offered the ridiculous price of $700 for the theatre and the equipment in two others we run in near-by villages. So that after the option he dropped his price from $1,500 for one theatre to $700 for three houses. Mr. Emmons said that Mr. Black had secured the option by telling of his big organization and threatening to build another theatre which could force us out of business. The option was later exercised, and since last January we have been paying rent to the Black company. The lease is up in January and I do not know what plans are after that. Judging from the circular letters I receive I am already on the books of his home office as one of his managers."

Zukor Represented at Inquiry into New England Conditions

At the close of the hearing Mr. Saulisbury, of the Famous Players Company, assured Mrs. Dodge that his company would bring its influence to bear to see that she was given every opportunity to secure the building and continue to run her theatre independently. Morrisville is a town of 1400, and the house seats 250.

The testimony of Mrs. Dodge was confirmed by Eames, who made the original offer for the house, and who was later present at the negotiations resulting in Black's purchase of the building over the exhibitor's head. Eames cited this as one of the examples of the methods that had caused his disagreements with Black. The testimony of Eames also tended to corroborate declarations later made by S. Carl Carpenter, of the Colonial theatre, Richford, Vt.

Tried Over His Head

"Banking is really my business," said Mr. Carpenter, "and I became interested in this theatre five years ago because we needed a well managed place to which the best people in our town could go. I rented the theatre from the town when the building was erected and set out to get the best pictures possible. For two years I operated six days a week, losing $4,000 in that time.

"About a year ago the Selectman in the town who attends to my renting came to me and said that Alfred S. Black had come to him and attempted to get the lease on my theatre over my head. This was refused, so now Mr. Black has taken over an old church and is enlarging it for pictures. His rental will run him $1,600 a year. I have my books here to show that the town will never justify two theatres, nor will it even justify the rental Mr. Black is going to pay.

"I used Paramount pictures almost exclusively until recently, when the methods of the Boston exchange forced me to cancel in disgust. It's funny that the salesmen don't even come to see me now—a fact I have attributed to the building of a new house by Mr. Black."

Joseph M. Slater, of Pembrook, N. H., and Mrs. C. Humphrey, of Derry, N. H., both testified that Black had attempted to purchase their theatres and that the proposition was coupled with the threat, "If you don't sell to us we'll build in opposition and put you out of business with our big organization and better buying facilities." In neither town has Black followed up with an attempt to build.

The Mysterious Mr. Harwood

Famous mysteries of newspaperland were brought to mind when the testimony of Everet Beane, of Hillsborough, N. H., was given. "Mr. Harwood" declared that he represented Famous Players-Lasky, and according to Everett and an affidavit from Harold Bean, of the Wonderland Theatre, Penicook, N. H., was a rough and ready personage. "I can get Paramount service for fifty cents a reel," he is said to have told Harold Beane. "I'll put you out of business if you don't sell to me."

The Harwood-Everett Beane episode is best covered by the latter's affidavit, as follows:

I, J. EVERETT BEANE, of Hillsborough, in the County of Hillsborough, and the State of New Hampshire, do, on oath, make the following statement of facts:

That in April, 1920, at said Hillsborough, I was visited by one Mr. Harwood who then claimed to be a representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp.; that he offered to buy out my moving picture business here in Hillsborough, offering for it a very insignificant sum.

As I was not desirous of selling I refused to sell to him. He then threatened me with competition in the form of a new theatre which would be built and opened in this town on September 1, 1920. He further informed me that I would lose all my contracts with the above named Famous Players-Lasky Corp., and that his new theatre would show Paramount and Artcraft latest releases at an admission of ten cents, until such time as I was forced to quit my business. He also informed me that this was the usual procedure of his principal, and that when I had been forced to discontinue my business they would then raise their admission to thirty cents, and would clean up.

Mr. Harwood further informed me that they were after all the theatre business in New England, more particularly in New Hampshire and Vermont at the present, and in their offices they had sets of stock plans marked A. B. C. and D.; each for theatres in towns of different population, and that one of these stock theatres, estimated to cost $20,000 would be built in Hillsborough on land on which he had already secured option.

Mr. Harwood told me that I was a "Marked Man" doomed for destruction, unless I sold to him. Not wishing to sell I declined his offer, preferring to fight it out to the finish rather than be scared out at the start.

He was well informed as to my business, telling me what I paid for it; when I bought it; the pictures I had shown and the prices paid for them, etc. At my surprise at all this information, he told me that film salesmen gather a lot of information and take it to the home office where a careful record is kept of each exhibitor.

At Henniker, New Hampshire, situated about seven miles from Hillsborough, there was a picture show running, one night each week. I purchased the picture machine and the business there last winter. The place was closed at the time, but I intended opening and running it during the summer months and had booked pictures to use there when I opened in May, 1920.

After our talk at Hillsborough, Mr. Harwood circulated in Henniker and many of the adjoining towns the story that he had purchased my Hillsborough business; and on the strength of this he secured a permit from the authorities of the town of Henniker and a lease of the hall in which I had intended to open. Friday, April 30, 1920, he held his first picture show there, announcing in the local paper that pictures would be shown there under the direction of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp.

I was later notified to move out my projector and accessories. It looks to me as though my Henniker business was virtually stolen by misrepresentation. Mr. Harwood now runs shows in Henniker, Warner and Raymond, N. H.

Polite to Mr. Black

Senator Jimmy Walker, who ably conducted the hearing throughout, promised another hearing as soon as the committee could set a date, with hints of more startling testimony. Among the members of the committee on the rostrum at Wednesday's hearing were: E. T. Peter, of Texas, chairman; H. C. Varner, of North Carolina; J. T. Collins, of New Jersey; W. D. Burford, of Illinois; Fred C. Seegert, of Wisconsin.

Chicago Musicians Return to Work After Strike of 11 Weeks

Operators' Strikes in Albany, Providence and New Orleans, Ended

PEACE between striking musicians and operators and moving picture theatre managers seems to have descended practically upon the entire country. The Chicago musicians, who have been on strike since July are back at work; in New Orleans the managers and musicians, operators and stagehands have come to terms; and the Albany and Providence operators have reached an agreement with the employers. In Seattle the musicians of the Liberty theatre are reported to be still on strike.

The musicians' strike in Chicago ended on September 8th, when the men took their places in the orchestra pits of practically every house using musicians and for the first time in eleven weeks.

An interesting feature of the men's return to work was the indifference with which the public greeted their reappearance, no unusual applause being noted in the different houses, which had been drawing their usual quotas of patrons despite the absence of music.

The strike officially came to an end Sunday night when representatives of the Allied Amusements Association, including Messrs. Joe Trinz, Nathan Ascher, Sam Katz, Harry Newell, Hopkinson and Sam Atkinson, and President Jos. E. Winkler, of the Musicians' Union, signed an agreement whereby musicians in theatres outside the loop received a forty per cent wage increase. The final fade out of the strike came after the greater part of two days had been consumed in parleys and was regarded as a victory for the theatre owners, as, under the terms of the agreement, they will be allowed to fix the size of their own orchestras, and many are planning to take advantage of this clause to reduce the number of men employed.

The original demands of the musicians was for a seventy-five percent increase and for a five hour work day, but both of these went into the discard and the minimum working time for which they will draw pay draw pay will be thirty-three hours.

The increased pay, as granted, will work out so that houses charging fifteen cents will now pay musicians $49 instead of $35 for thirty-three hours, twenty-five cent houses $51.80 instead of $37, and graduating up to fifty cent houses, which will pay $58.80 instead of $42.

A number of the larger houses will raise their admissions to meet the increased cost of their orchestras instead of reducing the number of musicians, including Asher Brothers chain, which already has raised their admission price from twenty-five to twenty-eight cents, including war tax.

While the strike has not injured business in the great majority of Chicago houses, picketing and other forms of annoyance, including the throwing of stink bombs, had been resorted to in the efforts of the union to force some theatres to grant their demands, and the house managers are relieved to have the strike amicably settled.

One lesson has been brought home strongly to the managers by the eleven weeks lay off of musicians, and that is, that the picture is the thing, as was evidenced by the constant good attendance, and that while music is desirable, it is after all, only a setting for the screen drama.

Reports From Other Cities

Albany moving picture exhibitors and operators, at a meeting of committees representing both sides, reached an agreement last week whereby the existing wage contract which does not expire until Labor Day, 1921, is amended to grant an increase in wages of $10 a week to the operators. A clause was inserted calling for arbitration of all disputes in the future.

The operators have been receiving $25 a week under the contract, which expires next year. They recently demanded higher wages and threatened to go out on a strike if the same was not granted.

All differences between the Moving Picture Operators and Stage Employes' unions in Providence, R. I., and the managers of the theatres have been adjusted. The moving picture operators, under the terms of the agreement will, it is said, be the highest paid theatrical employes who are members of unions in that city. They will receive a wage of $48 for six six-hour days. Their assistants will receive $30 a week for six eight-hour days.

New Orleans theatre managers and musicians, stage hands and motion picture operators have come to terms, and the strike which menaced New Orleans' amusement for a week has been averted. The men won their wage demands, it is said, but the managers insisted on many changes in the working conditions, one of which called for the orchestras in vaudeville houses playing a little longer at the end of the shows than formerly.

Guns Figure in Troubles of Florida Company

GUNS and threats of bodily violence play an important part in the troubles of the Volvan Film Co., which was organized several months ago in Tampa, Fla., to sell advertising films, according to word received from the News correspondent, who sends the following tale:

"The Volvan Film Co. of Tampa, Fla., have a merry little war on between the officers of the company, H. W. Le Van is president of the company and David L. Volper is secretary and treasurer.

The trouble, so it is stated, had to do with the desire on the part of one of the officers, to increase the capitalization of the company. Mr. Le Var made complaint to the police that his partner, Mr. Volper, was toting a gat.

"Mr. Volper was arrested charged with carrying concealed weapons. At the hearing he claimed he carried the artillery for self protection, as he declared, Mr. Le Van had made threats against his life. The Judge slapped a $25. fine on the defendant, but suspended sentence."

Increased Prices Follow Strike Settlements

(Special Correspondence to The News)

ALBANY, N. Y.—In order that the public may fully understand the real reason back of the advance in admission prices to the motion picture theatres of Schenectady, the managers of many places have posted notices over the ticket window stating that "owing to the demand for increased wages by operators, musicians and stage hands, it has been necessary to increase the prices of admission." Every theatre in Schenectady has increased its admission prices, although as a rule these increases have been but slight. At the Palace, 22 cents is top price for the afternoon performance and 35 cents for the evening performance. The threatened strike was offset by a compromise between the managers and the various unions.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 11.—Increased expenses in the theatres of this city because of advances given moving picture operators and other attaches of the various types of theatres, forced a raising of the prices of all theatres here this week. In the case of moving picture theatres the advance was about five cents per head on the higher priced seats. Vaudeville and legitimate houses went up from eight to fifty cents.

New Jersey Exhibitors at First National Lunch

More than fifty exhibitors of New Jersey attended a luncheon at the Hotel Astor, New York City, on Friday, September 10th. The luncheon was given under the auspices of the First National Exchange of New Jersey and was made the occasion of a number of addresses by First National officials regarding the workings of the new sub-franchise system inaugurated by Associated First National Pictures. A. M. Fabian, manager of First National's New Jersey exchange, was the toast-master. Jacob Fabian, holder of the First National franchise for New Jersey, and J. D. Williams, manager of First National, were the principal speakers.

Brunet Succeeds Charles Pathe as President

Paul Brunet
President, Pathe Exchanges, Inc.
Administrateur, Pathe Cinema, Ltd., of Paris.
Director in Pathe Limited, of England.
Member of the Board of Governors,
Franco-American Board of Commerce and Industry.

A SIGNAL honor was this week conferred upon Paul Brunet, for the last two years Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., when he was elected to the presidency of that organization on the retirement of Charles Pathe, founder of the international organizations bearing his name.

Coupled with this recognition to the active manager of the American branch of the organization by placing the reins of the presidency in his hands, comes the hint that Pathe is about to greatly widen its activities and affiliations. In this connection interest is attached to the information that on his recent visit to Europe, Mr. Brunet and Charles Pathe were the guests in England at a dinner given by Lord Beaverbrook.

Charles Pathe's action in honoring his American executive is a move which has met with the unqualified and hearty enthusiasm of members of the organization here. Tracing the history of this week's important event the official statement issued declares:

"When Mr. Brunet returned to this country, among other important documents, he had the resignation of Mr. Pathe as president and a recommendation to the Board of Directors that Mr. Brunet be elected to succeed him. This was done at Monday's meeting of the full board, consisting of Paul Fuller, of Coudert Brothers, Edmund C. Lynch, of Merrill, Lynch & Co., Lewis Innerarity, Secretary of Pathe Exchange, Inc., Elmer Pearson, Director of Exchanges, Arthur Rousseau, Export Manager and G. L. Chanier, General Superintendent of Factories."

Mr. Brunet announced that all of the policies of Mr. Pathe would be carried out and carefully planned provision had been made for every possible phase of expansion and of new association.

Mr. Brunet was born and educated in Paris, and early in life began operation on the Paris Bourse. His financial activities covered a period of twenty-two years. Six years ago he came to America to join the Eclectic Film Company, then distributing Pathe's product. Later he became Comptroller of the Pathe Exchanges in the United States. In March, 1918, he was elected Vice-President and General Manager of the Pathe Exchange.

Kansas Exhibitors to Meet on September 27-28

A convention of the Kansas State Exhibitors' Association is announced by Secretary Van Praag, to be held at the Chamber of Commerce Building, Kansas City, on December 27 and 28. Kansas City was selected as it is an exchange point and it affords exhibitors an opportunity to arrange for their fall bookings immediately after the convention.

The association now numbers 245, and a 100 per cent. attendance is expected. Some of the important matters to be taken up are the establishment of a uniform contract in Kansas; a complete investigation of the franchise system; the matter of Sunday openings, and endorsement of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; the Cohen-Zukor conference, and a discussion of the Cleveland convention. A complete report of the Cleveland convention will be made.

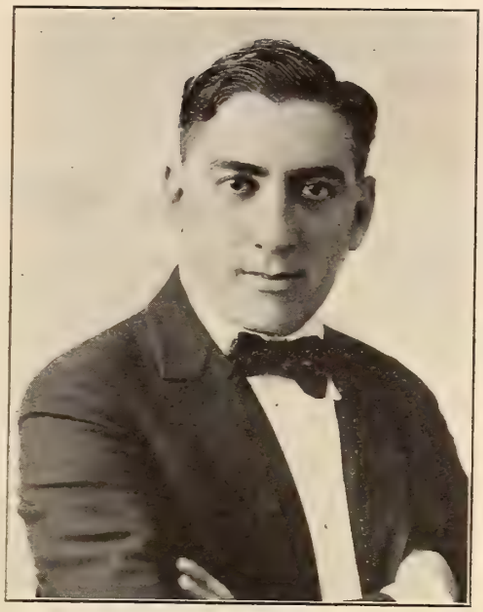
Sydney S. Cohen, president of the national organization, has been invited to attend, and it is expected that he will be on hand. The committee is arranging for suitable entertainment and the members of the association will be the guests of the Exchange Managers of Kansas City at a dinner and theatre party on the first night of the convention.

R. G. Liggett is president of the Kansas organization; R. H. Holmes, vice-president, and M. Van Praag, secretary.

Lesser and Gore in Four Booking Groups

Los Angeles—Articles of incorporation have been filed for the organization of the West Coast Exhibitors Booking Corporation, capitalized at $50,000 and having Sol L. Lesser, A. L. Gore and William Quinn as the organizing directors.

The corporation has already opened offices in suite 230 Knickerbocker Building on Olive Street, Los Angeles, and through this office which is managed by Quinn, all booking for the theatres under and operated by Gore Brothers and Sol Lesser will be handled.



In speaking of the new corporation Mr. Lesser said it was not in any way connected with the National Booking Corporation of which he and the Gore Brothers are members and that the sole purpose at present of the new corporation is to handle business connected with the booking of pictures for this company's theatres.

Jesse Hampton Not to Use Robertson-Cole Studio

Articles published recently, stating that the Jesse D. Hampton Studios in Los Angeles had been taken over by the Special Pictures Corporation and that Mr. Hampton would make productions in the new Robertson-Cole studios in Hollywood are declared incorrect in a statement from the New York office of the Jesse D. Hampton Production.

Special Pictures Corporation has merely leased part of Hampton's large studio space.

HIRAM ABRAMS, president of the United Artists Corporation, has been honored by Collier's Weekly through being chosen as one of the nation's most successful business men, and worthy of inclusion in the five volume set, "The Book of Business."

The career of the motion picture executive takes rank in the volumes alongside such business men as J. Ogden Armour, president of Armour and Co., Charles H. Schwab, Charles H. Sabin, Elbert H. Gary, John N. Willys, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., E. M. Statler, John H. Patterson, John Wanamaker, and three score others of prominence in financial, commercial and industrial lines.

Educational in Canada on October 1

All Educational Films Corporation product will be available through the six Canadian distributing centers on October first, it being announced that the organization of Canadian Educational Films, Ltd., has been practically completed. The principal office will be in Toronto, with branches in St. John, Montreal, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver. Educational Films Corporation is associated with Messrs Jule and Jay J. Allen, the largest exhibitor interests in Canada, in the organization of the Canadian company. Physical distribution will be carried on through the Famous Players Film Service, an Allen subsidiary.

While none of the Mermaid, Chester or Torchy comedies have been shown in Canada, much of the Educational product is already known through the Dominion. While the Christie comedies were being distributed in the United States through independent exchanges, the Canadian rights were controlled by the Allens, as were the Chester-Outings. The Allens also distributed the Bruce Scenics Beautiful and other Educational product by arrangement with the local company.

Detroit Mourns Death of A. J. Gilligham

Detroit. — Detroit theatre circles were greatly affected by the sudden death in Atlantic City, last Friday, of A. J. Gilligham, one of the best-known motion picture men in the state.

Mr. Gilligham was the owner of the Empire theatre on Woodward avenue, one of the most profitable small theaters in the country. He was a partner in the firm of Gilligham & Smith, which, under the title of Consolidated Theatres, Inc., operates a circuit of theatres in Grand Rapids.

Mr. Gilligham was head of the General Film Co. in Detroit, in association with Phil Gleichman, in the pioneer days of the exchange business.

In addition to his motion picture interests, Mr. Gilligham had large holdings in motor car and other industrial companies, and was president of the A. J. Gilligham Realty Co. He was one of the first presidents of the Michigan Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. He was 52 years old,

Louisiana "Blue Sky Law" Affects Franchises

(Special to Motion Picture News)

NEW ORLEANS.—The new "Blue Sky Law" of Louisiana will have a direct effect on motion picture producers and distributors and their representatives, it is declared. The measure, which went into effect August 15, will have relations especially to the distribution under the "franchise" system. In a broad way the franchises promise to the exhibitor a participation in the profits of the business accruing from the sales and distribution of the pictures in his own house and territory.

Hereafter representatives of those firms selling such franchises or rather franchises containing such a promise will be compelled to take out a state license.

Organize in Mississippi

NEW ORLEANS.—The organization of independent motion picture exhibitors of Mississippi and their affiliation with the same kind of an organization in Louisiana is a movement already strongly under way here.

Plane, Rushing Print, Saves Theatre from Disaster

THE new $250,000 Bakersfield, Cal., California Theatre, seating 1,500, Mrs. Oliver Grogg, manager, which opened September 15, was saved from the disaster of non-arrival of feature film print of Charles Ray's "Forty Minutes from Broadway" by the quick action of Sol Lesser and Dave Bershon. The print reached Los Angeles from East for western premiere only shortly before time for scheduled performance. Lesser and Bershon decided to take the print on big Oriole pessenger speed plane and made a record trip from Los Angeles to Bakersfield.

Lichtman Sells Paramount Pictures in Mid-West

Al Lichtman, general manager of distribution, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, returned September 13th from a business trip to Minneapolis and St. Paul. While in Minneapolis he reports that he closed a contract with the firm of Finkelstein & Ruben.

Lazarus Succeeds Gulick as A. M. P. A. Head

What is conceded to have been one of the most progressive and successful years in the annals of Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., was rounded out this week by a valedictory address by Paul Gulick, the retiring president, and the election of officers for the coming year at the latest gathering of the association. Paul Lazarus, vice-president during the expired year, was unanimously elected to the presidential chair, while the rest of the ticket comprises C. L. Yearsley, vice-president; Julian Solomon, secretary, and Victor Shapiro, treasurer. These are also ex-officio members of the board of directors, which includes also Paul Gulick, Charles Barrell, P. A. Parsons, Harry Reichenback and Jerome Beatty. Horace Judge was elected to the newly created post of managing editor of the A. M. P. A. organ, The Bulletin, of which Tom Wiley was re-elected business manager.

Educational Branch for New Orleans

Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., announces the immediate opening of its branch office for Louisiana and Mississippi with headquarters in New Orleans. William E. Evans, a film man of long experience in the New Orleans territory, has been selected as manager of the new office, which is being incorporated under the name of the Educational Film Exchange of Louisiana and Mississippi.

Until Sept. 27 the exchange offices will be located with the Harcol Film Company, 608 Canal street, but after that date it will have its own quarters at 330 Camp street.

Fine Arts Editing Bureau to Serve Entire Trade

Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., have heard from several sources that there is a mistaken impression among various producers regarding the function of the Fine Arts Editing Bureau, headed by Edward M. Roskam. The purpose of this department is to cut, re-title, and re-edit motion pictures for the trade. Rumor had it that Roskam would cut Fine Arts Pictures exclusively, but this is not true. The new department is busily engaged in cutting several big productions for the trade.

Exhibitors Testify on Alfred S. Beach

and Charles O'Reilly, executive member from New York, clung to the background, expressing a desire to make all things as pleasant as possible for Mr. Black, even to the point of shrinking into the silence.

The appearance of Mr. Saulisbury and his attitude created a favorable impression for Zukor, and his desire to fulfill the agreement recently reached with the exhibitor organization. "Things said here indicate the need of disinfectant," declared Mr. Saulisbury, "and we are going to use one—if we have to resort to carbolic." Mr. Zukor has no desire and has never had any desire to go into theatre activities except in so far as necessary to protect himself in bigger centers. He realizes that the small theatre man must be kept in business as his customer. We have been financially interested in Mr. Black's company but we cannot countenance such operations as discussed here to-day.

"Regarding our Boston office I will admit that there was considerable of a 'smell' there previous to February. But as soon as the truth about conditions was brought to Mr. Zukor's attention there was a clean-up. We are ready to clean up any other sore spots that exhibitors can show to us, and we ask that they have more faith in the home office. Let us know! We can't do anything in the dark."

Here Are "the Papers"

Following is the text of the invitation sent Black by the committee:

Your recent letter reiterating your refusal to attend before the Investigating Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America may be based on undue apprehensions on your part.

May we not say to you that the Committee in its desire to have you attend their meetings, is inspired by the sole motive of fair play. Mr. Sydney S. Cohen, President of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and Mr. Charles L. O'Reilly, Executive Committee member from New York, will not participate in the proceedings of the Committee in the hearing of the charges made against you by New England exhibitors. Briefly and frankly, we want nothing more than to extend an opportunity to you to contradict the allegations as to your coercive methods in dealing with independent exhibitors in New England. These allegations have been made under oath, and cannot therefore be treated lightly or dismissed with a gesture of contempt. If the allegations supported by solemn oath are substantially true, every fair minded man will conclude that your methods have indeed been coercive and quite possibly illegal.

We want to hear the other side: that is, your side. We will be happy to have you appear before us with counsel, and we will assist, under the direction of your counsel, in protecting all your legal rights. You will never be asked to impeach yourself or to testify against yourself.

Hoping, therefore, that you will see your way clear to attend the next session of our Committee, we beg to notify you that the Committee meets on Wednesday, September 15th, at 10:30 A. M. promptly at the Hotel Astor, New York City.

We are glad to note from your letter that you are anxious for the representatives of the press to attend the meeting. To this extent at least, we are in hearty and entire accord. We are pleased to add that Mr. Adolph Zukor has also been invited to attend, and we are earnestly hoping for his presence at the opening of the session.

Very truly yours,
MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNERS OF AMERICA.

Sales of Fine Art Film Still Going On

Associated Enters Canada

William L. Hunter

WITH John L. Hunter as general manager of distribution, Associated Producers, Ltd., of Canada, has been formed to market the productions of the director group in that territory. Fred Warren, general manager of distribution of the American "A. P." organization, announced the new unit and appointment this week.

Canadian head offices of the newly formed organization will operate from Toronto, with branches in Montreal and a Western Canada office probably placed at Calgary. Releases will be inaugurated about the middle of October with "The Leopard Woman" leading, followed by "Homespun Folks," "The Forbidden Thing," and "The Last of the Mohicans."

John L. Hunter, a native Canadian, comes direct to the "A. P." from the home office of First National. He entered the picture field in 1912, serving with George Kleine for five years. In 1917 he joined the Canadian Flying Corps, being later wounded while bombing the city of Metz, and subsequently awarded the Croix de Guerre for a long distance raid on Mannheim.

Douglas Cooper has been named as assistant to Mr. Hunter.

"Babe" Ruth Refused a Permanent Injunction

A permanent injunction restraining Educational Films Corp. from displaying "Babe Ruth, How He Makes His Home Runs" was refused September 15 by the Supreme Court Justice sitting in the case.

It is stated this decision does not prejudice the ball player's suit for one million brought against the company.

Exhibitors Summoned to Cincinnati Convention

Motion picture exhibitors of Southern Ohio, West Virginia and Kentucky will be called together for a general convention to be held in Cincinnati, at the Hotel Gibson, on October 7 and 8, according to a notice sent out by I. W. McMahan, president of the Greater Cincinnati Exhibitors' League.

The object of the meeting is "the formation of an organization for the improvement and general welfare of the motion picture business throughout the Middle West." Among the subjects which will come up for discussion are the questions of music licenses, deposits, and payment in advance. In addition to the business sessions a number of entertainment features have been provided. The Miami Valley Exhibitors' League has signified its intention of co-operating with the Cincinnati association in arranging the meeting, and an attendance of between 300 and 400 exhibitors is expected.

The proposed convention is the outcome of a recent meeting of the Greater Cincinnati Exhibitors' League, when the members were addressed by Fred J. Herrington, of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association of America.

The committee appointed to arrange the coming meeting consists of Andrew Hettesheimer, I. Libson, Otto Luedeking, John J. Huss, Isaac Frankel, Henry Levy, George Kolb, and Robert Ackerman, of Cincinnati; Harry Kress, of Piqua; Dr. Alexander, of Dayton; Godfry Kotzen, of Covington, Ky., and Fred Tynes, of Portsmouth.

Kofeldt Succeeds "Henri" for Pathe in Frisco

SAN FRANCISCO.—Owing to poor health, H. J. Henrioulle, popularly known in film circles as "Henri," has resigned as manager as Pathe Exchange, Inc., San Francisco. His resignation is greatly regretted by his many friends in this territory. However, the managerial position will be filled by Walter W. Kofeldt, who takes charge of this branch.

Kofeldt is well-known in film and theatrical circles on the Coast, having been engaged in this business for the past six years. He was formerly branch manager for Pathe, Portland, Ore., Seattle, Wash., and Minneapolis, Minn.

Concert Engagements

THE New York Concert League, through its Motion Picture Department at 1664 Broadway, assumed the management of the following artists: Wilifred Glenn Basso, and Sudworth Frasier, Tenor—both stellar attractions at The New York Capitol; Athene Buckley, Soprano; Gordon Kay, Baritone; Bessie McCoy, Soprano; The Mendelsohn Quartet, Vocal; Erna Pielka, Contralto; The Manhattan Ladies Quartet, Vocal.

During the past week most of these artists were heard by Mr. Maurice Barr and Mr. Saenger, of the Saenger Amusement Company and were booked over the Saenger circuit.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATRES

EXHIBITORS' reports on the feature pictures playing leading theatres of the country are shown on this page. Only such houses as play a picture a full week are represented. An entirely new list of comments appears each week, same being for the bills played the previous week. After publication once on this page the reports are transferred to the "Exhibitors' Box Office Reports" department appearing on the pages backing the "Plan Book" reviews.

The theatres reporting or the cities from which the reports have been secured are not given, since few managers of leading theatres will permit their opinions to be quoted.

Managers who are willing to assist in compiling this most valuable exhibitor service will be furnished blanks for returns and assurance is given that their reports will be considered strictly confidential.

FAMOUS PLAYERS

What's Your Hurry?—

Extra big in every way. Everybody liked the picture and it held up for the entire week. Reid a great favorite.

Wallace Reid held and still holds the Sunday record for the greatest amount of business in one day. Receipts were $3,590 Sunday.

Picture fair with box office receipts ranking the same. The star constituted the highest drawing card. (East)

Held feature over for second week to big business. We regard it as Wallace Reid's best picture. (Middle West).

Lady Rose's Daughter—

Story criticized by newspapers. Audiences appeared to like it. Large attendance. (Middle West.)

Fair picture with popular star. Did average business for three days.

Guilty of Love—

Good business. Fair picture. (East.)

Humoresque—

Starts second week with capacity business. Everybody talking about it. Brings people never in the theatre before. (West.)

Best picture since "Miracle Man." Playing to standing room at every performance. (Middle West.)

Biggest business in history of house. Wonderful picture. (East.)

First week to capacity. House record broken by $3,000 at new scale of prices, 30c, 50c, 75c and $1.10 for box chairs at night, 25c and 40c daily matiness. Believed that run will last four or five weeks. (Middle West.)

Cradle of Courage—

Fine picture, played to big business. (West.)

A different Hart picture, but none-the-less vigorous than his Western productions. Pleased his admirers and also those who do not care for Hart as a rule. Big business. (East.)

The Cost—

Good exploitation put the picture over. (West.)

Hairpins—

Good picture but business about as usual. (West.)

The Village Sleuth—

Fair picture which drew ordinary business. (West.)

The Right to Love—

Big and costly production but not so much as entertainment. Drew well three days and fair last four. (Middle West.)

An artistic production that packs the necessary punch. Fourth day of week and every promise of breaking all records. Universally liked and talked about. (East.)

So magnificent as to take the breath away. And still so unnatural that it fails to awaken any responsive chord in audience. Too much like acting and too little like life. People like picture in which they can insert their own personality in place of the characters in the play.

The White Circle—

Our patrons don't care for costume pictures. This one no exception. Poor box office returns. (Middle West.)

Artistic picture but only ordinary box office returns. (East.)

The Prince Chap—

An excellent production which drew well. (Middle West.)

The Toll Gate—

Rather a mediocre picture and was not up to the Hart standard, according to several critics. Nevertheless, it drew well, as Hart is popular here. (Middle West.)

Sins of St. Anthony—

Despite an all day rain this picture pulled within a few dollars of Sunday record business. The picture was thoroughly enjoyed. (Middle West.)

Crooked Streets—

Rather good melodrama; pretty good business. (East.)

What's Your Husband Doing?

Big business—took well with the audience. (East.)

The Fighting Chance

Very good film. The public agrees, for business has been very good. (East.)

What Happened to Jones—

Rather good comedy. Can't kick about the business. (East.)

Something to Think About—

One of the "really, truly" great pictures of the year. Tremendous business for entire week. (East.)

GOLDWYN

Madame X—

Medium business (East).

Pauline Frederick's greatest picture and one of the best productions ever offered by Goldwyn. Broke house records for box office receipts Sunday and did big business during entire week. Held over for second week's run. (Middle west.)

Going Some—

Picture fairly good; business so-so. (East.)

The Branding Iron—

Very good value both from box office and entertainment angles.

FIRST NATIONAL

The Notorious Miss Lisle—

Only fair picture but is drawing good on account of title and star's reputation for wearing clothes. (West.)

Good picture bringing more than usual business. (West.)

Forty-five Minutes From Broadway—

Went over good and drew usual Ray audience. Business about average for week. Some disappointed who like star in boob parts. (Middle west.)

The Idol Dancer—

An excellent production which drew well. (Middle west.)

Yes or No?—

Stood them up for greater part of seven day run. Norma Talmadge real box office magnet for this house. Audiences enjoyed picture.

The Man Who Had Everything—

Good picture. Business about usual.

Jack Knife Man—

A fine picture. Exhibitors say so. Critics say so, but the public is slow to appreciate it. So unusual, so different from what is generally seen on the screen. A picture that is ahead of the times. Did only fair both downtown and in neighborhood section.

The Love Flower—

Exotic picture that is so cleverly done as to get right under the skin. Opened to average business, but gained daily.

UNIVERSAL

The Devil's Passkey—

Picture is entertaining. Drew well. (West.)

REPUBLIC

Girl of the Sea—

Good moneymaker. Drew 300 extra children. A novelty that will attract. Not a world-beater, but everyone satisfied. (Middle West.)

FOX

Sink or Swim—

Good picture with usual business. (West.)

The Skywayman—

Box office returns big on opening days. Too early to get entertainment angle. (West.)

Business fell down after the opening and on Saturday Tom Mix in "The Untamed" replaced it. Killing of aviator at State Fair is believed to have affected business. (Middle West.)

METRO

The Hope—

The plot of the picture is good. Good receipts. (East.)

PATHE

One Hour Before Dawn—

REALART

Sweet Lavender—

An excellent production and a good box office attraction.

Sid Grauman's Novelty Prologue for "The Round Up"

Scenes from Sid Grauman's novelty prologue for "The Round Up" shown at Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles, last week, as described on the opposite page

Press Book Will Contain Prologue Script

A prologue suggestion for "In the Heart of a Fool" is a part of the press book gotten out for the production.

The suggested prologue, although spectacular in effect, entails only a moderate investment and has been aranged with sufficient elasticity to make it practical for both the small and the large theatres.

The prologue takes the form of an allegory in which is presented the evil passions that thrive in "In the Heart of a Fool." The stage setting is simple, consisting of a neutral back-drop, a large heart set in the center of the stage and a weaver's loom. As the main curtain rises, the Weaver of Destiny is seen sitting at his loom. The stage is in semi-darkness with a white spot playing on the Weaver. He taps on the Heart and a hooded figure whom the Weaver presents as "Lust" emerges. A symbolic flood of red light illuminates "Lust."

After tersely elucidating the malefactions of Lust, the Weaver dismisses that evil spirit and summons in succesion, "Passion," "Cowardice," "Deceit" and finally "Love," whose appearance is signalized by a white light centered first on the figure and then flooding the entire stage. Draped in an airy costume, Love, interpreted by a pretty woman, holds the center of the stage while she tells of the power she wields in driving evil spirits from the heart of a fool.

Complete details relative to the staging of the prologue are offered in the press sheet. It is presented in the form of a scenario with complete dialogues and suggestions as to the arranging of lighting effects.

Describing the Capitol Ballet Numbers

TWO ballet numbers are given on the Capitol program this week. The first is a solo by Mlle. Gambarelli, "The Moth and the Flame."

The stage setting provided for this act is a black velvet drop, with the only props being a single stick floor candle. Mlle. Gambarelli dances about the candle to excerpts from "Voeglein" and "Erotik" by Greig. Flood amber lights are used.

The second ballet offering is by Mlle. Gambarelli, A. Oumansky, Eugenie Craige and Doris Niles under the title of "L'Autumne et L' Hiver" by Glazounow.

The stage setting is an exterior with wood cutout drop in one. Autumn leaves fall as the dance proceeds.

Attention is called to our Music department under the direction of Charles D. Isaacson and especially to the series of articles under the caption of "Music for Your Theatre" now current on pages immediately in front of "The Complete Plan Book."

Jackson's Campaign for "The Skywayman"

Novel and productive exploitation was employed by Manager Ben B. Jackson of William Fox's Audubon Theatre, New York, in the presentation of "The Skywayman."

Most prominent in the many clever ideas employed in the presentation of the picture was the presence, both in person and on the screen, of Capt. (Miss) Laura Bromwell, holder of the world's record for loping the loop in the air.

"The Skywayman" exploitation also included a novel and very effective lobby display. Ten miniature airplanes were used, suspended on invisible wires and in battle formation. Hanging from these planes were ten miniature blimps on which were painted the title of the attraction, the name of the star and the playing dates. Eight 40x60 signs decorated with airplanes and other aircraft in action were used at points of vantage in the general lobby decorations—these also carrying catch lines and the fact that 10 per cent of the profits of the picture were to be given to the families of Locklear and Elliott. Record-making business at all performances was the result of the clever exploitation. Manager Jackson is firmly convinced that lobby displays are one of the most important advertising mediums for putting over a picture.

Brooklyn Strand Celebrates Anniversary

Edward L. Hyman Makes His Theatre's First Birthday City Event

PROMOTING an anniversary week so that it accumulates real exploitation value for the theatre as well as "getting the dough" isn't a new idea, but Managing Director Hyman of the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre didn't find it a desert barren of opportunity when his house celebrated its first birthday recently.

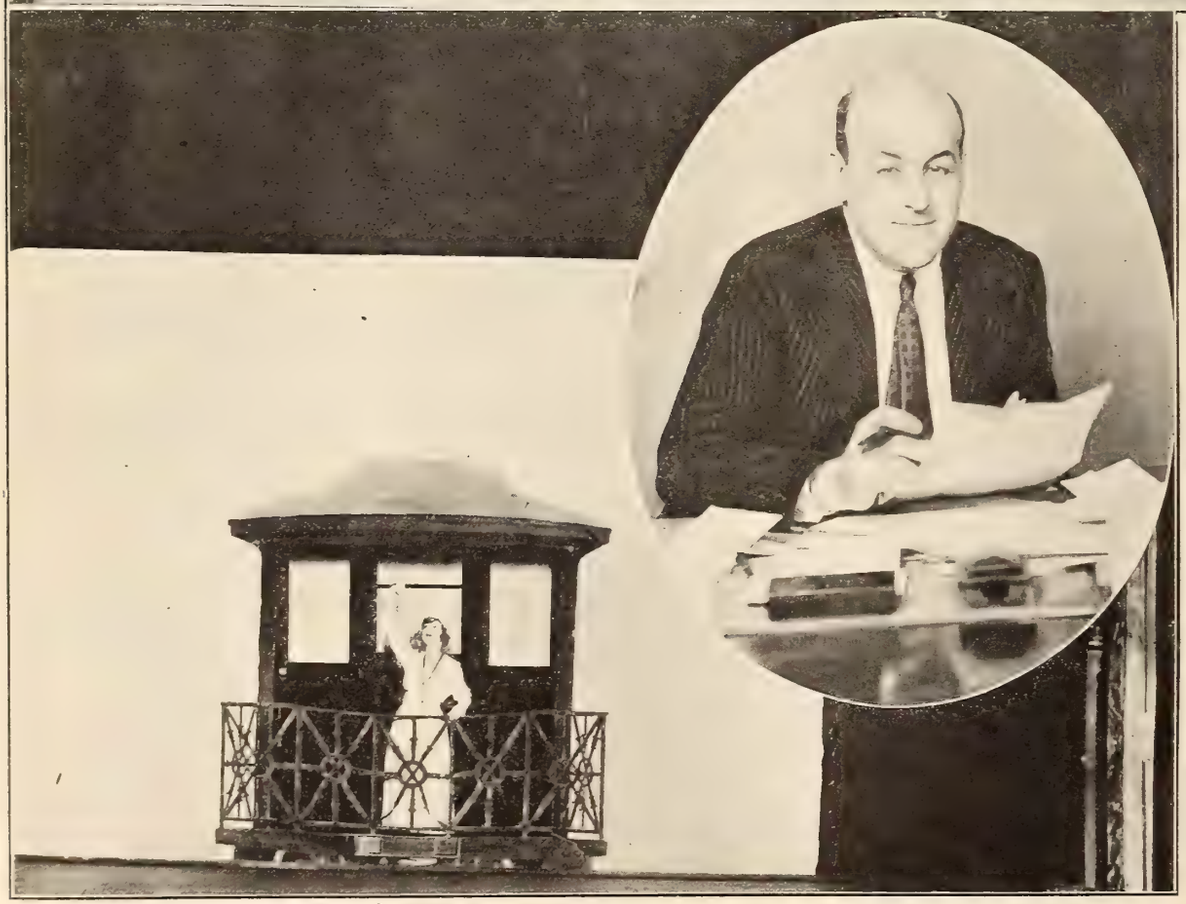
As a rule the public doesn't give three whoops whether or not a theatre is a year old, but Mr. Hyman tied up the old idea in a new way, and made everybody in Brooklyn talk about it, and also made them realize the house had made good and had even bigger things in view.

Mr. Hyman let the folks in on some inside stuff in regard to who owned the house, how it was operated to the public's best advantage. He impressed upon them that anniversary week was being used to convey to them the appreciation of the Strand officials and management for the patronage and interest and loyalty expressed by them. In other words, he illuminated the personality of the house—which is really the personality of the manager and the owners who back him up.

This was how he "did" it: The preliminary advertising announced that the Strand was a year old, but the surprise came when the patron got settled down to see the show. Then the exploitation hammer hit the nail on the head. Hyman spent a lot of time and research having a special Anniversary Week film made—a short subject that carried a lot of personal stuff, appreciation propaganda.

The film opened up with a friendly, smoothly worded announcement addressed "To Our Patrons." In appreciative strain it told how two years ago the owners of the New York Strand decided that the people of Brooklyn should have a theatre, the most beautiful in the land, one that stopped nothing short of peerless service. Then it told how Mitchel Mark, now deceased, realized his dream, and how the Brooklyn Mark Strand was built. The titling reviewed the immediate success of the Brooklyn Strand, and modestly hinted that its success was in a measure due to Messrs. Moe Mark, Max Spiegel and Walter Hays, heads of the Mark Strand Theater Co. Then the smiling faces of the officials were shown. The anniversary film then told how the Strand officials had searched for a man to administrate the theatre, and how they had decided upon Mr. Hyman as the one qualified to direct its destinies. The film then blossomed out with his picture and a warm message of appreciation from the owners and Mr. Hyman as a testimonial to their loyalty and support.

A glimpse into the future was given by telling the public they were to get such pre-eminent attractions as: Norma Talmadge in "The Branded Woman," Lionel Barrymore in "The Master Mind," Constance Talmadge in "Good References," Marshall Neilan's "Dinty" and others. The film was not obtrusive, but diplomatically arranged.



Other uses of the Anniversary Week idea were reflected throughout the performance. Hyman had special titles made for the week to replace the regular Strand trade-mark titles. At the beginning of each film subject a title was utilized, reading, "One Mile," and at the conclusion of each subject this title was used: "Strand Anniversary Week."

The audiences appeared to like the idea of being given an insight into the ownership and management, and applauded, the pictures of each official getting a rousing hand. That the idea "struck" was shown by numerous letters of congratulation that were sent in by patrons.

The show proper also received special attention, William Farnum in "If I Were King," being the headliner. Several added novelties with singers and dancers gave the Brooklynites a little more for their money than usual. The newspapers also mentioned the "birthday" party, adding to the exploitation value.

Prologues Effective When Properly Presented, Says Plunkett

Manager of the New York Strand Discusses Latest Presentation Wrinkles

SEVERAL events have recently united to bring the matter of prologues prominently before the attention of the exhibitors of the United States, and from the zeal with which many theatres are attacking methods for the inauguration of this striking and attractive adjunct to presentation there is danger that it may be pampered to death by well meaning but misguided directors. Used properly the prologue is a great advantage to any exhibitor both from the angle of day to day box-office receipts and that of making genuinely pleased patrons for the theatre. Ill-considered, badly designed and inappropriate prologues will have the opposite effect of disgusting patrons by suggesting a poor substitute for a vaudeville act.

I am in hearty accord with the opinion expressed in a recent article by C. L. Yearsley, director of Publicity for Associated First National Pictures, Inc., that the prologue of today is practicable and is by nature an exploitation device of most constructive and audience building value. He places emphasis on the fact that it is the prologue as practiced today that can be used by any exhibitor with profit to himself, and points out that the theatres which are using them to good advantage at the present time have arrived at the point of successful prologue presentation only after a long period of trial, disappointment and experimenting. The prologue has won itself a regular place on the programmes at the Strand, and in reaching the present point the management not only had its own experiences in prologue work to help in guarding against error, but at the same time that the Strand was experimenting for true light in regard to this method of presentation, other large theatres in New York were embarked on the same pioneer journey, and a resume of the discoveries that have been made, the conclusions that have been reached and the rules that have been established, if followed closely by any exhibitor will bring to him the same profit that the prologue is bringing every week to the Strand.

The first thing for a director to realize is that a prologue differs from a vaudeville act in that the prologue must have no conclusion and no climax. It is a prologue, a foreword and introduction to something that is to come, and it must always be borne in mind that it is not a complete performance in itself but merely an adjunct to the feature picture on the programme. It serves the same place in a programme as a personal introduction does in a business conference. Its aim should be to put the audience and the feature production on intimate terms so that the enjoyment of the theatre patrons may be increased.

Care must be taken that the prologue in no way overshadows the feature production. Do not steal too much effective stuff from the picture to use in the prologue. Do not make the prologue too long, seven minutes should be the limit and four or five minutes is the most effective time. Do not make it too elaborate either as to dialogue, settings, number of people used, lighting effects or costume. Bear in mind that the most effective prologue is the one that carries the audience into a proper mood for the appreciation of the feature picture, one that makes them forget the laughs of the comedy that precedes it, or the interesting events pictured in the news reel or the scenic.

With these points absorbed the director can safely approach the mechanics of the construction of a prologue. Prologues fall naturally into two classes which for want of a better distinction may be referred to as "atmospheric" and "action." The atmospheric prologue is used effectively only in conjunction with pictures the scenes of which are laid in some foreign land the customs or costumes of which lend themselves to a stage action. One of the most effective of this sort of prologue which has come to my attention was that used by a western theatre, the name of which has escaped me, in conjunction with "The Idol Dancer."

The curtain rose on a darkened stage and by a "dimmer" effect gradually disclosed the outline of the popular conception of the crater of a volcano. The crater began to smoke then belched flame and the upper part of the stage was fairly well lighted. Gradually the flames and smoke subsided and the soft tinkles of a ukelele and Hawaiian guitar became audible, and the whole stage became softly illuminated disclosing a troupe of musicians in Hawaiian costume. As their music reached normal pitch the stage lighting again faded and the picture started on the screen disclosing a scene with a beautiful moonlight effect with which the picture opened. The belching volcano, an effect obtained through clever manipulation of lights, combined with the Hawaiian music, awakened every idea or recollection of the South Sea islands held by everyone in the audience and the opening scene of "The Idol Dancer" fitted in with every thought they were thinking.

Another illustration may be used to give the idea of the action prologue. This was staged in connection with "The Beauty Market." It will be recalled that the big climax in the picture hinges upon a telephone call which apprises the heroine that she must at once marry a wealthy man, or life as she then views it, will go to smash. The telephone call comes to her in the midst of a society dance at a country home. The prologue used in connection with this production which illustrates the action idea was staged by means of a back drop with three transparencies. The stage disclosed dancing couples. A maid enters. A girl wearing a costume closely following that used by Miss MacDonald in the same scene in the picture exists as the stage lights dim and two of the transparencies were lighted. One disclosed a library scene a man seated at a telephone showing impatience and anger. The other is a boudoir scene. The girl who has left the dance picks up the telephone receiver. The man in the library speaks angrily. The girl registers amazement then dejection, and hangs up slowly and then registers determination. Gradually the center transparency lighted while the library scene faded. A young man rather poorly dressed is disclosed holding his arms in an attitude of beseechment toward the girl. Her determination fades and she sinks on the table in tears as the lights fade and the picture starts.

No words were spoken throughout the prologue. The action was exciting and tense, and while it was not entirely clear, still it was gripping enough so that when the first few feet of the film disclosed three characters easily identified as those who had taken the prominent parts in the

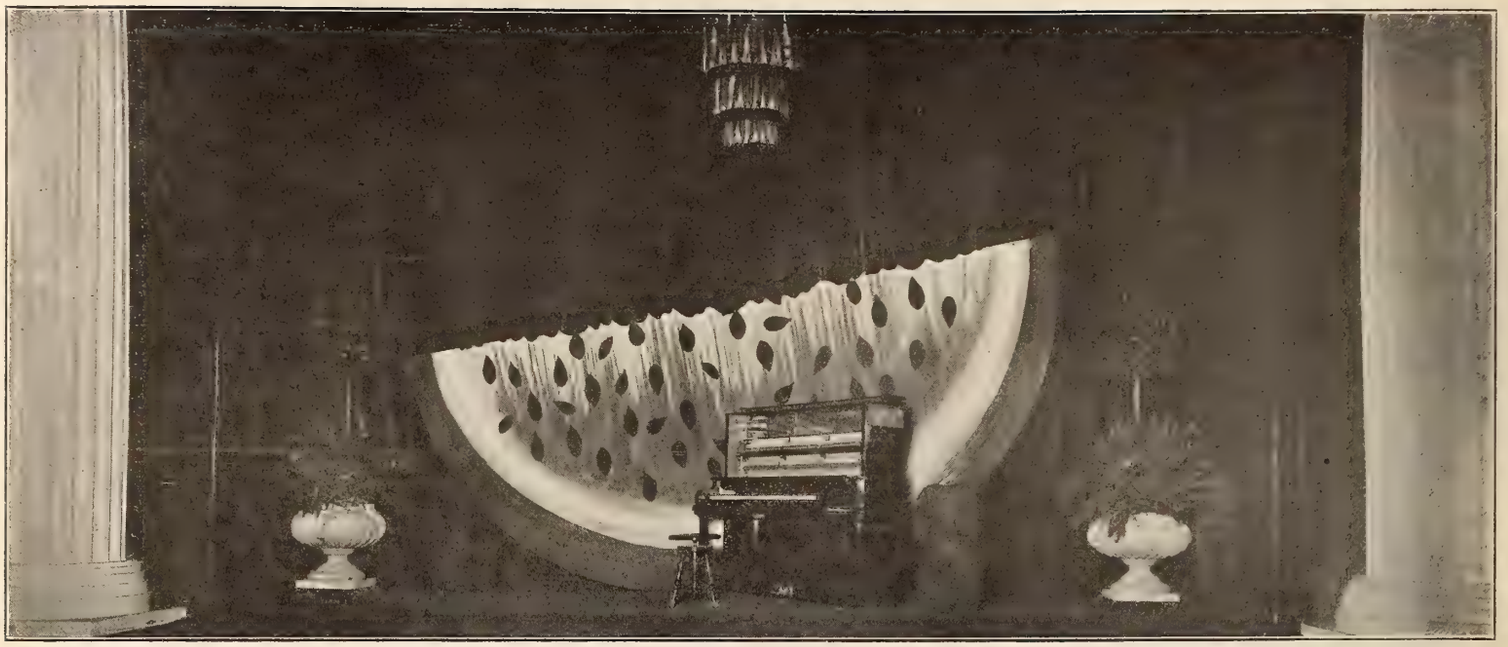
Concerning Prologues by Joseph L. Plunkett



EXPLOITATION, that most important factor in the picture events of the past year so far as the exhibitor is concerned seems destined to be succeeded sooner or later by presentation. Presentation that will have its expression in musical numbers, ballet acts, prologues and artistic lightings of the picture itself while on the screen.

Of these not the least is the prologue already progressed far enough to be beyond the experimental age and subject to discussion as to its merits and demerits.

The article on this page is by Joseph L. Plunkett, managing director of the Strand theatre, New York, one of the first houses to recognize the value of a prologue and to present them in conjunction with a feature picture.

Mr. Plunkett writes from personal experience. He expresses opinions based on observation of what has happened at the Strand.

The News takes pleasure in presenting its readers with the benefits to be derived with a perusal of his article.

A scenic slice of watermelon as shown above was the stage setting used for a blackface musical trio numbcr by the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, recently prologue, interest in the production rose to a high pitch and was maintained right through to the climax.

Occasionally a production comes along which offers the opportunity of both an atmospheric and action prologue and it is then that this form of presentation can be brought up to its highest pitch.. The most successful prologue we have had at the Strand, and almost the simplest, was one of this combination class and was used in connection with Charles Ray's "Forty-Five Minutes From Broadway." The production is almost ideal for prologue purposes and the stunt we used at the Strand brought forth applause at every performance, yet there was nothing really spectacular about it. The first set used was a painted drop of the railroad station at New Rochelle the city in which practically the entire action of the picture takes place. A quartet sings "So Long Mary" the song hit from the original musical comedy production, while a young woman carrying a grip and a package walks across the stage to exit. The lights were dimmed for a moment and then the young woman was disclosed on the observation platform of a train which seemed to be speeding rapidly away from the audience while the young woman waved good-bye. The picture opened also showing the station at New Rochelle.

The speeding effect of the train was gained in a simple way. The observation platform including the rail was painted on a drop with a cut out for a platform and a prop back ground of a railroad car door and windows. The rest of the drop was left white and a reel of a scenic taken from the front end of a railroad train was thrown on the white spaces giving the speeding effect of the train.

Cavatina from I'Pagliacci at Capitol This Week

THE usual opera selection at the Capitol this week is the "Bird Song" from "I'Pagliacci," sung by Marie Stapleton Murray.

The artist is attired in the correct costume called for in the opera manuscript and has been provided with a stage setting, the work of Artist Wenger.

A night sky drop is masked at its base by set pieces suggesting a landscape at night covering half the stage width and a larger set piece on the left representing velvet draperies in front of which Miss Murray renders her song. The lightings on the sky drop are pale green with golden hues at the base. The singer is covered by an amber flood.

Orchestral accompaniment is accorded the singer.

As presentation, especially in its relation to music becomes more important, our Music department under the direction of Charles D. Isaacson becomes paramount in importance. Read Mr. Isaacson's series of special articles now current under the caption of "Music for Your Theatre" on pages immediately following the Technical department.

Another Washing Machine Aids "Suds"

Again we chronicle how a washing machine company and a theatre manager tied up in exploiting "Suds." This time the story comes from Sioux City, Iowa, where John J. Friedl is the live wire manager of the Royal, one of Hostettler Brother's string of houses in Iowa and Nebraska.

Mr. Freidl originated a special contest in conjunction with the washing machine concern which obtained first page publicity for "Suds" on the pages of the Sioux City Tribune for five days and resulted in fine business for the picture.

Prints Hand Bills in Foreign Languages

Exhibitors so situated that an appeal can be made to a foreign population can build up a steady, large, well-behaved patronage by printing hand bills in the language which the population can read, according to the experience of N. R. Hellman, manager of the Royal theatre, Albany, N. Y. The entire membership of one of the societies in the district descended on the theatre one night for the purpose of seeing a news-reel which had several scenes from homeland. Mr. Hellman, discovered then that they were as well behaved and if anything quieter than the same number of his regular patrons and resolved to make the effort to attract them as regular patrons of his theatre. The officers of the society co-operated with him heartily and advised hand bills printed in foreign languages for any picture which did not need too many subtitles to explain its action. With the idea in mind of showing this large mass of possible patrons that the Royal showed drama which did not need subtitles to make the action clear Mr. Hellman waited for some weeks before utilizing the foreign language hand bills. He finally selected "The River's End" as a production which would furnish real entertainment without the necessity of understanding the subtitles and he had 5,000 hand bills printed the week prior to the opening of this production at the theatre. The hand bills called particular attention to the fact that the management of the theatre had selected this production as one which could be enjoyed to the utmost even if the spectator did not read or understand English. The response was immediate and for a week the new class of patrons crowded into the theatre, most of those after the first night attracted by the word-of-mouth advertising that the first nighters carried into the district.

Sobler and Pegler Put Over Great Campaign for "The Law of the Yukon"

RECENTLY Albert W. Sobler and Jack Pegler Mayflower exploitation men journeyed to Fall River, Mass., to aid L. M. Boss, manager of the Rialto theatre in putting over "The Law of the Yukon."

Within twenty-four hours after Sobler and Pegler arrived the name of the picture was on the top string of Fall River vocal chords.

The Fall River drive was inaugurated with the distribution of five thousand tack cards bearing red letters which read: "STOP! THE LAW of the Yukon demands your presence at the RIALTO."

These cards were attached to poles, fences and sheds along the three main highways leading into the city. The card was especially designed to get the attention of automobilists. Being, to all intents and purposes, a sure 'nough road law sign, it got plenty of attention from manipulators of the petrol steeds—and patronage for "The Law of the Yukon" resulted. The cards were also displayed prominently in shop windows and on fences all over the city.

To supplement the tack card advertising, the Mayflower exploitation representatives distributed 4,000 throw-aways one side of which read "Warning! The Law" and the reverse side of which followed on with "of Happiness Summons you to see 'The Law of the Yukon.'" The cards were strung and attached to automobiles and doorknobs.

The big splurge came on Monday, the day of the opening when every newsboy in the city "Wuxtried" "The Law of the Yukon" into fame. One half of the street editions of all the local newspapers had been bought and the front pages decorated in red ink with "See the Law of the Yukon" at the Rialto." The line was spread all over page one, being printed right over the news. This was accomplished by running the papers through a flat-bed press. It stuck out as conspicuously as would Jack Dempsey in a parade of Singer's midgets. The newspapers were given to the newsies gratis and they in turn sold them for the regulation three coppers. The cost of the stunt was equivalent to the price for a quarter-page ad in the three papers but no comparison can be made of the relative effectiveness of the screaming red type on the front page and the quarter page ad inside.

The front page announcement not only reached the attention of people who never bothered to read advertisements, amusement ads in particular, but it was so forceful and striking that it imbedded itself firmly in the mind of everyone who saw it and that means almost everybody in Fall River.

The fact that "The Law of the Yukon" deals with the Alaskan gold rush provided opportunity for a novel and effective stunt in the form of a "Sourdough Reunion." Through the local newspapers, a list was secured giving the names of all Fall River men who took part in the Yukon gold rush and who were still living in the city. Invitations were extended to these men to attend a special showing in their honor. The majority of those invited responded—most of them wearing the miner's outfit they brought back from the Yukon. The event and the ex-miner's testimonials on the picture's accurate representation of life in the Yukon were played up at considerable length in the news columns of the dailies.

Of course, the old reliable street bally-hoo was not overlooked in the campaign and thereby hangs a tale of thwarted deviltry. A street display was arranged in the form of an automobile—Pegler's newly-acquired and highly-prized flighty-flivver—decorated with banners reading, "More excitement than the Ponzi Gold Rush. See the Law of the Yukon, etc." The display was further festooned with huge money bags suspended from every available hook. Pegler sallied forth in his much decorated chariot but got no further than the main street when a cop stopped his progress with the information that there was a city ordinance against bally-hooing on a public thoroughfare. Conjuring visions of flaring headlines chronicling his misdeed, Peg enthusiastically admitted his guilt. He was taken before the magistrate where he did his best to convince the judicial arbiter that he was an unregenerate law-breaker and a menace to the community. The judge, however, was skeptical and let him off with a reprimand. However, he managed to secure an official permit to bally-hoo his festive gas-wagon all over the town thereby attracting considerable attention to the picture.

Another bally-hoo took the form of a man parading the streets in miner's regalia. Equipped with pick, shovel, pan and kit, all conspicuously labeled with the name of the picture, the psuedo gold-digger ambled leisurely along the streets reciting with much dramatic gusto the Robert W. Service poem upon which the picture is based. That his recitative efforts caught popular fancy was evinced by the crowds that collected about him wherever he went.

The Rialto's presentation of "The Law of the Yukon" was featured by a specially constructed lobby display—the first ever used in Fall River. A compo-board and oil cloth hut was erected on the Rialto's marquise and constructed so that it was visible from any point on the main street. The interior of the setting was illuminated with red lights which blazed through the windows and achieved a striking and attention-compelling effect. The entire front of the theatre was boarded with compo-board logs, sprinkled with white paint and tinsel. The composite effect attracted crowds of passers-by to the lobby.

Even the beautific young lady who was nominated the most beautiful salesgirl in Fall River in the National Sales Girls' Beauty Contest conducted by Mayflower and the Newspaper Enterprise Association helped to publicize "The Law of the Yukon." The pulchritudinous hair pin purveyor was assigned to write a review for exclusive publication in the Herald, the newspaper which conducted the contest in Fall River. The fact that she herself may become a gelatine charmer and the fact that the picture was produced under the auspices of the company that will feature the contest winner provided opportunity for the use of the Fall River Beauty. Her review together with her picture was given prominent display in the newspaper.

The stunt campaign was further augmented by lavish newspaper advertising which included a half page ad in the three local papers.

Broadway Strand, Detroit, Speciaities

THE Broadway Strand theatre of Detroit is presenting two novelties this week in conjunction with its film attractions.

Francis A. Mangan, production manager for the theatre has arranged an effective musical and dramatic prelude for "Humoresque," the feature picture which is provoking much favorable comment.

A recitation to music entitled "A Laugh on Life With a Tear Behind It," is followed by a violin solo of Dvorak's musical composition, "Humoresque," rendered by John S. Schaefer. "I Have a Rendezvous With Death," a short poem mentioned in the picture, is then recited by Florence Parks. Pictures of the present-day Holy Land are flashed upon the screen, and, as one of Jerusalem's "wailing" centers is shown, with its crowd of worshippers of all sects, Leon Zario, grand opera tenor, appears behind a netted screen, and sings "Eli Eli" ("Through the Ages," or "The Wrath of the Gods"), the famous Hebrew lament. The feature film follows immediately.

In conjunction with one of the shorter attractions, "Modern Centaurs," which depicts the daring feats of Spain's leading horsemen, a dramatic tableau is presented, in which Florence Parks, soprano, sings 'My Cavalier." Both the tableau and Zario's performance are done in costume.

Rivoli of Toledo Plays Premiere of "The County Chairman"

How S. Barrett McCormick Put Over Neil Burgess' Famous Rural Classic

To S. Barrett McCormick and his new Rivoli theatre of Toledo, Ohio, fell the honor and financial reward of the premiere showing of the picture version of Neil Burgess' stage classic of a generation just passed, "The County Chairman." The engagement began Sunday, Sept. 12th, and continues through to the end of this week.

Following the plan of exploitation, Mr. McCormick used while managing the Circle theatre of Indianapolis, newspaper displays were principally relied upon to acquaint Toledo people of the merits of the production and the fact that it was playing at the Rivoli. These displays were of sufficient size and attractive enough in design to catch public attention and were run for a full week before the opening date.

One ad was an exact replica of a regular county fair ad. White lettering on a heavy black background announced The County Fair, and the attractions that the fair had to offer, including the great horse race, Tim's rescue of Cold Molasses from the Burning Stables; Wesley Barry catch the Greased Pig; The Big Midway with its Freaks and Fakirs. Other ads were original drawings by newspaper cartoonists who injected a lot of comedy into their work.

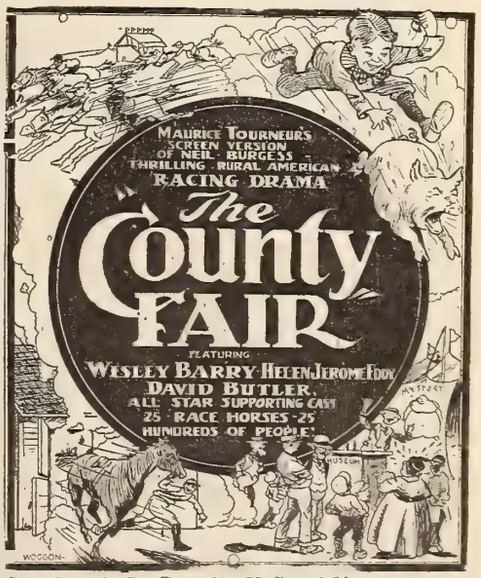
Two of Mr. McCormick's displays are reproduced on this page.

During the week, "Sawyer's Corner Prize Huskin' Bee Band" rendered two free band concerts outside the Rivoli theatre, one in the afternoon and one in the evening.

The only "stunt" pulled in connection with the opening of "The County Fair" was in the nature of an announcement to the public. The Toledo Blade, The News-Bee and The Times each carried an announcement in heavy type warning the people of Toledo to beware of ticket brokers and scalpers, who ask advanced prices to see "The County Fair." The warning created a lot of local interest. People didn't know that picture theatre tickets were in such demand as to require street scalpers, and it added new interest to the engagement.

Prior to the regular engagement "The County Fair" was given a special showing to 1500 Toledo newsboys, who were guests of Mr. McCormick and J. L. Lee, special represntative of Guy Croswell Smith, who controls the production. The picture was an ideal offering to interest the newsies and the amount of publicity obtained for the attraction that could be directly traced to the boys' discussions and enthusiastic praise for what they had seen was the best of advertising mediums.

"We even heard a couple o' kids betting on the horse race," Mr. McCormick said. The boys, of course, howled over the greased pig chase, and Tommy Perkins' (Wesley Barry) manner of winning the five dollar prize that went with the catching of the pig. They hissed when the Hammerhead horse won the race, leaving "Cold Molasses," whose purse was to lift the mortgage from the old farm, in second place. But how they howled when "Lightening" was disqualified and "Cold Molasses" walked off with the honors. All of eleven cents changed hands among the newsies at the conclusion of this race, Mr. McCormick states on absolute authority.



After they had seen the picture, Manager McCormick and Mr. Lee picked out some of brighter looking chaps from among the crowd, took them up to the private office, and let them tell Maurice Tourneur out in Los Angeles just how they liked the picture. One of the boys talked to Mr. Tourneur six minutes. It took him that long to say "that 'County Fair' is a pippin' of a picture, and I like it a lot, and I'm much obliged for lettin' me see it."

The showing at Toledo was in the nature of a "try it on the dog" engagement except for the fact that the combination of Mr. McCormick and the new Rivoli made the event of unusual importance.

The success of the engagement, ten thousand people gaining admittance to the attraction the first day attests to the value of pre-release showings where an average unbiased audience may be obtained and also to the efficiency of a newspaper campaign as an advertising medium.

"Kol Nidre" Being Sung at the Capitol

IN honor of "Yom Kipper" the Capitol theatre is presenting a specialty number under the title of "Invocation and Kol Nidre" in which the Jewish melody "Kol Nidre," originally an invocation used in Hebrew religious services is sung by a quartet composed of Marie Stapleton Murray, Malanie Berbourwens, Sudworth Frasier and Bertram Peacock and rendered as a cello solo by Helen Scholder. The artists are attired in the traditional robes of the Hebrew.

Artist John Wenger has provided a stage setting which is a gem in artistry. A dull black drop is hung up stage with a black strip perhaps four feet wide hung in the center of the stage and on which has been painted a monogram and a tablet with Hebrew sentences which we assume to be the ten commandments. The colorings of the decorations on the black strip are particularly effective.

Back of the strip two floor candle sticks are placed, each stick holding three lighted candles. The artists work in front of the tablestrip and are lighted by floods which only encompass their forms and the tablet drop.

Rivoli Has Novelty Ballet Number

"IN A TOY SHOP" is the title of the Rivoli ballet offering this week. The number is a trio with Vera Myers, Joan Elton and Paul Oscard as the dancers. All are attired in costumes to suggest the dress of dolls, Mr. Oscard's being that of a "bell hop."

The stage setting provided represents one wall of a nursery with a pile of children's building blocks in perspective on one side.

The musical selection used is "In a Toy Shop," with original dances of the "doll" type by Paul Oscard used exclusively. Velvet curtains are used as tormentors to mask the sides of the black drop.

Musical directors and managers who are neglecting the special series of articles under the caption of "Music for Your Theatre" by Charles D. Isaacson, director of the News musical department are missing practical suggestions on the most important portion of the present day motion picture theatre problem.

How "Humoresque" Was Exploited at Philadelphia

Only a week to work—and some work to do!

This is the ultimatum that greeted exploitation men connected with the Stanley Theatres and the Philadelphia exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation when they were notified that a special booking of "Humoresque" was to be made at the Academy of Music, the opening day being only a week off. It called for swift, intensive exploitation campaigning.

Eli M. Orowitz, exploitation representative at the local exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, at once got into harness with Abe L. Einstein, publicity manager for the Stanley houses, while Jimmie Martin, formerly of the Jess Willard ranch shows, put in a few good licks.

Einstein began on the advertising copy while Orowitz rounded up the amusement editors of the Philadelphia papers. He specially obtained the co-operation of the editors of the three Jewish papers in Philadelphia, realizing that although "Humoresque" is not in any sense a racial or sectarian picture, it would find a spontaneous response from the Jewish audiences. These three dailies had a column story every day of the week preceding the opening, the stories being supplemented by advertisements.

Frank Buhler, general manager of the Stanley Company, had, in the meantime, visited the Criterion Theatre in New York and witnessed the prologue given the picture there. Then he set to work to outdo Hugo Riesenfeld and Sid Grauman. He gathered a dozen of the best voices obtainable and assigned Albert F. Wayne, musical director of his theatres, to co-operate with the musical director of the Criterion Theatre. When the score had been arranged, David Kaplan, directing at the Virginia Theatre, Atlantic City, was summoned by Mr. Buhler and gave his co-operation.

Grauman's Prologue for "The Round Up"

The surprise element played an important part in the prologue used by Sid Grauman at Grauman's Theatre, Los Angeles, during the showing of the George Melford production, "The Round Up."

Taking the "stage within a stage," as a basis, Grauman had a set constructed to represent a rough-log picture frame. This frame was draped with draw curtains, and had as a background, a panoramic painting of The Grand Canyon.

"Set" rocks were placed in front of this background, and also served as steps by which performers appearing in the picture could descend to the stage. When the act opened, the regular curtains across the proscenium arch were drawn away revealing the stage setting referred to above, which was bathed in a combination of dull sunset light hues from lamps off-stage.

A mysterious introduction from the orchestra, was a signal for the drawing of the curtains concealing the scene in the frame. A picture was disclosed showing an Indian archer poised with drawn bow on the set rock, another Indian in full war regalia flanked this figure on the right, while a squaw was seated at the left, the whole comprising a most artistic ensemble.

The archer descended from the lofty position, to the stage proper, presented an interpretative dance that received considerable applause. As the dance began the curtains were drawn before the picture frame, concealing it again. At the close of the dance, the regular curtains at the front of the stage were closed for an instant, then opened again, whereupon the picture frame curtains were again parted disclosing another picture reminiscent of the famous Frederic Remington type of painting. This scene showed a cow-boy posed beside his horse, and in this position he sang "Just Like A Gypsy." The curtains about the picture frame were again closed and a female vocalist, garbed as a squaw, made her appearance in front of the frame offering another song number. The same process of drawing the front curtains at the close of her number was followed.

The next picture in the frame showed two diminutive cow-boys, posed as a hold-up and his victim, they proved to be a dancing team that descended the rock steps and presented a routine of semi-eccentric dancing that was warmly received.

Upon their exit, the silver sheet was lowered and the presentation of the feature picture began.

The novelty of the presentation, and the variety of entertainment it contained made an immense hit with the audience.

Vocal Duet at the Rivoli

THE vocal number on the Rivoli program this week is a duet by Alma Jane Willday, mezzo-soprano and August Verner, baritone.

The selection used is 'Oh, That We Two Were Maying" with an interior stage setting provided.

The back drop shows the wall of a beautifully decorated room with a large French window in the center through which a landscape is dimly disclosed.

A few house decorations are placed in front of the drop and practical curtains are hung each side of the window.

Miss Willday sits on a low stool in front of the window and Mr. Verner reclines on the floor at her side.

The number recommends especially for its harmony not only from a musical angle but generally as to stage setting suitable for the selection, the grouping of the singers and the blending of voices.

Managers who stage musical numbers should not fail to read Charles D. Isaacson's special series of articles under the caption of "Music for Your Theatre" now current in the News.

This Exhibitor Has a Monopoly on Street Car Space

The Jefferson Theatre at Jefferson City, Mo., offers something in the way of novel advertising that is entirely original in the state. Jefferson City is the capitol of Missouri and while its population is approximately 15,000, there are always more than 30,000 people in the city. Because of this fact it has been necessary to institute a street car system and here is where the live manager of the motion picture house found his vehicle for advertising.

When the car company first contemplated the city railroad, a contract was negotiated with them permitting the Jefferson to use the front fenders of the cars for advertising and exploitation purposes. As a result each and every day in the year posters and displays of various types are viewed by every one of 30,000 permanent or temporary Jefferson Citians.

The fender space is also used in more than one way. During days or weeks when ordinary features are being shown at the Jefferson only the regular size poster appears on the car-front. However, when special productions are about to be presented, arrangements are made whereby pretentious displays are carried on the cars. Anybody stopping a street car must necessarily view the spectacle—for they are often spectacles—and be impressed by the name of the picture house. When "Down On The Farm" was shown the whole front of the street cars were trimmed with straw as a border for the poster and elaborate drawings were placed on the sides of the cars. Favorable newspaper comment has often resulted from the unusual means taken by the progressive theatre owner.

There are two reasons why women hunger for luxury: the first that they have been brought up in amid the surroundings of wealth and so find the lack of them a hardship; and the second, that having paddled during their youth in ankle-deep waters of poverty, they long for the plunge into fathomless golden depths.

And so of one of these two classes was Olivia Sherwood, endowed with beauty & charm and with two hundred dollars a year, which was not a month's pin money to the set she moved in.

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

Madge Bellamy Opposite Douglas McLean

Fresh from a New York appearance with William Gillette in "Dear Brutus," Madge Bellamy arrived last week at the Thomas H. Ince studios, Culver City. She is to play the leading feminine role opposite Douglas MacLean in his next Thomas H. Ince production for Paramount "One a Minute."

Miss Bellamy was secured in New York by John H. Blackwood, Thomas H. Ince scenario editor, who has been on Broadway as Mr. Ince's special business representative.

Prior to a six months' engagement in "Dear Brutus," Miss Bellamy played a leading role in "Pollyanna" and appeared in numerous other successful stage productions. Her only screen appearance was in support of Geraldine Farrar.

Dorothy Dalton Completes New Picture

The last scenes have been taken for "In Men's Eyes," the screen version of the E. Phillips Oppenheim novel, "Jeanne of the Marshes," which Dorothy Dalton made for Paramount under the direction of Frank Reicher. The supporting cast headed by Fredrik Vogeding, a Dutch actor, who makes his debut in American films in this picture, also includes Julia Swayne Gordon, William P. Carleton, Kempton Greene, Lewis Broughton, and Gladys Valerie. Gilbert Warrenton who was cameraman for "Humoresque," handled the photoplay.

First National Straw Vote Under Way

THE STRAW BALLOT WEEK staged by Associated First National Pictures during the week of September 19th bids fair to take front rank as an exploitation stunt. In New York, Manager Joe Plunkett, of the Strand, started the procession and he expects to register fifty thousand votes in the course of the week. Manager Hyman of the Brooklyn Strand is counting on the same show of interest. Metropolitan papers have promised a lively interest.

The Denver territory was among the many to make a last minute rush for ballots, wiring for one hundred thousand on September 10th. Chicago and Boston houses, slow to adapt the idea originally, are coming in rapidly. In the five boroughs of Greater New York 192 houses will take part in the canvass.

Particular curiosity is manifested in the results of the balloting in California, Hiram Johnson's home territory, where 92 theatres will register their patrons' opinions.

New Serial for Hutchison

Star Begins Production of "The Fortieth Door" for Pathe Release

PRODUCTION of "The Fortieth Door," which is to be Charles Hutchison's second Pathe starring vehicle, has been started at the Robert Brunton studios in Los Angeles. It will be a fifteen episode picturization of Mary Hastings Bradley's novel of the same name. The Brunton lot is now the scene of activity of both the Ruth Roland Company, filming "The Avenging Arrow," and the Hutchison unit. The serial actor finished "The Double Adventure" in the latter part of August, completing the fifteen episodes in a little more than three months of steady work.

According to announcements from California, "The Fortieth Door" will be an ambitious production. The story has an Oriental setting, dealing with an American adventure-seeker among the ruins of ancient Egyptian civilization. The work of staging the piece will, therefore, require the building of many elaborate sets.

Both Pathe serial companies at the Brunton studio are picturizing popular fiction stories. Miss Roland's new picture is to be an episode presentation of "The Honeymoon Quest," a novel by Arthur Preston Hankins. Therefore, "The Fortieth Door" will be the fourth novel selected by Pathe for adaptation in serial form within a year.

Pioneer Acquires New Film

To Handle "Beyond the Crossroads" With Ora Carew and McDowell

ANOTHER feature has been added to the list of pictures of the Pioneer Film Corporation as a result of a deal consummated between M. H. Hoffman, vice-president and general manager of the Pioneer Film and Nathan Vidaver of the Clermont Pictures Corporation. The deal brings to the Pioneer Film "Beyond the Crossroads," starring Ora Carew and Melbourne McDowell.

This feature will be preceded by the "Place of Honeymoons," the film version of Harold McGrath's novel, starring Emily Stevens and Montagu Love; "Thoughtless Women," Daniel Carson Goodman's production featuring Alma Rubens; "Finders Keepers," from the book of the same name, with Violet Mersereau and Edmund Cobb in the leading parts; "His Brother's Keeper" with Martha Mansfield, Rogers Lytton and Gladden James, and "Idle Hands" with Gail Kane and J. Herbert Frank, in the important roles.

Luke McLuke's Film-Osophy, one of the short subjects which the Pioneer Film Corporation is releasing is meeting with success according to officials at Pioneer headquarters.

"Earthbound" Opens at the Capitol

The first motion picture theatre to show "Earthbound," Goldwyn's special directed by T. Hayes Hunter from Basil King's scenario, will be the Capitol, New York City. It has been booked there for the week beginning Sunday, September 19.

The Capitol presentation of "Earthbound" will have all the unique effects, lighting, draperies, fixtures, etc., which characterized its month's run at the Astor theatre.

The Basil King photodrama of "Life and Death" is now in its sixth week at the Playhouse, Chicago, where it will continue for at least another week. On September 30 it will show at Miller's theatre, Los Angeles, which is in the heart of the city's theatrical life.

Ina Claire and "Polly" Company on Location

Ina Claire and her supporting company in the Metro picturization of "Polly with a Past," by George Middleton and Guy Bolton, were on location last week at the estate of I. N. Spiegelberg, near Briarcliff Manor, New York. The scenes screened represented the home of the Van Ziles, the exclusive society people in the photodrama into whose house Polly is introduced as a French adventuress.

Mrs. Spiegelberg entertained the cast at dinner, after which there was an impromptu musicale. Miss Claire was the leader in the volunteer entertainment, singing popular numbers from her musical comedy success, of a few years ago, "The Quaker Girl" and doing a bit from her days at the Follies.

Farrar Picture Gets Bookings

"The Riddle: Woman" to Be Shown in 32 First Runs

"THE Riddle: Woman," the first special production of the Associated Exhibitors, starring Geraldine Farrar and distributed by Pathe, promises according to Pathe, to establish a new high record in booking, following the showing on October 3rd in the first run houses of the thirty-two original franchise holders.

Dorothy Richardson, author of that remarkable human document, "The Long Day" and the one-time literary secretary of David Belasco, was associated with Madame Bertha Kalich in an adivsory capacity when that actress was giving her baffling rendition of "The Riddle: Woman." Miss Richardson recently was a special guest at the Pathe Home Office to witness the screen version of Jacoby's story, with Miss Farrar as the Lilla. She was enthusiastic over the beautiful investiture of the production and the sympathetic understanding that Director Jose has brought to the treatment of woman.

Miss Richardson's greatest novel deals entirely with the woman problem from both an economic and a sex standpoint and she treats the subject with a stark realism that has caused the work to be translated into five European languages. It is elemental, for it deals with woman's bare struggle for life and for love. "The Riddle: Woman," she points out, is a "great sex classic caught at the fusing point."

"As Madame Kalich," she continues, "contributed to the stage an epochal creation in the drama of sex, so does Geraldine Farrar give to the silent drama a magnificent, dominant figure vibrating with emotion beautiful in the flame of passion and poignantly appealing in its cold bitter ashes. Here, indeed, faultlessly put, with subtle craftsmanship, is the greatest of sex dramas, which, in its diversity of persons affected, is of intimate interest to every woman. The spoken play early demonstrated that fact, but now, with the wider field of pictures and their power of intensifying, it is more than ever potent in this appeal.

"Madame Kalich was a fascinating, exotic figure, an artistic delight to the eye and ear. But she was baffling of analysis in all of her moods. She possessed all the human gifts of a womanly woman, but there was a reserve, a self-control and a poise that denoted either unusual strength or amazing coldness. She might have been a balefully beautiful serpent or an angel of compassion. Therein lay the strength of her fascination, Miss Farrar is frankly human and the play of her emotions, expressed with the dramatic fluency and harmony of music recalls her peak-high achievement in grand opera, and, at the same time, freshly emphasize the fact that she is one of the greatest of the world's dramatic artists. And of all her achievements of the operatic stage, which have sounded the deepest notes of the tragedies of love and hate, none have surpassed and few have equalled this supreme, silent—yet eloquent—effort."

Sequel to "The Texan" in the Making

A sequel to "The Texan" is coming to the screen, James B. Hendryx' celebrated novel was found so adaptable for film purposes, and Tom Mix fitted so well into the part of Tex Benton, that William Fox decided to produce "Prairie Flowers," by the same author and following the fortunes of the same set of characters.

Photography on "The Texan" was finished a few days ago, and work on the new story was begun immediately. The original title is being retained for working purposes, and the principals of "The Texan" will play the same roles in "Prairie Flowers," but in order to provide variety, scenario writer and director have been changed. Lynn F. Reynolds directed "The Texan," and Jules G. Furthman wrote the scenario of "Prairie Flowers," and George Marshall will direct it—his picture for Fox.

Ziegfeld Girl Engaged by Paramount

Diana Allen, who hails originally from Gooland, an island in the North Sea, near Sweden, and who recently won New York's favor in dance specialties at the Follies, the Midnight Frolic and the Century Roof, has been engaged by Charles Maigne to play the leading feminine role opposite Monte Blue in the Charles Maigne production for Paramount, "The Kentuckians," by John Fox, Jr. Miss Allen will have the role of Anne Bruce, an aristocratic but fair and warm-hearted daughter of Governor Bruce of Kentucky, and, incidentally will wear many gowns of surpassing beauty.

Announcement is made that the first Edward Jose Special Production to be made for the Associated Exhibitors, Inc., will be a mystery story written by Charles A. Logue. Hodkinson Offers Some Advice

"Find Your Market First" Is His Hint to Newcomer

FOLLOWING his statement in the August 7th issue of Motion Picture News warning overenthusiastic independent producers of the rocks and shoals on their course, W. W. Hodkinson, head of the corporation bearing his name, comes to bat with more specific advice on the same subject.

"The first bit of advice," says Mr. Hodkinson, "and one that I cannot insist upon too much is this; try to insure as far as possible the sale of your picture before you spend one penny on its production.

It may not always be possible to secure absolute immunity from loss, indeed I am sure that it is quite impossible to obtain such immunity.

"Producers who have the best of equipment, the best of stars, the best of directors and every modern technical facility cannot always be sure in advance of the absolute success of their picture. These circumstances, by the way, account for the many bad pictures produced even by the best institutions in the field. It is possible, however, and of course most desirable to take as many precautions against loss as possible.

"One way of doing this is to consult the men whom you expect to buy your pictures in advance of production. If I am permitted to pass upon the availability of the story, the skill of the director, the ability of the cast, I may be in a position to make a forecast which is apt to be accurate, though by no means infallible.

"Aspiring producers must be guided by experience. Their enthusiasm and their spirit of enterprise are admirable, but they will lead nowhere unless properly directed. They need the light of experience every step of the way There is no more hazardous undertaking than the production of a motion picture. The producer is creating illusions and the theatre owners must live by selling illusion to his patrons.

"Now we all know that while it takes the wand of a magician to produce illusions, even the slightest untoward accident will destroy or spoil the illusion. No producer can entirely rid himself of this handicap but can only guard against it. He is constantly operating the most delicate of mechanism and one false move may throw the whole machinery out of plumb.

"The purpose of certain individual pictures or of certain groups and types of pictures are by no means an infallible guide for the future. At times the public seems to fancy certain types of pictures for no apparent reason.

DUE to an error in the Motion Picture News of September 4th, the credit for the directing of "Whispering Devils" was given, in the review of the feature to Harry Garson. The picture was directed by John M. Voshell but on account of a mistake in the press matter given the reviewer, Mr. Garson, who produced the picture, was given credit. Mr. Voshell alone is responsible for the picture's excellent direction.

Fine Staff Will Make Bessie Love Picture

Andrew J. Callaghan, who is now in California, wired to Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation this week a partial list of the staff which he has selected for the Bessie Love production of "Penny of Tophill Trail," to be released through Federated Film Exchange of America, Inc. Mr. Callaghan announced also that Miss Love and her company will go to Arizona for the shooting of the exterior scenes. The action in Belle K. Maniates's novel is laid on the plains of the Great West.

The script of the piece, according to Mr. Callaghan's telegram, is in the hands of Finis Fox, who has earned a reputation as one of the most accomplished of scenario writers and adapters. Arthur Berthelet, who accompanied Mr. Callaghan to the coast to direct the production of "Penny of Tophill Trail," will be assisted by Dr. Joss, who has been associated with Erich von Stroheim, but has been lent to Miss Love for this picture.

Samuel Landers, who shot "River's End," "Don't Ever Marry" and several Annette Kellerman pictures, will have charge of the camera work in the new production.

Two Stage Successes Adapted by Metro

Lois Zellner, of the scenario staff at Metro's New York studios in West Sixty-first street, has started the work of scenarioizing "The Hole in the Wall," the stage hit by Fred Jackson, which enjoyed a long run last season at the Punch and Judy Theatre. This drama of the supernatural will, it is expected, be enacted for Metro by an all-star cast. It will be put into production within the next six weeks or two months.

At the same time Jean Copeland, also a member of the writing staff at the studios, is adapting for the screen a stage drama which will be filmed by Metro under the working title of "Whipsawed."

"Go and Get It" Given Special Showing

Arrangements are now being completed for an elaborate presentation of "Go and Get It," produced by Marshall Neilan and distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., before officers and men attached to the Pacific Submarine Base and Naval Headquarters, at San Pedro, California. It was through the courtesy of the naval officers that the thrilling marine scenes in the picture were obtainable and it is in honor of these men that the special production is to be given.

Cathro Manages Omaha Exchange for Pioneer

This appointment completes the establishment of three important exchanges over which Thomas Leonard is supervisor and director.

R-C Building Nears Completion

FILM men passing the busy corner of Forty-ninth street and Seventh avenue daily have noted the rapidity with which the exterior of the new Robertson-Cole building is taking shape. Now a bulletin issued during the week by the film distributors adds the information that work on the concrete floors and other less noticeable features is also proceeding with speed, and it will not be long before the newest of film structures will be ready for occupancy.

A perusal of the official statement lends emphasis to the fact that the new Robertson-Cole building is designed from roof to cellar with specific thoughts for use as a home for film folk. It will be twelve stories high, fireproof throughout. The statement describing the plans for the interior goes on to say:

"The top floors of the building will be occupied by the home offices of Robertson-Cole, whence the twenty-five exchanges through which the Robertson-Cole product is distributed will be directed, and whence will be extended the cooperation which this company gives the various producing units which are engaged in producing pictures for its distribution. On top of the building will be situated two theatres in which pictures will be inspected by officials of the company, and shown to the trade.

Robertson-Cole's home office building, 48th St. and 7th Ave., New York, showing progress in construction

"The film vaults in the building are to be guarded from fire by specially contrived walls. Every inch of the building will be fireproofed to the limit of modern ingenuity, provisions even being made for a special steel fire escape entirely separate from the building, except for its metal entrances. The building will be served by passenger elevators reached through the main entrance, off Seventh avenue. The side entrance, off Forty-eighth street, will be close to the freight elevators, which will be used for the entrance and departure of shipments of film.

"Robertson-Cole, which is now releasing super-special attractions only, and which is working always with the desire of bringing to the exhibitor productions which he can show with a maximum of return, plans to make its new home a great center in New York City for the exhibitors of the country, whether they be in the metropolis to buy film, or merely there on a pleasure trip.

"With this end in view, a part of the building will be set apart for the entertainment of exhibitors. Here any exhibitor, whether he is a Robertson-Cole customer or not, will be welcome. Free stenographic service will be given him. There will be free writing rooms, a free information bureau to guide him about the city, and a free library which he may use at any time."

Six New Goldwyns in Making

Company Believes Coming Productions Will Set New High Mark

GOLDWYN directors are now busy filming six new productions which the officials of the company believe will equal the high standard of motion pictures to which Goldwyn has attained by such productions as "Earthbound," "Madame X," "The Penalty," "The Branding Iron," "The North Wind's Malice," "Scratch My Back," etc.

Reginald Barker is putting the finishing touches to his new featured production, "Godless Men," on wnich he has been engaged with an all-star cast for months under the working title of "Black Pawl." It is a picturization of Ben Ames Williams' sea tale, "Black Pawl." "Godless Men" was chosen as its film title as better indicating the nature of the production. Helene Chadwick is featured in the picture. Russell Simpson, James Mason and John Bowers have important roles.

Frank Lloyd is completing final details on his first production to be featured by Goldwyn, "The Great Lover," the comedy by Leo Ditrichstein and the Hattons which served Diltrichstein as a stellar vehicle for two seasons. John Sainpolis has the role of Jean Paurel.

Victor Schertzinger is directing the filming of "The Concert," Hermann Bahr's comedy which served Leo Ditrichstein for two years on the speaking stage. He will continue directing the Mabel Normand pictures when that star returns from her vacation in New York.

Clarence G. Badger is directing the making of Will Rogers' new stellar vehicle from Peter Clarke MacFarlane's story, "The Guile of Woman." Many of the exteriors were made at San Francisco whither the entire company was taken. Rogers has a new kind of role in this picture.

Mason N. Litson is rehearsing Johnny Jones, Lucille Ricksen, Buddy Messenger and the other members of the cast of the seventh of the series of twelve- two-reel Edgar pictures by Booth Tarkington. It will be called "Edgar, the Explorer."

Wallace Worsley, who directed "The Penalty" and has just completed "The Highest Bidder" for Madge Kennedy, will be assigned a new script within a few days.

A rugged story of the great outdoors is "The North Wind's Malice," a Goldwyn special feature adapted from the Rex Beach story of the same name

Universal's Film City Busy

Five Independents and Universal Directors Fill Production Center

IN addition to the many Universal companies now active, five independent producers have permanent headquarters at the big film city in the San Fernando valley, and in the past fortnight a number of other companies have utilized the leasing features operated under the direction of Sigmund Moos for the Universal corporation.

Of Universal's directors, Marcel de Sano is ready to start "The Orchid," starring Carmel Myers; Norman Dawn is preparing to produce "White Youth," starring Edith Roberts; Stuart Paton will start soon on "Out of the Sunset," starring Eva Novak; and Rollin Sturgeon is cutting "The Gilded Dream," which Carmel Myers just completed. Two big Universal-Jewels are in production; "Outside the Law," in which Tod Browning is directing Priscilla Dean; and "Foolish Wives," the third Erich von Stroheim production. Jacques Jaccard is directing Frank Mayo in "The Throwback," and Edward Laemmle is directing Hoot Gibson in "Teacher's Pet."

Edgar Lewis, Maurice Tourneur, Max Linder, Al and Ray Rockett and Masse Productions are those leasing studio space at Universal City.

Scott, of Canada, a Visitor

Gen. Mgr. of Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange Confers With Hodkinson

THOMAS SCOTT, secretary and general manager for the Canadian Exhibitors Exchange, Ltd., which is distributing the Hodkinson product in the Dominion, was in town last week for a conference with the officials of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, as to the joint policies for the Fall and Winter season.

Mr. Scott's organization which at first operated in the Province of Ontario alone opened its first branch office in Montreal less than a year ago. Arrangements have just been made to extend its activities to the Provinces of New Brunswick, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, so that their scope now embraces the entire Dominion. This means that out of the approximately eight hundred theatres in Canada fully fifty per cent. or more will soon be directly or indirectly connected with the Exhibitors Exchange.

Mr. Scott attributes the success of his organization to the fact that its policies are based on FAIR PLAY,—fair play to the exhibitor who books its pictures and fair play to the producers from whom the pictures are secured. He realizes that in order to get the producers' support and to make them continue to deliver good pictures that the association through its members must pay for the film what it is worth, and not use the good product for exhibitor solely.

"We have thrown our lot with Hodkinson, not only on account of his sympathy for the exhibitors and his understanding of their problems, but also because of the excellence of the pictures released under the Hodkinson banner. We have already released nine of these productions in the Dominion during the last few months and I just gave an order for five new ones to be shipped during the month of September, among them 'Sex,' 'The Lone Wolf's Daughter' and 'The Kentucky Colonel.'"

Musical Program Furnished by Pioneer

One of the features of the service department of the Pioneer Film Corporation centers on the work done by experts in furnishing the exhibitor with a musical program for use in connection with the display of a Pioneer feature.

"The New York Idea" Completed

Work on Alice Brady's latest picture for Realart, "The New York Idea", adapted from Langdon Mitchell's play, has been completed. The last few days were spent in Glencove, Long Island, where scenes were photographed on several country estates. The nature of the production, which is a satire on New York society and divorce courts, offered Director Herbert Blache an opportunity for picturesque outdoor photography.

"The New York Idea" is included in the list of Realart releases for October.

Ben Hampton Working on "The Spenders"

The Benjamin Hampton organization, responsible for the coming special, "The U. P. Trail," has already started work on the Hodkinson 1921 schedule. The first special on the list is "The Spenders," from Harry Leon Wilson's book of the same name.

Fay Tincher Features "Striking Models"

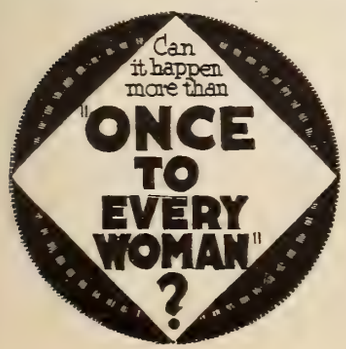
According to reports from Educational, Fay Tincher's second new Christie Comedy, "Striking Models," will firmly establish her as one of the most popular players in two-reel fun films. The picture has just been received from the Christie studios in Los Angeles. Through the greater portion of the picture Miss Tincher appears in the lingerie of a fashionable ladies wear establishment.

"A Seaside Siren," the first of the New Christie's in which Miss Tincher appeared, is said to be scoring an unusual success and that every week sees it at several of the leading first run theatres. For instance last week it was shown at the California, Los Angeles; the Adams, Detroit, and the Strand, Buffalo.

Buster Keaton Finishes Third Comedy

Buster Keaton and his company have completed their third two-reel comedy for Joseph M. Schenck for release through the Metro distributing organization. The laugh provoker has been titled "The Scarecrow," and is said to surpass even "One Week" and "Convict 13," which preceded it, in its mirth-provoking qualities.

The comedy, from Buster's pen and directed by Eddie Cline, has to do with rural life. In it is a love story, with Keaton and "Big" Joe Roberts as the rival suitors for the hand of the farmers' daughter.



The first of the Buster Keaton comedies "One Week," is a September release, and the others are to follow eight weeks apart.

Wally Reid in Another Auto Story

Wallace Reid will soon have an opportunity of driving a car again in a motion picture. The story is Sinclair Lewis' book "Free Air," and the scenario is by Byron Morgan, himself a clever author of motor stories, many of which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and have been former vehicles for Mr. Reid, the Paramount star. Also, Mr. Morgan has recently had a book of these stories published called "The Roaring Road."

"Mermaid" Comedies Set Pace

Educational Reports New Comedy Series Is Going Strong

ALTHOUGH the series is less than four months old, Educational Films Exchanges, Inc., reports that bookings of Mermaid Comedies have already reached a volume equal to any two-reel comedies on the market in the territories where distribution is well under way.

Mermaid Comedies are made up of two series, which are produced in the same studios and under the same general direction, one directed by Jack White, who won a high reputation by his work with Sennett and Sunshine and featuring Jimmie Adams; the other starring Lloyd Hamilton and being directed by Gilbert Pratt.

At the time of the release of "A Fresh Start," the first of the series, the brand name was unknown, but Educational reports that this initial comedy practically booked itself and even surprised those who had selected the series for release. This was followed by "Duck Inn," the first of the Lloyd Hamilton, and after this comes "Dynamite," another Hamilton, and "Nonsense," with Jimmie Adams, Marvel Rea and the whole cast of the first Mermaid. The pictures are released monthly.

"Mermaids for Merriment" is the advertisement slogan being used with this series. Special ads are prepared by Educational for each picture and a complete press book issued calling attention to unusual exploitation opportunities.

In Boston they are being shown at the Gordon houses; in Washington at Moore's Garden or Rialto; in Philadelphia at the Stanley; in Pittsburgh at the Grand and Savoy; in Cleveland at the Euclid where each one is given a run of at least two weeks and where "Duck Inn" is now being held for the fourth week; in Indianapolis at the Circle; Cincinnati at the Walnut; the Strand in Louisville; the Colonial in Columbus; Loew's Valentine and Temple in Toledo; the Strandin Altoona; Liberty in Wheeling and the Wells houses in Richmond and through Virginia.

In Detroit the entire series has been booked at the Broadway Strand by Phil Gleichman who made the contract after seeing "Four Times Foiled" and immediately ordered that Mermaids be featured in all of his advertising. Ruben and Finkelstein have selected the pictures for equal play in all of their theatres in the Twin Cities and through Michigan they are given great prominence in the newspaper advertising by the Butterfield houses.

The same record is carried on across the Mississippi. In St. Louis Mermaids have their first runs at the Skouras Brothers houses. In Omaha they are being played at either the Rialto or Strand and A. H. Blank is booking them through all of his houses including the million dollar Des Moines in Des Moines. Stanley Chambers has picked them for especial attention at his Palace in Wichita. On the coast Mermaids have their first run home at Grauman's, in San Francisco at the Tivoli and through the Jensen and von Herberg houses in the northwest. Honolulu has just had its first sight of "Duck Inn" where it scored a big hit.

New Popular Author with Metro

Four Stories Purchased by Concern from Luther Reed

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION announces this week the purchase of four original stories for the screen from Luther Anderson Reed. These stories comprise "White Ashes," which is now under production at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood with an all-star cast; "Cinderella's Twin," which is to be Viola Dana's next starring vehicle for Metro, and two others as yet unfinished, but which Mr. Reed has submitted in outline.

Purchases of the four stories renews an association between Luther Anderson Reed and Metro which, until quite recently, had extended over a period of three or four years Just prior to the final stages of the world war Mr. Reed was connected with Metro as scenario and title writer. Then there came an interruption while the young author joined the army and won his commission as a second lieutenant, only to be denied service overseas by the signing of the armistice. Mustered out of service, he rejoined Metro at the company's western studios, remaining several months, when he joined the writing staff of Thomas H. Ince.

Acceptance of four stories from Mr. Reed's pen places him among the galaxy of noted writers that Metro recently has arrayed as contributors to its big special productions, among them Vicente Blasco Ibanez, author of the sensational novel, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse"; Bayard Veiller, author of "Within the Law" and "The Thirteenth Chair"; Irvin S. Cobb, Sir Gilbert Parker, George Kibbe Turner, Eugene Presbrey, Arthur Somers Roche, Donn Byrne, Henry C. Rowland, Hulbert Footner, F. Scott Fitzgerald, Lucia Chamberlain and Arthur Stringer.

For Metro, Luther Anderson Reed has contributed three original stories, "A Pair of Cupids," for Bushman and Bayne; "In for Thirty Days," for May Allison, and "A Favor to a Friend," for Emmy Wehlen. In addition, he adapted "With Neatness and Dispatch" for Bushman and Bayne; "The Amateur Adventuress," for Emmy Wehlen; "Our Mrs. McChesney," for Ethel Barrymore, and "Almost Married," for May Allison.

For Thomas H. Ince, Mr. Reed wrote the original screen stories, "Below the Surface" and "Doctor Smith," and the adaptations of "Bind the Door," "Mary's Ankle," "Let's Be Fashionable," and "Beau' Revel."

Some six or seven months ago Mr. Reed branched out as a successful playwright. His comedy, "Dear Me," written in collaboration with Hale Hamilton, played a successful engagement of eighteen weeks in Chicago, with Mr. Hamilton and Grace La Rue in the principal roles.

English Beauty in Newest "Torchy"

In America only six weeks and already in motion pictures is the unusual record that has just been scored by Dorothy Mackall who appears in "Torchy's Millions," the fourth of the two reel comedies made by Master Films from the stories by Sewell Ford and released through Educational Exchanges. She is a foil to Johnny Hines.

Miss Mackall was the "Joy-Belle Baby" in the recent revue at the London Hippodrome and came to this country on the advice of Ned Wayburn, who staged the English show. She is now being featured in the Century Roof Revue.

Unusually Strong Cast for "The Stealers"

Heading the cast for "The Stealers," which has its premiere at the Hotel Astor, September 17th, and which Robertson-Cole considers "the most powerful picture we have yet released," is William H. Tooker. Others in the strong cast are, Robert Kenyon, Myrtle Morse, Ruth Dwyer, Norma Shearer, Walter Miller, Eugene Borden, Jack Crosby, Matthew L. Betz, and Jack O'Brien.

In addition to exercising unusual care in the selection of each member of the cast, W. Christy Cabanne, the producer of "The Stealers" also planned the use of art effects in tinging and toning of an out of the ordinary sort.

Helene Chadwick Next in Dramatic Role

Helene Chadwick, the young actress who scored a hit in the Goldwyn-Rex Beach Eminent Authors' production of "Scratch My Back," from Rupert Hughes' popular novel, is to have the featured role in Goldwyn's forthcoming Reginald Barker production, "Godless Men," based upon Ben Ames Williams' sea story, "Black Pawl." In the role of Ruth Lytton in this picture she has what Goldwyn regards as the best role in which she has appeared. It is a dramatic and emotional part in complete contrast to her role in "Scratch My Back" and in support of Will Rogers in his western comedy, "Cupid, the Cowpuncher."

Ruth Roland Starts Serial

Pathe's Serial Star at Work on "The Avenging Arrow" on Coast

HAVING completed production work on her current picture, "Ruth of the Rockies", Ruth Roland has started on her next serial for Pathe at the Robert Brunton studio. The title is "The Avenging Arrow", an adaptation of the Arthur Preston Hopkins' novel, "The Honeymoon Quest". The success attending the production and exhibition of "Ruth of the Rockies", an adaptation of a novel by Johnston McCulley, is said to have determined Miss Roland and the Pathe officials to select material for her next vehicle from among the popular works of fiction.

Miss Roland will have Eddie Hearn as her leading man. He made his last screen appearance as the juvenile lead with Jack Dempsey in "Daredevil Jack" and he will be seen again soon in a two reel Pathe drama starring Thomas Santschi.

"The Avenging Arrow" is a fifteen episode serial. It will be directed by William Bowman under the supervision of Robert Brunton. The production plans call for elaborate settings and every effort will be made to provide a picture of even greater artistic effect than the recent striking offerings of Pathe.

The director assigned the task of filming this new "feature quality" serial play, is an experienced screen artist. William Bowman has to his credit as a director many highly successful film dramas. He entered pictures after a long career on the stage, where he appeared in Shakespearian roles with Robert Mantell.

Portable Plant for Metro

Portable Lighting Unit Under Construction for Night Use on Location

THE most remote desert or mountain wilds soon will be as accessible for night photography as the simplest interior setting constructed on an enclosed stage, through use of a portable electric plant now under construction at Metro's West Coast studios that is said to be unique.

The completed lighting plant, mounted on a specially built motor truck and furnished with power by a 400 horse power Liberty motor, will be used by the company in the taking of night scenes that once were possible only when reproduced on enclosed stages. Under the present plan, however all the realism for which art directors have striven will be possible without the construction of the makeshifts that were once believed to be essential.

The new plant will be of sufficient power to light a village of respectable proportions and, when its power is concentrated in the sixty great lamps that may be used in conjunction with it, will flood a space with a brilliant white light so desirable for night photography. When completed it will be, it is claimed, the largest portable electric generating plant ever constructed.

The five-ton truck on which the entire plant will be installed is equipped with compound transmission which gives it twenty-one speeds, thus making it possible to climb the steepest grades.

A good idea of the magnitude of "The Leopard Woman," Louise Glaum's latest starring vehicle, is to be obtained from the above scene stills from the production. The picture is an Associated Producers' release

Reid's First for Associated Ready

J. Parker Read, Jr., announced yesterday that his initial Associated Producers Inc. release had been completed. The adaptation of Stewart Edward White's novel, "The Leopard Woman," starring Louise Glaum, was originally destined to have been the first of the A. P. releases, but producer Read saw wherein he could add to the detail and instructed director Wesley Ruggles to take more time.

"The Leopard Woman," it is reported, cost more to produce than any of J. Parker Read, Jr's former productions, and has a supporting cast headed by House Peters who was engaged by special arrangement.

Metro Purchases Stories

Metro Pictures Corporation announces this week the purchase of two more stories as vehicles for special screen productions with the company's stars. They are "Dated," by Maxwell Smith, which was published recently in The Saturday Evening Post and "The Mother Heart," by Izola Forrester and Mann Page, an original plot for the screen.

State Fills Its Franchise Quota

No. Carolina Listed as One Hundred Per Cent First National

THAT the First National subfranchise is regarded by exhibitors in North Carolina with enthusiasm and appreciated as a proposition which ensures a steady supply of high grade pictures is evidenced, it is reported, by the fact that the full quota of franchises for that state has been promptly taken up, with the result that North Carolina is listed as one hundred per cent Associated First National.

On a visit to New York this week R. D. Craver of the Broadway Theatre, Charlotte, N. C. and operating a number of other theatres in that territory, reported business conditions in his state as decidedly the best that have ever prevailed in that part of the country, Mr. Craver said in part: "Exhibitors in my territory not only welcomed the action of First National exhibitor-officials in making it possible for smaller town exhibitors to share in the well recognized benefits accruing from the franchise, but they are already expressing their gratification at the quality, number and regularity of the releases thus provided. North Carolina is one hundred per cent Associated First National. Exhibitors of the calibre of Percy Wells of Wilmington, N. C., president of the North Carolina Exhibitors League, and H. B. Varner of Lexington, N. C., prominent in leadership of exhibitors in that territory and a member of the M.P.T.O. Committee of Nine, have been quick to realize the benefits accruing from the new franchise and their example was quickly followed by exhibitors in thirty eight other leading towns, with the result that the North Carolina quota has been entirely absorbed.

"That this result has been achieved in so short a space as eight weeks must in fairness too be attributed to the activity and energy of my brother J. B. Craver, who shares my own enthusiasm in the proposition and whose eleven years experience in theatre management and consequent knowledge of exhibitor problems and requirements proved invaluable in the distribution of the individual franchises.

"The welcome given the Associated Franchise in North Carolina and the eagerness with which it has been applied for by independent exhibitors reflects, I do not hesitate to say which it has been applied for by independent exhibitors reflects, I do not hesitate to say, a keen realization on their part both of the direct advantages that accrue to every independent exhibitor in the territory and of the condition independent exhibitors have hitherto been faced, namely the menace of absorption by producer-distributor combinations and the attendant loss of control of their individual business and theatres which they operate. Another feature which is recognized as most beneficial is the absence from the franchise of the advance deposit evil, which hitherto has constituted one of the most unpopular factors in the business problems of the exhibitor."

Cook Comics in Demand

Fox Reports English Music Hall Artist Attracts Attention of Exhibitors

WHEN William Fox dropped into an English music hall two years ago and watched one performance by Clyde Cook, he was convinced that he had discovered a rich jewel to adorn the silent man with twinkling ears and the india-rubber legs to a contract for a series of pictures—the first of which, entitled "Kiss Me Quick," will be released shortly. This comedian's original and unique style of screen work is expected to create a sensation in the motion picture world.

Cook's peculiar adaptability for the screen is naturally through his excruciatingly funny antics. As a contortionist, it is claimed he is without a peer, and as an eccentric dancer, unsurpassed.

Aside from his contortion and acrobatic feats, Cook's stolid and expressionless face is his fortune; his icy stare, says Fox, will catch and hold the attention of every audience. Without moving a muscle of his face or blinking an eye, he achieves acute comedy.

The booking demand for Clyde Cook pictures, as reported by the Fox offices, is already so heavy that additional prints of his first comedy have been made.

Stroheim's Latest Is Scoring

"Devil's Pass Key" Breaks Records in Several Theatres; Widely Exploited

THE fall opening of the B. F. Keith vaudeville and moving picture houses in New York City last week was signalized by the simultaneous showing in 14 theatres throughout the greater city of "The Devil's Pass Key," the Universal-Jewel production of Parisian life and intrigue directed by Erich Von Stroheim.

Besides being billed heavily throughout the city by elaborate 24 sheet posters of the Universal Film company, it also was heavily advertised in hundreds of 24 sheets by the Keith interests. Among the Keith houses in which the Stroheim production was shown during the Keith Anniversary week, were the 81st Street theatre, the Regent, the Harlem Opera House, and the Dekalb and the Flatbush theatres in Brooklyn.

William Fox also played "The Devil's Pass Key" in all of his New York and Brooklyn theatres during Labor Day week. Among these were the Halsey, and the Academy of Music. There was no section in Greater New York where the big Universal production was not to be seen during the opening week of the 1921 season.

"The Devil's Pass Key" is meeting with equal success elsewhere, according to reports from the Universal exchanges and from exhibitors all over the country. Already the super-production has been booked for week runs in more than half-a-hundred cities.

In Milwaukee its run broke record after record at the Saxe's Alhambra theatre. That theatre exploited the film to its full possibilities. One of the novelties of the run was the hanging of a cut-out door key advertising the picture on the front doors of 25,000 Milwaukee homes. Another was the wide distribution of a bright red half-sheet made especially by the theatre for use on street cars, in windows etc.

Another theatre which has unusual success with Parisian novelty film was the Liberty theatre, in Kansas City, Mo.

Pathe Production Praised

"Lahoma" and "Rio Grande" Called Plays of American Development

"LAHOMA", Edgar Lewis's production of the great Southwest, and "Rio Grande", Edwin Carewe's rendition of Augustus Thomas's American play, both released by Pathe, show no indications that their national appeal is in any way abating, according to Pathe. Compared with other successful features, at a certain period after release, these two productions have established a record peculiarly their own. At this stage of national life, when the government and numerous associated and powerful agencies are combined in a campaign of Americanization, an inevitable result would be a strongly awakened interest in such pictures.

"These admirable productions, dealing with two picturesque and dramatic periods of American development, are instinct with the very spirit of the nation,—its hardihood, its daring, its idealism and the undaunted spirit of adventure that has transformed the Western wilderness into a wonderland of modern civilization." This tribute to the work of the two producers was made recently by Dr. Alden Sedgwick before a fashionable and intellectual gathering in Boston which had under discussion the power and mission of the motion picture.

Major Frederick Terrill, a veteran army man and Southwestern pioneer made a special request to witness a screening of "Lahoma" and "Rio Grande" and he and a company of friends were recently the guests of Pathe's Home Office.

"One Week" has just been released.

William Russell's Eighth for Fox

William Russel has begun work on his ninth picture as a William Fox star, at the west coast studios. In this he has another of those romantic roles of the great open west. The eight Fox pictures he has made to date, include "Sacred Silence," "The Lincoln Highwayman," "Shod with Fire," "Eastward Ho," "Leave It To Me," "The Man Who Dared," "The Challenge of the Law," and Twins of Suffering Creek."

"The Challenge of the Law" is soon to be released.

Williams Sees Second Ray Triumph on Way

"A second masterpiece" is predicted for Charles Ray by J. D. Williams, manager of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., provided that star can equal in "Peaceful Valley," the success he made in his recent "Forty-Five Minutes from Broadway." This latter picture Mr. Williams refers to as a "surprise in the capable and intelligent policy manifest throughout to obtain a maximum of efficiency in every effort that is being put into his pictures."

Dead Men Tell No Tales

"Iris" Story Laid Abroad

Pauline Frederick's First Robertson-Cole, Calls for Extra Care in Settings

ROUNDING out "Iris," the first Pauline Frederick picture, under her new contract with Robertson-Cole made particular demands for careful attention to the settings.

"Iris" is laid abroad, and every care was needed to put its impressive scenes in different parts of London, in Switzerland, on the Riviera, and in South Africa on the screen in such a way that measured up fully to the story.

To do this the producers chose Frank H. Webster, a man whose work on half a dozen of the biggest productions of the past year has won him a reputation as scenic director, and placed him in full charge of the art, decorative and architectural phases of the building of the picture's scenes.

Concerning his work Mr. Webster declares: "In undertaking the task of creating settings for 'Iris,' I was aided materially by my first-hand knowledge of the countries in which the story is laid, for the greater part of my art education was received in England, France, Italy, Belgium, Spain and Germany.

"Throughout the entire production it has been my endeavor to make as realistic and as convincing as possible the various backgrounds not only from an artistic angle, but from the angle of personality and expression of character. For instance, in out-fitting the apartment of Maldanado, who plays the heavy role, I took into consideration the natural tendencies of a man who occupied his position in the world toward outfitting his dwelling, and combined the gaudy with the artistic; on the other hand, the apartment of Iris, showed the character of Iris, luxurious, pleasure-loving, but underneath it all a gentlewoman."

"Iris" is based on the famous stage play by Sir Arthur Wing Pinero.

Cook Finishes Comic Film

His First Work for William Fox Gets Hearty Approval of Office

ENTHUSIASM is expressed at the home office of William Fox Film Corporation and reported from its branch offices throughout the country, over the first Clyde Cook special comedy, "Kiss Me Quick", which has been shown privately to the Fox officials. The following statement has been issued from the William Fox home office in connection with the new Clyde Cook comedy:

"Cook, who long had the New York public at his feet, because of his unique style of comedy as leading eccentric dancer and comedian at the New York Hippodrome, brings to the motion-picture an indefinable something which makes for marked success in screen entertainment. The work of this new William Fox comedian is of a type absolutely original and on the stage has been found irresistible in its laugh-compelling power.

"Fox branch managers throughout the United States express the greatest confidence in this new series. "Kiss Me Quick" the first Cook special release, is more than amusing—it is acutely funny. Laugh follows laugh in rapid succession, as excruciatingly humorous situations are developed with unsurpassed skill by this unusual funmaker.

"Exhibitors who have been seeking good, clean, substantial and wholesome comedies for their programs can make a mark opposite the name of Clyde Cook, as a new comedian who packs a laugh into every foot of a production. Kiss Me Quick, it is promised, will be a revelation in the amusement world."

Universal Week Held in Bronx House

Universal week was celebrated by the Time theatre, 157th street and Coutrandt avenue, the Bronx, New York, recently, with a special Universal production every day during the theatre's Fall Festival week.

On Monday and Tuesday the feature was "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals," the amazing travel-adventure film taken in the wilds of New Guinea. On Wednesday the Time theatre patrons saw Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, the Universal comedy twins in "La La Lucille," a screen farce taken from Arthur Jackson's hilarious musical comedy of that name.

Thursday and Friday the star attraction was the elaborate Oriental screen masterpiece, "The Breath of the Gods," featuring Tsuru Aoki. Saturday saw Harry Carey in "Human Stuff" as the feature, and the Sunday audience had Edith Roberts in "The Adorable Savage."

A combined lobby and front display advertising the entire week's showing was used to good effect.

Lyons and Moran Start on New Comedy

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, having looked to the editing and titling of their last comedy feature, "Once a Plumber——" and having seen the negative safely on its way to New York, will immediately start production of their next comedy, "Fixed by George," from the Pen of Edgar Franklin.

In the cast supporting Lyons and Moran will be Hazel Howell, Beatrice Plante, Fred Gamble, Daisy Robinson, Earl Martin and others.

"Midsummer Madness" Ready for Cutting Stage

William DeMille has completed photographic work upon his latest production for Paramount, "Midsummer Madness," and the picture is now ready to be cut, titled and edited.

The picture is a screen version of Cosmo Hamilton's novel, "His Friend and His Wife." It is said to be singular in that it has two heroes and two heroines, or four distinct and equally strong leads.

The four leading roles are played by Jack Holt, Conrad Nagel, Lois Wilson and Lila Lee. Betty Francisco well-known ingenue, also has a prominent role. Others of importance are Claire McDowell, Charlotte Jackson, Ethel Wales, Charles Ogle, Lillian Leighton and George Kuwa.

The scenario was written by Olga Printzlau and Guy Wilky is responsible for the photography and lighting effects.

Contrasting Role for Madge Kennedy

Madge Kennedy's large following of screen fans will see her in a "different" role in Goldwyn's next starring vehicle for her, "The Highest Bidder," based upon Maximilian Foster's novel, "The Trap." It is in striking contrast to her blithe comedy role of the telephone operator in "The Girl With the Jazz Heart." There is plenty of comedy, good comedy, in "The Highest Bidder" for the screen star, but the part of Sally Raeburn gives her a lot of emotional acting to do.

First National Has Big List

Eighteen Features Made on West Coast; Many Eastern Ones Coming

FOR the autumn season First National will release twenty-seven productions, of which no less than eighteen will be made in Hollywood. This fact is significant, for it means that Los Angeles will profit from a cinema payroll of $5,200,000 for the coming year. The following are the western made pictures:

Cohen stage success; Sol Lesser's "What Women Love," a comedy drama starring Annette Kellerman; King Vidor's "The Jack Knife Man," from the novel by Ellis Parker Butler; Anita Stewart in Kathleen Norris' serial story, "Harriet and the Piper"; Marshall Neilan's "Dinty," with the befreckled starlet Wesley Barry in the title role; Allan Dwan's "In the Heart of a Fool," from the story by William Allen White; Henry Lehrman's comedy, "A Kick in High Life"; Sidney Franklin's initial independent production, "Athalie," from the Robert W. "HELP WANTED: MALE," the latest Blanche Sweet production for release through Pathe, is, according to some reviewers, the best production in which the blonde Pathe star has been seen in the last two years.

The story is from the pen of Edwina Levin, and the author is said to have created a dashing, laughing Summer romance with spice and action running through every moment. The direction is by Henry King. As the little country girl working at the town switchboard and worrying about a husband, Miss Sweet is said to be delightful. But when she is left $1,000 and decides to intrigue a husband with it, she is at her best.

The result of the work of the Jesse D. Hampton forces in the making of the production is hailed with the keenest satisfaction by the Pathe organization, for it enables them to continue the high standard of Blanche Sweet productions that they have been offering to exhibitors. "Fighting Cressy," "The Deadlier Sex" and "Simple Souls" have been her previous pictures.

Shift in Universal's Baltimore Branch

P. Oletsky, manager of the Universal branch exchange in Baltimore, Md., has resigned, it recently was announced by Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for the film company.

The affairs of the Baltimore office has been taken over by E. J. Smith, division sales manager for Universal in the Atlantic Division, with headquarters in Philadelphia.

This adds considerably to Smith's responsibilities in Universal's costal territory. He is a new-comer among Universal sales heads, having been promoted to Division Manager several months ago as a result of his work as head of the Cleveland exchange, with which he led the entire country in salesmanship.

Animals Important in Artclass Feature

"The Unfair Sex," Artclass Pictures Corporation's seven-reel feature now nearing completion at the company's Yonkers' studio, is to contain animal interest in conjunction with the society atmosphere.

Walter Miller, who plays the leading male role, lives a strenuous seven reels of cinema heroism. The scenario boasts of presenting more lions on the screen at one time than have ever been shown before. The eighteen animals owned by the Messrs. Louis, Max and Adolph Weiss, who comprise Artclass, play important roles in the story.

Under the direction of John Joseph Harvey, the picture is expected to be ready for trade-showing within a month. John K. Holbrook is supervising the production as well as acting as head cameraman. In the cast are Anne Luther, Doris Dare, Wilfred Cooley, Armand Cortez, Frank Evans, William Cavanaugh, Donna Ramerez and Mathilda Bruntage, with Mr. Miller and Dorothy Bernard supplying the romance.

Hal Roach to Feature Boland in Comedies

Hal Roach, claims another big success in the field of comedy in the featuring of Eddie Boland with a bevy of beautiful girls in a new series of one-reel comedies, known as the "Vanity Fair Girls." The first production, "June Madness," will be released on October 3rd.

Boland has long been one of the important members of the company in which "Snub" Pollard is featured. Under the new arrangement the new series will be released alternately with the Pollard series of Rolin Comedies.

Press Books Issued on Bessie Love Pictures

The advertising and publicity department of the Federated Film Exchange of America, Inc., are preparing a special press book on the first two Bessie Love productions "Bonnie May" by Louis Dodge, and "The Midlanders" by Charles T. Jackson. Special attention is being given to the exploitation department in this press book.

"Humoresque" Drive Successful

Publicity, and Advertising Departments Cooperate

THE box-office success already scored by "Humoresque" well in advance of its release date, is held by executives of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to be largely due to the thorough-going efficiency of its publicity and advertising and exploitation departments, according to a statement sent out by that company this week.

Although "Humoresque" is not officially released until next Sunday September 19, the campaign was started practically simultaneously with the opening of the picture at the Criterion Theatre, New York, on the 30th of May. From that moment no avenue of publicity was overlooked to spread broadcast the appeal of the picture and the news of the smashing record set up on Broadway. What the critics had to say about it was placed before exhibitors and fans in all sections of the country, and the actual attendance figures were sent out from week to week to back up the criticisms. Then followed the showings at the Rivoli and Rialto, and no opportunity was neglected to let the public know that its popularity held up to the highest peak throughout those final weeks.

While the publicity and advertising staff was thus engaged, the exploitation department was laying its plans far in advance, not only at the home office, but in every one of the branches. Unusually successful engagements in Chicago, Los Angeles and Cleveland furnished supplementary ammunition, but it was the big drive on what the picture did in New York that is held to be largely responsible for the reports now coming in from a score or more of first-run houses that have been playing pre-release engagements.

Al Lichtman, general manager of Distribution, says: "'Humoresque' is a picture without a star, in the accepted sense of the term. Its cast is composed of players who hitherto hardly could have been classed as celebrities of the screen. The director, now famous, was not so then. The author was a popular fiction writer and the story had been widely read, but popular authors have failed, time without number, to draw people into the theatres and many a good and well-known piece of fiction has failed dismally as a box-office magnet. The only name really famous in the picture world was that of Frances Marion, who wrote the scenario.

"So we have sold the picture to the public with our advertising and publicity and our exploitation based chiefly on what the picture did on Broadway. Now it must be conceded either that the often-repeated contention that exhibitors and their patrons outside New York don't care a rap about what Broadway thinks, is pure 'bunk,' or that we have the most efficient organization and methods of advertising and exploitation that ever operated in the amusement field. As a matter of fact, I contend that both statements are correct."

Among other tributes from Washington, Branch Manager Lester Rosenthal wired to the home office of Famous Players-Lasky on September 9th: "Public and critics raving about 'Humoresque' at Columbia Theatre. Broke all box-office receipts for any picture in the history of Washington, turning away enough people every day to fill the theatre twice over. Same reports from Norfolk and Richmond."

"Great Redeemer" Scores

Van Loan's Story Reported Success in Every Pre-Release Presentation

ADDITIONAL reports of the success achieved by the Maurice Tourneur super production, "The Great Redeemer" on the occasion of its pre-release showings in California are being received daily at the New York offices of Metro Pictures Corporation, exclusive distributor of this production. "The Great Redeemer," it will be recalled, had its world premiere at the new California Theatre in Los Angeles on August 15, and was shown for the entire week to record-breaking crowds. On that occasion the motion picture reviewers of Los Angeles were united in acclaiming "The Great Redeemer" a masterpiece, worthy of ranking with the greatest of all works of the cinema.

Now comes word to Metro from B. F. Rosenberg, manager of the company's Los Angeles exchange, that "The Great Redeemer," after its run at the California, was immediately booked for the week following at Miller's Theatre, on the same block with the California, where it played another seven days to capacity.

At the same time "The Great Redeemer" was given a pre-release showing at Jensen's Theatre in Pasadena, one of Los Angeles's neighboring cities, and evoked the following telegram from the management to Metro Pictures Corporation:

"Mr. Rosenberg of your Los Angeles office asked me to wire you what the people of Pasadena thought of your production 'The Great Redeemer.' I can easily do this in one line: It is positively the most talked of picture we have ever shown. We played it a week to big business in the hot weather."

Metro has now definitely set the date for the general release of "The Great Redeemer" as September 27. The picture is a filmization of an original story by H. H. Van Loan, author of many screen successes.

Preparing Nine Goldwyn's

Continuity Being Written by Well Known Authors for Star Productions

THE continuity writers on Goldwyn scenario staff at the Culver City studios are hard at work adapting nine stories for production in the near future. The writers and the stories on which they are now working follow:

J. E. Nash, newspaper man and writer of fiction, is putting Hermann Bahr's comedy, "The Concert", which served Leo Ditrichstein as a starring vehicle for two seasons, into motion picture form.

Edfrid A. Bingham, formerly a Cincinnati newspaper man, later dramatic editor of the New York Evening Mail and short story writer, is preparing the continuity for "Boys Will Be Boys" from Charles O'Brien Kennedy's stage adaptation of Irvin Cobb's famous story. Will Rogers will star in it.

Alfred E. Statter, newspaper man, clerk in the United States Senate, secretary to Leslie M. Shaw when he was secretary of the Treasury, appointed assistant Secretary of the Treasury by Theodore Roosevelt, and business manager for William H. Taft's 1908 campaign for the presidency is adapting William Hurbut's stage comedy, "Made in Heaven," to the screen.

Gerald C. Duffy is turning Mary Roberts Rinehart's first original screen story into continuity form. It has been given the title of "Let Sleeping Dogs Lie."

Charles Kenyon, author of "Kindling" and other plays, is performing a like service for Gouverneur Morris' first story written directly for the screen, "The Water Lily."

Louis Sherwin, formerly a Denver and a New York dramatic critic, is writing the continuity for Gertrude Atherton's first original screen story, "Noblesse Oblige."

Elmer E. Rice, who wrote "On Trial," "For the Defense" and other plays, is making the motion picture adaptation of "The Lighted Way," by E. Phillips Oppenheim.

Cleves Kinkead, Louisville newspaper man, and author of the very successful "Common Clay" and other plays, is preparing continuity on an original story which he has written for Goldwyn.

Eleanor Flori, scenario writer, is adapting the eighth of Booth Tarkington's "Emotions and Adventures of Edgar Pomeroy" for the screen.

Critics Praise Farnum Film

Trade Press Gives Good Reception to First Robertson-Cole Specials

SUMMARIZING the reports of the trade paper reviewers on "Big Happiness," the Dustin Farnum special shown at Moss' Broadway Theatre last week for its premiere, Robertson-Cole finds that the first of its specials for the new year has sent the coming season's policy off to a flying start.

Lawrence Reid, of the Motion Picture News, said of the play: "'Big Happiness' furnished a goodly amount of thrills. The acting and direction are right up to the notch."

The Exhibitors Trade Review characterized the picture as "A good send off" for Mr. Farnum's new connection. It said: "The action throughout 'Big Happiness' is rapid and the sort that will find favor with the boys, women and men." Of Dustin Farnum the same newspaper says: "He is as powerful as he is convincing and full of life."

Wid's Daily, after saying that Mr. Farnum in this picture creates distinctive characters, declared that the picture has been "well handled" and as a result "it is an entertaining production that will appeal to practically all audiences. It is a picture which is going to appeal to the motion picture public in general."

"Big Happiness" was directed by Colin Campbell, who will, it is understood, direct all of Mr. Farnum's future productions for Robertson-Cole. Mr. Farnum is only one of the numerous stars, including Pauline Frederick, Mae Marsh and Sessue Hayakawa who have been engaged by Robertson-Cole to turn out a minimum of four pictures a year for a period of years.

Robertson-Cole was among the first of the large distributing companies to recognize the writing on the wall and to limit production with the idea of distinctly bettering their out-put. It felt that no star could be expected to turn out more than four pictures a year and do good work.

Hart's "Skyfire" Is Released

Pinnacle Star Soon to Start on Third Picture for Independent

NEAL HART, whose first picture of the Pinnacle Productions series, "Hell's Oasis", has been released, recently put the finishing touches on "Skyfire", his second feature, which was released on September 15th. He is scheduled to start on his third picture "The Lumberjack," on September 20th. However, Hart is an ardent baseball fan, and contract or no contract, he states that he will attend the world series in Chicago if the Sox win the pennant.

Eddy Eckels, general manager of Independent Films Association, of Chicago, in commenting upon Hart's telegram, in which he expressed his intention of seeing the big baseball battle, said, "It looks like Hart will have his way and we are making arrangements accordingly. Hart is to start on his third picture, 'The Lumberjack', about September 20th, and would be right in the middle of his work at the California studios when the world's series is pulled off, but we certainly will arrange for him to make a flying trip to Chicago and witness a couple of the games at least."

Hank Mann Moves Into Larger Quarters

Because of the increased activity in its productions, the Hank Mann comedy company this week moved into the Burston studios in Hollywood, Cal., deserting the Francis Ford studios where the company occupied space for the past year. A new dark stage is in the process of construction, and will be ready for occupancy as soon as lighting equipment of the latest design, due to arrive from the East this week, is installed therein. A new row of dressing rooms are also being constructed at the studios.

Each release will show a leading director at work in the studio or on location. Marshall Neilan shooting the thrilling aeroplane and railroad train scenes in "Go Get It," and Maurice Tourneur getting submarine scenes off Catalina Island are the subjects that inaugurate this new feature of "Screen Snapshots."

Good Cast in First Compson

Initial Production by Star's Own Concern Has Many Noted Players

THE cast which appears in support of Betty Compson in her first starring production, "Prisoners of Love," which is scheduled for Fall release by Goldwyn, is made up of well known artists and provides an important indication of the thoroughness with which Miss Compson produces her own pictures.

Roy Stewart was starred by Triangle and has just finished a long term contract with Federal Productions. He has been leading man for Lillian Gish, Katherine MacDonald and Bessie Love, and other popular leading women have supported him in his own starring features.

Emory Johnson has played leads opposite Mary Pickford, Dorothy Dalton, Ethel Clayton, Constance Talmadge and other feminine lights of the screen. His work in "Prisoners of Love" was of such excellence that Miss Compson engaged him for her second starring picture.

Ralph Lewis is rated by many atuhorities as one of the best "character heavies" in motion pictures.

Claire McDowell is another important recruit from the speaking stage. Her motion picture experience embraces appearances in a great number of productions of merit.

Clara Horton, who is now but sixteen, has been on the stage and in pictures since she was four years old.

Even the smaller parts in "Prisoners of Love" were placed in the hands of well known players. Among them are Walter Miller, Betty Schade, Betty Linley and Arnold Gregg.

Ray Opens Newark Theatre

$500,000 Rialto Filled All Day by "45 Minutes From Broadway"

CHARLES RAY, in "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway," was the opening week's attraction at the Rialta, Newark's new $500,000 theatre, which the proprietors declare to be one of the finest motion picture houses in the metropolitan district, outside New York City. The Rialto owners are Max Spiegel and William F. Rafferty, and the resident manager is Frank L. Smith.

Four complete showings are given in the Rialto daily, beginning at noon and continuing till one o'clock. On the Sunday when the public was admitted for the first time along queue of Ray fans stretched from in front of the ticket window throughout the afternoon and until the start of the last performance at night, and, except for the very early comers, admission was in small groups. This, though the theater seats 2,000 persons. Mr. Spiegel considered that Sunday a red-letter day, but the crowds continued to come on each successive day during the week.

A special program of Cohan melodies had been arranged as a prologue and the ever-popular "Mary" songs were played during the showings of "Forty-five!" Every audience was demonstrative, paying Mr. Ray the unusual compliment of applauding at frequent intervals, as well as at the conclusion.

"We count ourselves peculiarly fortunate," wrote Mr. Spiegel to Arthur S. Kane, "in having had 'Forty-five Minutes from Broadway' as the initial attraction. Crowded houses have been the rule daily and every audience has been most enthusiastic. Mr. Ray, to use a popular expression, 'scored a knockout.'"

"Midchannel" Strikes Keynote, Says Equity

It is pointed out by Equity that "Midchannel" strikes the keynote of popular demand, with its harmonious interior designs, and lavish costumes worn by Miss Young. The pains that have been taken by Director Harry Garson and Miss Young, who personally supervises all her pictures, in leaving nothing to chance and being scrupulously critical about every detail explain says Equity, why "Midchannel" comes rather later than the other Young pictures.

It has been said by the committee in charge of this special showing that the gathering will be one of the most significant that has ever assembled for the showing of a film. The Hon. William G. Settle "Faith Healer" Cast

Newest George Melford Special for Famous, Has Milton Sills in Lead

AFTER weeks of careful selection Paramount is ready to announce the completion of the cast for "The Faith Healer," William Vaughn Moody's play, which is to be made as a George Melford special.

The title role, the character "Michaelis," will be enacted by Milton Sills. Mr. Sills has been seen in many big productions within the past few months. He will be particularly recalled for his interpretation of one of the principal roles in Hugh Ford's production, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me."

Ann Forrest has been selected for the part of Rhoda Williams. Miss Forrest has also been seen in some of the big ones of late, making a decided hit as the little cellar slavey in William DeMille's production of "The Prince Chap."

Fanny Midgely, famous character actress, is Mary Beeler, the invalid; Frederick Vroom plays Mathew Beeler, her husband, and the cynical but kindly sister, Martha Beeler, is interpreted by Loyola O'Connor, a most striking choice for that character part. Little May Giracci, who scored in Cecil B. DeMille's "For Better, For Worse," and in William DeMille's "The Prince Chap," plays Little Annie. Robert Brower is Uncle Abe, the old negro. Dr. Littlefield, the cynical man of science who does his best to destroy the faith of his patient in Michaelis, the faith healer, and who presents an interesting heavy characterization, is portrayed by Adolph Menjou, while Edward Vroom and George Berrell also appear as associate doctors. Fountaine La Rue will also be seen in an excellent character part, entirely suited to her pronounced talents.

Critics Laud "39 East" Film

New York Papers Impressed by Miss Binney in Stage Success

"39 EAST", the Realart production featuring Constance Binney, which opened at the Rialto theatre, New York, September 12th, received warm praise from the critics of the New York newspapers. The screen version is from the play by Rachael Crothers, and Miss Binney who starred in "39 East" on the stage and most of the original cast appear. The production was directed by John S. Robertson and Kathryn Stuart, who adapted "Erstwhile Susan", and "The Stolen Kiss" for Miss Binney, wrote the scenario.

Extracts from some of the criticisms follow: American: "One of the best Realart productions presented in recent months. The original play has been closely adhered to and the comedy element, as well as the appeal of youth and youth's tribulations have been cleverly brought out in the screen telling. Miss Binney is delightful in the star role."

Journal of Commerce: "There are some charming scenes in the play, notably the little party in Central Park and Penelope's dance." Evening Sun: "Miss Binney's characterization of Penelope Penn lost none of the charm and vim of her work in the Rachael Crothers play. Several humorous situations unsuited to the limitations of the stage have been introduced."

Kellerman in "Slow Motion"

Educational Acquires Distributing Rights to Novel One Reeler

PRESIDENT E.W.HAMMONS, of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., announced this week that his company has acquired a single reel picture made by the Cinal slow motion process with Annette Kellerman demonstrating the art of diving. The picture will be ready for early release.

According to those who have seen the picture the Cinal process has achieved unusually affective results in slow motion. In this picture Miss Kellerman shows all of the variations of the diving act with which she won such fame in vaudeville. The various dives are first shown through ordinary motion picture camera views and then analyzed by the Cinal method. This process is said to greatly emphasize the grace of the modern Venus.

The first public showing of the picture was given at Grauman's million dollar theatre, Los Angeles, last week.

"Such pictures as this," said Mr. Hammons, "prove that the length of a picture alone does not make it a special. We determined to put out unusual single reels in this class just as they became available and we have already listed 'Modern Centaurs' and 'The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes," both of which have already achieved more notable showings and at higher rentals than any other pictures of similar length ever made.

"We have had reports from a number of theatres that these specials have caused more 'word of mouth' advertising than any portion of their program and the demand for them is increasing. For instance, 'Modern Centaurs' is on its third week at the Broadway Strand, Detroit, and during the past week was featured in such houses as the Alhambra in Cleveland and the New Grand Central in St. Louis.

"However, there must be a very high standard of quality maintained in these specials."

Baker Leaves Cosmopolitan

Veteran Director to Turn Talent to New Concern Which Will Bear Name

GEORGE D. BAKER, who is the senior director in point of service with the Cosmopolitan Film Company, is the latest directorial luminary to branch out as an individual producer. Since resigning his position of Director General of the western Metro studios, Mr. Baker has been directing a series of special Cosmopolitan Productions for the Hearst film interests, among them being "The Cinema Murder" and "Buried Treasure", starring Marion Davies, also "Heliotrope" and many other Cosmopolitan productions. He was also the director of Nazimova's feature, "Revelation", and "The Man Who Lost Himself", starring William Faversham. A noteworthy feature of Mr. Baker's career is that since he left the stage in favor of the motion picture art, Mr. Baker has been continuously employed for the last ten years by only three motion picture companies; first with Vitagraph, then Metro and lastly with Cosmopolitan.

This splendid record it is understood is the reason which has gained for Mr. Baker one of the most lucrative offers in filmdom. Upon the completion of his present Cosmopolitan feature, Mr. Baker will turn his entire attention to a new company, now being incorporated, under the name of George D. Baker Productions.

Raver Announces Productions

ADHERING to a policy dating back nearly ten years, at which time he released one of the earliest "big author" productions, Harry Raver still believes in the box office value of the writers best known to the public, and particularly their already popularized books and plays.

He was responsible for Augustus Thomas' "Arizona," "In Missouri," "The Nightingale," and "The Other Girl," Richard Harding Davis' "Soldiers of Fortune," Henry Blossom's "Checkers," Eugene Walters' "Paid in Full," Edgar Selwyn's "Pierre of the Plains," Hal Reid's "Dan," Upton Sinclair's "The Jungle," Agnes Fletcher Bain's "Mystic Hour," "The Master Crook," Louis Reeves Harrison's "Law That Failed," and Gabrielle d'Annunzio's immortal "Cabiria," and the wisdom he displayed in selecting this material is shown by the fact that most of these stories and plays have been produced a second time by prominent companies.

Notable among the list of new productions to be issued by Mr. Raver during the coming year is an adaptation of Anthony Hope's widely known book, "Sophia," to be released under the title "The Virgin of Paris." This production have been elaborately done and will be shown to the trade in two weeks.

Augustus Thomas' and Anthony Hope's Stories

A heart-interest story of "Mother Love" has been written by Augustus Thomas for production by Harry Raver. Mr. Thomas, whose plays have lived in the public memory for many years, has written but two original stories for the screen. His first was "The Nightingale," written for Ethel Barrymore and produced by Mr. Raver in 1914, and the present one, "Mother Love," which Mr. Raver will also produce.

Agnes Fletcher Bain is responsible for the scenario of "A Daughter of the Sphinx" and this production is scheduled among the Raver list of releases. "A Daughter of the Sphinx" is an elaborate offering, the story's theme being based on Reincarnation. The scenes are laid in Egypt in the time of Pharaoh. Several thousand people make up the cast.

"Libertines," photodrama by Louis Reeves Harrison, the first of a series of powerful screen stories by this gifted writer, will be produced by Mr. Raver, under the author's direct supervision.

Was he seeking the false friend who wrecked his fortune and stole his wife?

These are the great elemental things in human relationship that are powerfully dealt with in this dramatization of the magnificent work of F. Hopkinson Smith.

Compliments For Fanark Director and Author

At a meeting held on September 6, 1920, the board of directors of the Fanark Corporation, headed by D. J. H. Levett, president, complimented George Everett, director, and N. Brewster Morse, author, of the first Fanark Picture, "The Crimson Cross," on the excellent picture that they had produced. Mr. Morse and Mr. Everett have been engaged by Mr. Levett to write and direct the second Fanark Picture, "The Strength of the Weak."

"I think that 'The Crimson Cross' is a picture of which The Fanark Corporation may well be proud, "Mr. Levett said. "The novel story, which was written by N. Brewster Morse, and the excellent direction by George Everett, have made 'The Crimson Cross' one of the biggest pictures of the coming year. Fanark has, I feel, in these two men a great future. They have been engaged to write and direct the second Fanark Picture, and after reading a synopsis of "The Strength of the Weak," which will be our second picture and which is now being completed by Mr. Morse, I am certain their efforts in the production of motion pictures will make screen history."

The Romayne Super-Film Co., of Culver City, California, report that they are soon to start on a series of one-reel comedies along with the two-reelers they are now producing, which are sold on the States Rights Market.

Foreign Buyers Are Interested

Commonwealth Film Bring Inquiries From Abroad

THAT it is not only the buyers of the United States who are interested in "The Hidden Light", Commonwealth Film Corporation's picture starring Dolores Cassinelli, is indicated, it is said, by a number of inquiries from foreign buyers that have been received at the New York offices of the company. Commonwealth controls the world's rights to the feature.

"The large number of inquiries proves there is always a field for a strong independent picture," President Sam Zierler of the Commonwealth, declares. "It is also a tribute to the trade papers we have and indicates their circulation is international.

"It has always been my contention that the same truth tht applies to advertising in general can be applied to the motion picture industry," the independent operator continued, "I have contended that the production must be worthy of all the elaborate, extensive advertising done in its behalf. The buyers and exhibitors must not be misled. Too often inferior pictures have been foisted on the market, exhibitors misled and their theatres given a 'blackeye' by the use of the so-called excellent pictures.

"I have built up my reputation in my own territory—Greater New York and northern Jersey—by releasing only what I consider the best independent productions available and I owe my success to my policy of square dealing and giving the exhibitors pictures that will draw big and please their patrons.

"Motion picture goers are becoming more particular in their tastes and are not satisfied with the old mediocre 'pot-boiler' pictures that too often were shown them in the past and still find their way into theatres.

"'The Hidden Light' will stand the severest test. It meets all the requirements—it has a big star, a big story, a lavish production, and the necessary advertising matter and exploitation possibilities."

"The Hidden Light" stars Dolores Cassinelli, "the Cameo Girl". It was written by Abraham Schomer, who wrote "Today", "The Yellow Passport" and other dramas. In the cast are such players as Arthur Donaldson, Walter Downing and Henry Sedley, all of whom have earned reputations as film favorites.

Equity Launches Chicago Drive

Gollos Will Exploit Two Pictures on Large Scale

THE new Equity Franchise in Chicago, established last week, and headed by A. M. Gollos, veteran showman and distributor of the West, is to start with a rousing drive on a scale of unusual proportions, according to Equity, Chicago within the course of the next month will see one of the most expensive and sweeping advertising and exploitation campaigns ever conducted by a local distributor.

Such is the arrangement concluded between the national office of Equity and A. M. Gollos this week. As a result of several days' negotiations, both parties mapped out a detailed advertising and exploitation campaign that will take two directions. One will be the announcement in the trade papers and local press of the Equity Pictures Corp. of Illinois, to acquaint the Western exhibitors with their new Equity distributor. The other angle will be more popular, and will consist of an extensive newspaper advertising and publicity drive, that, it is said, will run into several thousand dollars, and which will announce the first run of "Whispering Devils" in Chicago. In the latter campaign, the exploitation staff of Equity will be on the job and several extensive tie-ups on the picture have already been planned and will be set in operation next week.

Coincident with the acquisition by Mr. Gollos of Equity's two features "Whispering Devils" and "She Played and Paid", the former a Conway Tearle and Rosemary Theby vehicle, and the latter a Fanny Ward feature, new and larger offices were taken, and a staff of trained local publicity men and salesmen were added to Gollos' twenty-eight salesmen who have been on his staff for years and who are said to cover Illinois and Indiana thoroughly.

By the arrangement, the Equity Chicago office will be in closest touch with the national office, so that the Chicago branch and the Western exhibitors it serves will benefit by the expert advertising, exploitation and sales brains of the national office.

British Picture Is Purchased

C. B. Price Co. Obtains Rights of Foreign Feature; Title Is Changed

C. B. PRICE COMPANY of 1446 Broadway received by the Mauretania, the negative of a film from the play "Hindle Wakes" and which has been creating a sensation in Great Britain. Mr. Price has purchased the American and Canadian rights to the picture, and for domestic use it has been re-named "Your Daughter—and Mine."

"Hindle Wakes" was written as a play by Stanley Houghton, and first produced in Manchester, England, by the Miss Horniman Players. It was brought to this country by William A. Brady, and because of its unusual story, with what is said to be an entirely new angle on the everlasting sex problem, the play received the endorsement of the Drama League and was heartily supported by the Little Theatres throughout the country. It ran for over a year in Chicago, and was hailed as a masterpiece by the Dramatic Critics of the Middle West.

The picture was first called "Marriage Refused," a title which rather gives away, in clumsy fashion, the real punch and purpose of the story. It deals with the demand of the "female of the species" for a single standard of morals; a standard that will elevate men to a higher moral plane, rather than drag woman down to the lower sex ideals of the men. "Your Daughter—and Mine" shows some of the most beautiful photography that has ever come from an English studio, states C. B. Price. Pictures of Blackpool, the English Coney Island; of the mountains of Wales, and of the stormy Irish Sea, are particularly striking and artistic.

The cast is composed of a notable company of English players. The picture is ready for immediate release.

Exhibitors Behind B. Y. S.

"Headin' Home" Company Formed by Brown, Yudkin and Siegel

THE B. Y. S. Films, Inc., with offices at 120 West 46th street, New York City, announces that it acquired its alphabetical name from the men who incorporated. The B. Y. S. Films, was formed for the sole purpose of exploiting Babe Ruth in "Headin' Home" in New York state and northern New Jersey.

Mr. Brown is one of New Jersey's foremost exhibitors and controls a large chain of theatres. Mr. Yudikin is an experienced State Rights man, and is general manager of the new company. He has handled many big features in the past and considers "Headin' Home" a production that is bound to win at the box office. Mr. Siegel is also a New Jersey exhibitor.

It is announced that "Headin' Home" is to be released simultaneously wherever wanted. More than 100 prints of the picture will be used in the New York and northern New Jersey territory. The picture will positively be released on Monday, September 20th, announces the company.

General Manager Yudin states that he recently showed an unfinished print of "Headin' Home" to a few managers at the studio and as a result obtained $47,000 worth of bookings. Scores of exhibitors, it is said, have broken their policy by giving the picture a two weeks' run. A great amount of advertising material, such as throw-aways, buttons and so forth, has been issued, and are obtainable at the New York office.

Urban's Series In Schools

New York High Schools Will Use 11,000 Feet of Educational Reels

IT was learned this week that Charles Urban's library will supply more than 11,000 feet of film in the series of strictly educational film reels which will be used this Fall in the New York High Schools in the study of biology, geography and English. The material selected is being asembled by T. K. Peters of the Argonaut Film Corporation, which is handling the New York City contract.

"The announcement is of more than passing interest, perhaps not so much to exhibitors but to the industry at large," announces Keits.

"It is a concrete forecast of what is coming and the uses to which motion picture production is going to be put."

Some of the subjects selected are studies in geography, mostly South American material, including pictorial studies of the big capitals with especial attention paid to Brazil. The pictures are said to be noteworthy for the attention they pay to detail aside from the beauty of the subject matter. Another geographical subject takes the pupil up into Calgary, Alberta.

Studies at home include a magnificent test-film on Washington. It involves a digest of our national history in a few hundred feet, pointing out the significance of the different public buildings, the succession of the presidents, the beauties of the city. Many a traveler it is said, has spent a week in Washington and has not seen as much as this film will show to the school children. The zoological and botanical studies furnish the largest group of Urban Classics, which Charles Urban will furnish for school use.

Sterling Feature Completed

"The Fighting Kentuckians" Will Be Placed on State Right Market

THE Sterling Feature Pictures, Inc., announce that "The Fighting Kentuckians" is the first of the series of photoplays to be released under the Sterling Banner. J. Harrison Edwards, the writer and director of this story, states that nothing has been spared in making this story one that any audience will appreciate.

The locations used in the picture were never before photographed, it is said. In securing these locations Mr. Edwards states that he went into the heart of the Cumberlands and stayed two months before he could convince the people that he was a motion picture man and not a revenue officer. However, he finally gained their confidence and secured their permission to take his company into the mountains with the assurance they would not be molested.

The cutting and editing of the picture was done by Charles T. Dazey, the author of "In Old Kentucky". Sterling Features believe that that they have a real attraction in "The Fighting Kentuckians" and state that all inquiries should be addressed to their office at 407 Orange Street, Wilmington, Delaware.

ABOUT PLAYERS

Mollie King to return to the screen is according to recent advices. And it is to be next month.

She expects to be starred in a series of productions made by The American Cinema Corporation, her last picture for the same company being "Women Men Forget." There is a young son, Kenneth Alexander, Jr., added to the King-Alexander union since the blonde star forsook the screen, temporarily. His consent to her taking up the work again was harder to secure than that of Mr. Mollie King, or Kenneth Alexander, Sr. "Alexander the Great" will not appear in pictures with his mother, but will head the family parade to winter quarters in New York, from Forest Hills, where he had been spending the summer.

Just before Dorothy Gish sailed for Europe she completed "A Cynic Effect," soon to be released, in which her leading man was a youth named Tom Douglas. Incidentally, this production marked his screen debut, and his selection for such an important role was an eloquent tribute to the quality of his work. It is reported that Mr. Douglas may be seen hereafter in D. W. Griffith productions.

Faith Hope, the little lady with the very black hair and eyes that are as blue, who will be seen in the coming Pathe release, "The Velvet Finger," has been told that she is a cross between Nazimova and Viola Dana. Being a great admirer of both stars, she is finding it hard to chose between compliments.

Florence Vidor, wife of King Vidor, director of "The Jack Knife Man" has just completed work in Thomas H. Ince's picture, "Beau Revel." As a result of her good work in this picture Ince has contracted with her for another picture in which she will be starred.

Before Harry Coleman, one of the promising juveniles of the stage and screen, went into the naval service, he had already attained considerable prominence in vaudeville in a sketch entitled, "Taking a Tip" and another tabloid drama named "It Happened in Court." When he was mustered out of the navy service, Coleman made a trip abroad on personal business from which he has just returned, and is now preparing for an engagement which he has already secured in a forthcoming big special motion picture production. Coleman will be remembered as the juvenile hero in a series of productions made by the Allied Film Players some time ago. He is the ideal juvenile, youthful, manly and sympathetic and those who have seen his screen performances forecast a worthwhile career for him in the films.

Jess Arnold has completed her work in the Justine Johnstone Realart production, "Black Birds," in which she played a prominent role.

Louise Lovely, who first appeared in Fox pictures as leading man for William Farnum, played opposite him in seven productions. William Fox made her a star in the summer of 1920. At the age of eight she began her theatrical career in the Theatre Royal, in Sidney, Australia, the place of her birth. At fourteen she played her first grown-up part, becoming a star with the donning of long dresses, so there was a historical reason for the decision of Mr. Fox.

Olive Thomas

Olive Thomas Dies Abroad

OLIVE THOMAS, Selznick star, and one of the best known American motion picture actresses, died in Paris, France, September 9.

An accidental dose of poison, taken in place of a nerve tonic, was given as the cause of demise by the French authorities, following an investigation.

Cabled reports stated that in company with her husband, Jack Pickford, the star returned to her apartments at the Ritz Hotel at an early hour Monday morning, following a night of dancing on the Montmartre, and before retiring took a dose of the supposed medicine, prescribed for her by a physician for nervous breakdown. She mistook the bottle for one of bichloride of mercury. Removed to the hospital at Neuilly-sur-Seine, she fought death for several days.

Miss Thomas prior to entering pictures was for three years on the stage. She scored in Famous Players and Ince-Triangle productions, eventually being signed by Selznick.

Deep sorrow shrouded the picture colonies of Eastern and Western coast, with whom Miss Thomas was most popular.

The body is being brought back to this country for burial.

Walter Miller, playing the featured role in Artclass Corporation's new drama, "The Unfair Sex," had one week's vacation between pictures recently, an unusual record in a cinema summer. He completed what is promised as a remarkable characterization in Christie Cabanne's feature, "The Stealers"—on a Thursday, and on the following Monday week was in grease paint and heroics for Artclass at their Yonkers studio. In his latest picture he is said to live the strenuous life to the limit—eighteen lions sharing honors in the cast with him.

Archie Clark, who played an important role in "The Crimson Cross," has been signed for a second Fanark picture, "The Strength of the Weak," and has left for his home in Port Huron, Michigan, for two weeks' rest before commencing his studio activities again.

Captain Frank C. Badgley, a newcomer to the D. W. Griffith organization, who made his screen debut in a small part in "Way Down East," plays the role of the handsome and suave "heavy" in Dorothy Gish's latest picture, which is temporarily titled "The Ghost in the Garret."

Badgley is a Canadian, educated at McGill University, Montreal, Canada, to be a mechanical engineer. He is an author of short stories that were published in England during the war, and newspaper articles that were syndicated in Canada. Originally he was a newspaperman.

Camera work on "The Better Way" with Hope Hampton as the star, and "Big Jack" O'Brien, the "Screen daredevil," in the leading male role, is rapidly nearing completion at the Paragon studio in Fort Lee.

A quarter of a mile below the surface of the earth at Jerome, Arizona, Harry Carey, Universal star, and eleven of his company spent eight days filming scenes for "West is West."

This is the deepest that motion picture cameras and lights have been used in any mine, according to Superintendent E. E. Vanderhoff, and General Manager Robert Tally, of the United Verde. It is the first time that any pictures have been made in this or in the Verde extension, the Daisy, which are accounted the largest and richest copper mines in the world.

ABOUT DIRECTORS

JOHN E. INCE, a director at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, dropped his mega-

Louise Lovely, who has signed to appear in Fox productions

phone and called the entire Metro population together one day recently to make a plea for a dinner dance to be given at the Alexandria Hotel in Los Angeles, September 16, as a benefit for the disabled soldiers at Arrowhead Springs Hospital.

Mr. Ince told intimate stories of injured soldiers who have come under his own observation; of their sacrifices, ambitions and sufferings that are, in many cases, due directly to the forgetfulness of the public. Tears were in the eyes of the men and women who crowded the enclosed stage in which the plea was made when the director concluded his brief address.

"There isn't a man or woman here who can afford to forget our obligations to these heroes," he said. "We've all got to get behind this project and raise every dollar possible to bring what little comfort and happiness money can provide for the helpless men confined to cots at this hospital."

The benefit is being arranged by the Motion Picture Directors' Association. Practically every director actively engaged in the film industry in or near Los Angeles has contributed to the campaign to raise funds for the wounded fighters.

King Vidor, whose latest First National Production, "The Jack-Knife Man" is now playing the leading theatres throughout the country, announces that he has appointed William A. Vanderlyn as Art Director. Mr. Vanderlyn, who has studied in Rome, Paris, London and Vienna, has long been an Art Director, having worked on productions for Inc, Selznick, Griffith and Clara Kimball Young.

Robert Ellis, with his company including Eugene O'Brien, his leading lady, Ellen Cassidy, the ingenue, Elinor Fair, and several others, are in Maine on location, where exteriors for a feature yet without a name, are to be made. They expect to be away three weeks.

George Everett, director of the first Fanark picture, "The Crimson Cross," and a newcomer among directors of the screen, will, no doubt, carry with him the artistic touches he absorbed during his several years in grand opera and musical comedy. Mr. Everett has been re-engaged to direct the second picture under the same producing banner, which is already titled "The Strength of the Weak," the same to be written by N. Brewster Morse, author of the American Cinema special, "His Brother's Keeper," and the initial Fanark offering—"The Crimson Cross."

Paul Cazeneuve, recently made head of the scenario department at the Fox West Coast Studios, has just finished remaking "Sunset Sprague," with Buck Jones, the filming of which was held up through the recent injury of the star. The same bullet, which pierced Buck Jones' arm, incapacitating him for several days, also passed through Cazeneuve's hat—making a narrow escape for the Fox director. Cazeneuve is said to be making a reputation for himself as an emergency director, scenario editor and production man. His forty years' experience on the stage as an actor, manager, star and stage director, is proving invaluable to him. Among other things he has to brag about is that he played in the support of Sarah Bernhardt and Salvini thirty years ago.

Tom Forman, who is engaged in directing the Paramount picture starring Thomas Meighan, "Easy Street," selected Lila Lee for a powerful character role, a pathetic waif, which, Mr. Forman believes will be perhaps one of the strongest parts she has ever played. Gladys George is the leading woman, opposite Sir Thomas Meighan, also one from Mr. Forman is expecting a great deal.

Director George D. Baer, who just finished making the Cosmopolitan feature, "Buried Treasure," starring Marion Davies, is not afraid to say that the vistas taken for this picture in Topengo canyon, California, against a background of peaks, outrank anything of the kind yet done in films.

The setting called for was a castle in Spain. Mr. Baker says that when he and Joseph Urban, the famous scenic artist, came on this particular bit of territory in their quest for a site they saw its rich possibilities, but were shy of its wildness. However, the Urban eye cut its way through the growth of centuries and with the help of three Moorish arches and a balustrade he created his effect.

Announcement is made by William Fox, of the engagement of Jack Ford as director for Buck Jones in his next picture, the working title, and probably the selling title of which is "Bimbo."

Mr. Ford brings to Fox experience and reputation gained through his connection with Universal, with which company he has been affiliated as a director since 1914. To start him on his merry way with a boost William Fox has supplied the new director with an unusually strong supporting cast, Helen Ferguson, as the leading woman; Edwin Booth Tilton, Slim Padgett, George Stone and John J. Cooke.

Reginald Barker, who makes pictures for Goldwyn, says he follows a creed, his own composition:

"I would rather film a heart-throb than an earthquake. The director who throws on the screen one cross-section of human life, has built for himself a monument more lasting than brass. I approach each new picture with awe, for this newest art of expression is destined to become the most important of all in the lives of the people."

And to balance the seriousness of Mr. Barker we have the story that in directing "Bunty Pulls the Strings," Reginald Barker, director, did not feel that Cullen Landis, actor, suggested the land of heather as much as he should, and as Landis was leaving the lot the director instructed: "Bring a lot of Scotch with you tomorrow." And Landis, picking up his cue replied: "Sorry, but I've nothing but a little rye left."

Comedy Plans of Del Ruth

FOLLOWING the very brief announcement made by Hampton Del Ruth immediately after he left his former position as manager of the Sunshine comedy department at the William Fox studio, to the effect that he would organize a comedy producing company, comes the announcement that he will devote all of his time to the making of comedy specials having serious stories but studded with grotesque situations. In short, it is Mr. Del Ruth's intention to make a radical departure from the custard pie, stuffed club comedies so familiar to everyone.

"For a long time" says Mr. Del Ruth, "I have been eager to make comedies in which heart interest, pathos, tenderness, would have big parts. But until now—or rather until I made 'Skirts' I have been forced to go through the tiresome routine of shrapnel pies; stuffed clubs; greasy pavements and slipping cops. But now, thank Heaven, with my own companies I am going to do something different.

"In the new style stories there will be something for everybody. Sentimentalists, romanticists and devotees of thrills will all find something to enthuse about.

"The new stories will have a back-ground of common sense. A touch of pathos here and there will serve to lift genuine laughs into the sun; sympathy for the actor or actress will help that actor or actress win an artistic triumph.

"In present day slap-stick the gags are so fast and furious that all the alleged fun becomes a monotone. Nothing stands out. The performance becomes nothing more than a whirligig of hokum, a blur as it were.

"In my new productions there will be a decided trend toward sanity. Clean wholesome situations with, as I have said a tear here and there; a bit of romance, suspense, a thrill, such is the recipe which means success and a brand new line of burlesque comedy.

"My theory already has been proven a success. In 'Skirts,' which is now making quite a hit in the east, the theory was put to work and the reception accorded 'Skirts' tends to prove beyond any doubt that common sense is appreciated even in so called slap stick."

Jessen's Jottings from the West Coast

James Harrison will be missed from Christie Comedies in the future for he has left that organization after playing juvenile parts with them for a number of years. Harrison has accepted an engagement with the Special Pictures special comedy company directed by Reggie Morris and is now at work in his first picture for this company. Others in the Morris company are Nealy Edwards and Charlotte Merriam who is featured.

James Young is to be afforded the opportunity he has longed for these many years when he begins the filming of "The Devil" with George Arliss. This film is to be made by Andrew J. Callihan Productions, and Young with a staff of screen writers is now at work on adapting the stage play for the screen version.

A call for help comes from the serial and western department of Universal City which is in charge of David Epstein. Epstein asserts there is a dearth in original short western stories suitable for westerns with a comedy relief.

Aviation stunts in "Go and Get It" proved an inspiration to the representative of the Amalgamated Press, Ltd., of London who dropped in on Marshall Neilan this week by sky route for an interview, taking Graflex views on the way in and out. It is safe to predict the interview was anything but successful for the arrival was a great surprise to producer Neilan.

Ralph Lewis has been added to the cast of Priscilla Dean's "Outside the Law" written and now being directed by Tod Browning, and he began work this week.

Henry Woodward was the host at a log cabin banquet in honor of director Maurice Tourneur while the Tourneur troupe was on location in the high Sierra mountains. The banquet menu had a distinct Indian motif, being headed by a savage cocktail, Mohican soup, Cherokee salade, potatoes Apache, venison steak with Hopi sauce, redman punch and then some more.

By accident members of the Universal filming "The Gilded Dream" while on location at Santa Barbara learned that it was director Rolin Sturgeon's birthday and so they planned a surprise dinner which was successfully perpetrated that evening at Hotel Arlington.

By the time the "Four Horsemen" is completed Rudolph Valentino will have a new accomplishment for he has found it necessary to become an expert horseman for scenes in this picture. Heretofore he has been referred to as "that wonderful dancer."

Howard Hickman is to be the only director on the job for the filming of "The Killer" adapted from the Stewart Edward White story of that name by the B. B. Hampton Productions scenario staff. Previously it was erroneously announced that E. Richard Schayer would co-direct on this subject. Schayer is responsible for the continuity and is learning to direct under Hickman's tutelage.

Not the least of "The Hope's" entertaining qualities is to be found in its religious adherence to detail and the atmosphere obtained. The picture is a Screen Classics, Inc., production to be released by Metro

After four weeks residence in Hollywood Edward Earle who is leading man for Doraldina in "But Yet a Woman" had made the announcement that he is seeking a building site in Hollywood and will make that his future home.

Having four leading women has become a habit with the famous team of Lyons & Moran—Eddie and Lee—or "the boys." The Universal star comedy feature players tried this in their most recently made production "Once a Plumber ——" and they found it so satisfactory they are doing the same thing in "Fixed By George." The lucky girls are Beatrice La Plante, Hazel Howell, Daisy Robinson and Maude Wayne.

Florence Turner, one of the truly pioneer actresses of the screen is one of the newest additions to the Metro stock company, she having been placed under a long term contract to appear exclusively in subjects bearing the Metro trade marks. Miss Turner was recently seen in "Blackmail" and is now playing in "But Yet a Woman." There are but ten other members of the Metro stock company, including the four stars, Bert Lytell, Viola Dana, May Allison and Alice Lake. Miss Turner began work in pictures for the Vitagraph Company thirteen years ago, for six years was one of the foremost players of the screen and then followed four years in London. She has been before the public since three years of age when she appeared with Robert Mantell.

Tod Browning has appealed to the Internal Revenue Department for the right to purchase and use two pounds of opium in Chinatown interior scenes during the making of "Outside the Law." Four blocks of San Francisco Chinatown have now been erected at Universal City for this subject and it is Browning's intention if the Government officers will permit, to give Chinatown the genuine odor that it formerly had.

Jacques Jaccard is adding to his store of knowledge pertaining to South American rubber plantation country by spending considerable time with experts of the rubber industry at the Goodyear plant in Los Angeles. At the present time he is filming "The Throwback" which is laid in South American rubber country and he hopes to give genuine atmosphere and realism to this subject.

The unstinted praise given Gareth Hughes by Joseph L. Kelly a Motion Picture News writer in reviewing "The Chorus Girl's Romance" is accredited with being the direct cause of Metro placing Hughes under a long term contract, according to announcement from the Metro west coast studios. The Kelly review ended with the statement "Watch someone grab him after the 'Chorus Girl's Romance' is circulated around a bit." Completed plans for Hughes have not been worked out. Stories suitable for starring vehicles for this actor are to be purchased, but for the present he will continue as leading man. Hughes was on the speaking stage for ten years and for the past year has been in pictures, he playing opposite Clara Kimball Young, Marguerite Clarke, Florence Reed, Norma Talmadge, Viola Dana and others.

Douglas Z. Doty story editor and Lucian Hubbard scenario editor for Universal have Oked the Edna Ferber story "Fannie Herself" as suitable vehicle for Carmel Myers and the story has been purchased by Universal.

Jack Perrin who served in the aviation service during the late war has been selected to play the lead in "Out of the Sunset" which will star Eva Novak. The role is that of an aviator.

Ruth Stonehouse has just completed an engagement with Metro in which she played the part known in the cast as "The Lady" but which in reality is the part of female master crook. This is the third important role Miss Stonehouse has played in as many Metro subjects in the last few weeks.

Arthur Berthelet, former director for Essanay, has come to the coast to direct Bessie Love in her next production which will be titled "Penny" adapted from the Mary Manites novel "Penny of Top Trail Hill." Miss Manites is also authoress of "Amarilla of Clothes Line Alley." This will be Berthelet's first work in the west.

Arthur Berthelet, former direclease will be "The Money Changers" a B. B. Hampton production from the story by Upton Sinclair, in which she will appear as a vampire of the underworld type, which information will add suspense, for the many who know Miss Chapman will wonder just how such a sweet faced girl will look in a vampire role.

Frank Beal, former Fox director who for several months has held screen rights on the Jackson Gregory novel "Lady Fingers," has sold the book to Metro and it is scheduled for early release.

Edmund Lowe has returned to New York for a speaking stage engagement following the completion of all scenes for the Katherine MacDonald production "The Second Latchkey."

Lois Weber will introduce a new juvenile leading man in her third production which is now in the making, he being Lewis Calhern who recently came west from New York to play leading man parts for Oliver Morosco stock company. In addition Miss Weber has a decided all star cast for this picture which includes Edwin Stevens, Mona Lisa, Grant McKay juvenile from the Orpheum circuit and Claire Windsor who is under contract with Miss Weber.

T. Hayes Hunter, who was in charge of producing "Earthbound" for Goldwyn, has returned from New York where he attended the premier showing of this film which is destined to be one of the most successful of the year. Hunter is now making preparations for his next subject and will not begin work for a number of weeks.

Humor in Filming the Humoresque

QUESTION: What is a "Nine Days' Wonder?"

Answer—Something sufficiently out of the ordinary to create "town talk" for nine days.

The usual nine days' wonder is a fire, a scandal, a robbery or an event which commands "head lines" in current periodicals.

Even in blazé greater New York, where news "born with morn" usually dies with the night, the photoplay, directed by Frank Bornzage, known as "The Humoresque," developed into more than a "nine days' wonder"—for it came nearer being nine weeks.

While we do not hear so much about the popular production as we did some time ago, locally, yet the word has been "passed along" to other cities and towns where the contagion of this "wonder" has spread.

"Just why," declares Frank Borzage, its director, "the amusement loving public seem to attach more importance to the pathos of 'The Humoresque' than to its subtle humor, is based, perhaps, upon the world-wide respect for mother love, whether it be a reality, of the spoken drama or portrayed by the motion picture. Nevertheless, one would miss a great deal if the humor of 'The Humoresque' were permitted to escape."

In fact, had it not been for the humor, according to the script—as seen by Director Borazage, and the personal good humor said director found necessary to maintain, he believes he might have fallen short in turning out that perfectly finished piece of film artistry founded on the widely read story by Fannie Hurst. For, as Mr. Borzage explained, "there was so much at stake, so much to make a director serious, that the humorous touches interspersing the footage as well as a great deal which is not seen, supplied what the oasis in the desert tenders a tired, yet determined traveler.

"For instance: On the day we 'shot' the scene showing the mother calling from the window to the diminutive son to 'hurry in'—the elevated trains and various noises drowning our voices and with no respect for our lungs. Misunderstood instructions resulted. Had it not been for the humor, especially the good humor everyone endeavored to hold, we might have had a sad and disappointing day of it.

"The mother, Vera Gordon, had been an actress for years upon the Yiddish stage and in spoken plays, but she was unfamiliar with working before a grinding camera. Her wide-eyed interest and the playing to imagined objects, at times, was so new to her that it became exaggerated comedy to the more sophisticated cinema players. I recall rehearsing her in the scene, and turning to consult with my cameraman. We were ready. 'Now, lean out of the window and call to him,' I shouted. Looking out just as I would have had her, the look of concern registered was not played, but was a reality. 'Where is he?' she called to me in a tone indicating her bewilderment. 'I don't see him.' Intent upon finding the boy secured for me the exact expressions I was eager to obtain. But when the scene was over, the humor of it to us who were 'studio broke' caused considerable hilarity, in which Mrs. Gordon joined, when she understood. The expression she puts into her work, throughout, is of a most remarkable character, but she is at her best when not acting at all. The titles, which have been so favorably commented upon, are tame, compared with her extemporaneous remarks. These acted upon me like a tonic. And there was a grave need for it, some of those serious days.

"One of the times when I was not so sure that I was going to turn out my vizualization of the subject I had undertaken, to meet with my own severe approval, I was in a state of mind where one has little than less to say. On that day there were scenes to be taken which would require a great deal of patience and no end of hard work. Things started going wrong early in the mornings—as things do somehow when one feels a bit out of spirits. I was deep in my despair. The world, I thought, was 'ag'in me.' Suddenly I heard the hum of a familiar voice. It proved to be that of my faithful camera-man, one who understood my desires as well as I understand them, and who recognized that I was less optimistic than usual. Possibly the way he figured he could help me most was not to encourage my apparent mood—so he started to sing. Sometimes one dislikes singing, especially 'studio singing,' where we find the singing voice a rather unimportant requisite. In this particular instance, as a singer, said camera-man was, and is, an artist —at the camera. It might not have struck me so funny that he would attempt to sing, had it not been for the melody — the introductory strains of 'The Humoresque.' Somewhere he had found words to fit.

'What do y' think of Kubelik
Made tyenty thousand bucks a week
And all he did was play upon a feeble.
So I said to my son—Abie
Get yourself a feedle—maybe
Some day you may get a job like d'is.'

"That parody, as sung by Gilbert Warrenton, changed the entire day for me. It struck a vein of humor which created a twelve-hour flow; in fact, I sometimes laugh about it yet. It was the day when Leon, (Gaston Glass) was to play for his 'own people.' And they were all there—or coming. It was not the easiest assembly of extras to handle ever directed—as you may imagine. I wanted to get the best out of 'Leon' that there was in him—and besides, I had some concern for the 'feedle.'

"There were many times during the filming of 'The Humoresque' when actual happenings brought about the touches you have mentioned as unique. It was never, at any stage, a laughing matter, yet there was probably more exchange of wit during the making of it than has ever before been connected with so serious an undertaking."

Mr. Borzage, a young, bouyant chap of undisputed appeal, should look forward to a great deal, if he intends living up to the reputation his "Humoresque" made for him. He is one of those youthful, inspired men who found "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again" the only solution in earning fame as a director of motion pictures. He had made some other good ones —but never before a "nine days' wonder," which will live for as many years. One might say that Mr. Borzage's history is truly "picturesque"—in metier which will tell the tale—"He made 'The Humoresque.'"

Fair to Look Upon Is Elinor Fair

THERE is no telling where a young girl may suddenly leap to—in the atmospheric conditions closely affiliated with one's being an artist of the screen, especially when, as in the case of Elinor Fair, that one has beauty and talent behind her and holds ardently before her a determination upon a career.

This is proven by pointing to Miss Elinor Fair, for instance, for, when she journeyed from her "home town" of Richmond, Virginia, to Los Angeles, she dreamed, in her girlish way, of earning recognition by the use of her singing voice. How she became an actress of the screen is a "speedy" story.

The first personal recollection we have of her is when she appeared in "The Miracle Man," under the direction of George Loane Tucker. She was the invalid sister, who sought the use of her lower extremities through the healing powers attributed "The Miracle Man." So, we remember her first, in the wheel chair and would never recognize her, since the part was that of a young woman ten years older than the fair Elinor. Already having become an actress, however, she "made up" for the part and instead of the "type" as we recall her—she is young, appealingly young and as pretty.

Preceding her recent arrival in New York, Miss Fair had been very busy in Los Angeles—Hollywood section, playing in one picture after another until we now await with interest her most important work to date—when she will appear in the leading feminine role of "Kismet," with Otis Skinner. It wasn't enough to play opposite Lew Cody in "The Beloved Cheater," "Occasionally Yours," and in "Wait for Me," a distinction craved by thousands of Lew Cody feminine fans, she must be selected for the role of 'Marsinah" in the Robertson-Cole production of "Kismet."

It was interesting to learn how Elinor "motored" rather than "sang" her way into the movies—granting that, according to those who have heard her, she may have a melodious singing voice. But at an early age she received a car—a motor car, from her mother, as a birthday present. Proud of her possession, her first drive was one following a trail leading to a motion picture studio. She was safely behind the camera—safe from being a source of annoyance, perhaps to the camera-man. Watching the fascinating game of "movie making" suddenly the feminine manifested itself pronouncedly—the scene was tragic and first thing she knew, Elinor was "crying out loud." William Farnum, star of the picture then being made, acknowledged the compliment, and after looking at her rather intently, she heard him asking her how she would like to play a little part in the picture. She would like it. The result was that her very first work was with William Farnum in "The End of the Trail."

Scarcely had Miss Fair arrived in New York when she was frisked right out again—this time in a Selznick production, in which Eugene O'Brien is the star, and which, as yet, has no name. She had only time to make a "looking acquaintance" with the shops she had been so eager to shop in. But when she returns, in three or four weeks, she says she expects to get on "speaking terms" with them all. She has no idea of resting—her ambition is just to keep on working, one picture after another which, we assured her, would put her on "charge account acquaintance" with shops of all kinds, where apparel for the young and beautiful supply the attractive wardrobe she insists upon.

We expect to see a great deal more of talented Elinor Fair. And to see a rising screen favorite in successive pictures, is to hear about her, too.

Universal Builds Huge Set for Stroheim

A setting, exceedingly high in cost, size and permanence, is rising on a plot of ground, roughly 1000 feet square, at Universal City. It is the replica of the famed plaza of Monte Carlo, with its beautiful examples of Neopolitan architecture—the Casino, the hotel and the crystal cafe, and is for Erich Von Stroheim's Universal Jewel production "Foolish Wives."

The first estimated cost of the set was $65,000, but Universal Comptroller Hughes states that this figure has already been increased by $15,000 and bids fair to reach the sum of $100,000.

A section devoted to the technical branches of the industry containing records of the latest accomplishments in the machanical and scientific fields; projection helps, inventions and suggestions, cameras and their devices analyzed and commented upon; laboratory tchnique explained and new methods described; architcetural plans of new and remodelled theatres; with treatises on new equipment for the interior and exterior of the theatre building and innovations in furnishings and decorations.

The service is maintained for the theatre manager, the projectionist, the studio and laboratory worker. No charge whatever is made for answering queries regarding any of the above subjects.

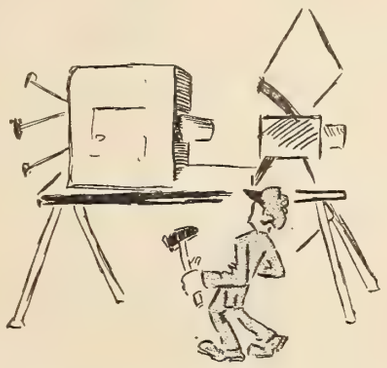
Care of Projection Machines



If, as has been so often stated, the projection room is the "heart of the theatre" then the projectors themselves correspond to that inherent part of the heart that causes it to function. And just so long as this smaller but important section of the "heart" is kept in shape, and no longer, will the "heart" succeed in coming up to expectations.

Altogether too many projectors are purchased and allowed to deteriorate through negligence. It appears as if the manager looked upon the new shiny machine as a "device that can't go wrong," and proceeds to act upon his assumption. Dirt is allowed to accumulate around and upon it. Loose parts are permitted to wabble about until they break or drop off and are lost. Any audible knock or undue friction is not traced to its lair but is allowed to continue in the hope that it will wear itself out and disappear, thus making it unnecessary to spend the time in locating the trouble.

Just how a new projector looks to the theatre manager is illustrated in the first of the cartoons. Everything about the highly developed piece of machinery is in perfect order. The manager after a casual inspection firmly believes that a child could operate it. It is so simple that it looks like a pygmy to him. With this thought in mind he entrusts it to his projectionists and forgets all about the most important part of his performances.

Six months later, perhaps he changes projectionists. Believing it to be the duty of every manager to keep in more or less close touch with the equipment under his care, he personally conducts the new man to the projection room. There he received his first shock. The smooth running, newly painted machine in which he took so much pride has disappeared. In its place there is apt to be a noisy, hard running, vibrating projector. The manager can hardly understand it.

In the space of six months his pygmy has grown to a Colossus.

If the new projectionist is an experienced hand at the game he will sense the trouble immediately, and will inform his employer that while the projector is a highly specialized piece of machinery that should last for years, yet it will deteriorate rapidly if not given common sensed attention.

Any manager who has the well being of his patronage in mind will look in on his projection room occasionally. Furthermore, if he has faith and confidence in his projectionist he will not hesitate to purchase those small replacement parts that go far toward keeping projectors in order.

Not only replacements parts but complete overhauling should be given the machines when their actions call for it. The intermittent, for instance, is a complicated mechanism which seldom requires attention and never demands tinkering. But to maintain it at its highest efficiency the movement should be returned to the factory or to a competent motion picture repair shop at least once a year and oftener if possible.

By carrying out these and similar instructions besides following those issued by the projector manufacturers the Pygmy will remain a Pygmy for several years and the manager will never have cause to wonder at the seeming decadence of his picture. The quality of his picture can never be higher than the quality of upkeep of his projectors.

Adventurers in Film Land

Busy Bill Kunzmann motored through Manhattan recently. He was on a vacation this time. Bob Kiewert is back from Europe having acted as a travelling companion to a consignment of bio carbons. Modest Otto Kerner—who makes up the last half of the Winfield-Kerner combination was in town for a whole week. Rumor is strong that A. F. Victor has succumbed to the lures of New York and is to make this his home again. Twasn't so long ago that A. C. Roebuck of Motiograph distinction was in the office. He was packing a couple of good stories as usual, one of which he had borrowed from Bill Smith. Word comes from Earl Rossman, erstwhile Technical Editor of our contemporary, to the effect that he was putting over some great stuff in the line of new art photography out in Grand Rapids.

Harry Lucas, manufacturer of things accessorial is planning on putting out a new kind of mechanics soap in a wide assortment of flavors including that of skunk cabbage. The latter will be used by operators (delete,—should be projectionists) to remove the bad odor of films.

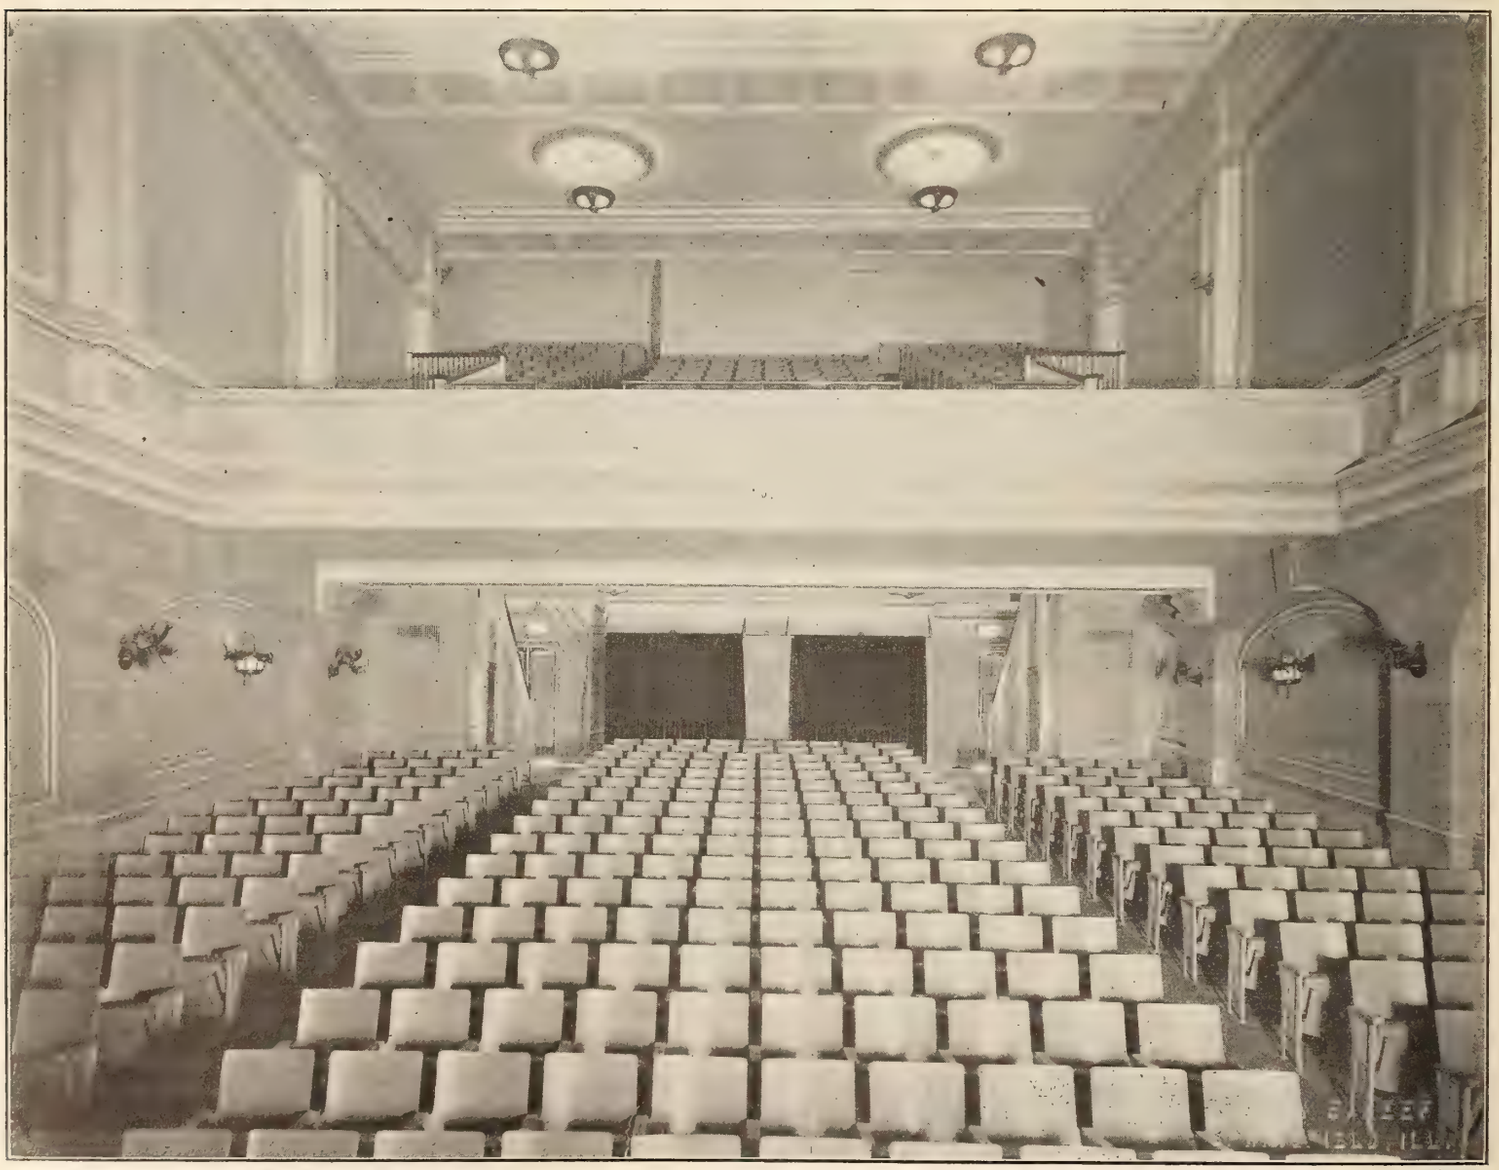
White Terra Cotta Trims Make the Rivoli Attractive

Buffalo's Newest Neighborhood House Has Best of Everything

THE Rivoli, Buffalo's newest neighborhood motion picture theatre, has opened at Broadway and Sweet avenue, in the center of the city's thickly populated and industrially active Polish district. The Rivoli is an imposing structure of red tapestry brick and white terra cotta timmings. It was built by Joseph Kozanowski, one of the prominent Polish citizens of Buffalo, and Harry T. Dixon, who has managed many theatres in Buffalo, as well as film exchanges, is the managing director.



The cost of the Rivoli was $250,000. It has a seating capacity of 1700 on the first floor and balcony, 1000 seats being on the ground floor and 700 in the balcony. The boxes extend along the sides of the house, from each end of the balcony, and are among the best placed in the city. One gets an unusually good view of the screen from every part of the house. Joseph Geigand of Buffalo was the architect and the Metz Brothers, the contractors.

The outside dimensions of the Rivoli are 140 by 75 feet, and the inside a trifle less. The color scheme of the interior is carried out in old rose and gold. The stage is attractively set with a Grecian scene, which frames the screen in an excellent manner. Few houses of its size in the state can boast of a more striking stage setting than the Rivoli. The setting represents the garden of a Grecian villa, with the famed Isles of Greece in the background. A striking canopy of brown and yellow drapes from the top of the proscenium arch to the top of the screen and gives color to the set. The stage decorations will be changed from time to time, according to Mr. Dixon.

The seats are arranged in three groups on the ground floor, with four aisles, and the same plan is carried out in the balcony. The floors are covered with battleship linoleum. Direct and indirect lighting systems are used. The fixtures are of brown polychrome type, combining indirect and direct lighting in each fixture.

The projection booth is directly above the rear of the balcony and is about 10 by 18 feet. Two Simplex, type S lamphouse, machines are used. Other equipment includes a Globe spotlight, Dissolver, motor rewinder, steam heat and house tele-

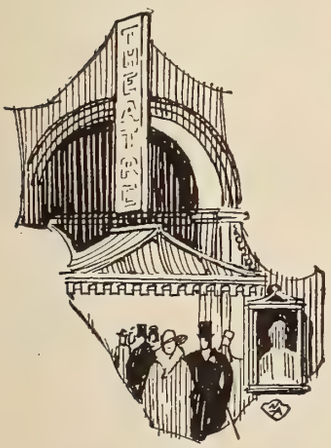
BEAUTY and durability are the outstanding characteristics of Duratex, the Better Furniture Upholstery.

Here is a material that fits in admirably with the needs of Moving Picture Theatres.



It comes in a wide variety of grains and colors—fits in with any decoration scheme or color motif.

It stands up wonderfully under the hardest usage—it does not crack or check or scuff and it never spews. That is to say no oil ever comes to the surface to soil dainty clothing as often happens.

This last feature is due to the exclusive Duratex process—and for this one reason alone Duratex is particularly suitable for seat upholstering—to say nothing of its finer, richer appearance and its longer wear.

If you are building a new theatre or planning to re-upholster your theatre seats get the Duratex facts first. Duratex will save you money.

phones. Joseph Gramsa, who for nine years was operator at the Variety theatre, is in charge of the projection at the Rivoli. The port holes in the booth are 10 by 12, enabling the operator to see the screen with both eyes. The distance of throw at this house is about 120 feet and the angle of projection about 30 degrees. The picture when thrown on the screen is 12 by 16. The screen was made by the Service Company of Rochester.

The lobby of the Rivoli catches the eye the moment one enters the house. The decorations are made up of leaded glass, brown tile walls and massive mahogany frames. The ticket box is constructed of mahogany and leaded glass, and the National Cash Register ticket machine is used.

Among the special equipment of the Rivoli is a Hertner 75-75 ampere transverter, intercommunicating phones, aisle and exit lights.

The heating and cooling arrangements at the Rivoli are unusually good, an American Radiator plant being used for heating, and 48-inch typhoon fans made by the Electric Ventilating Company of Chicago draw pure air into the house and the bad air out. In the winter these fans are used to flood the house with heat from the special radiators placed close to the fans. Ducts are placed in the walls for this purpose, two especially large openings being excellently placed in the walls at each side of the stage.

The front of the Rivoli presents an imposing appearance, the white terra cotta trimmings setting off the house in striking manner. A large Flexflume sign is placed directly in the center of the front, with "Rivoli Theatre" in large white letters. The sign itself has a background of various colors. A large hanging marquee is placed directly over the entrance, with a border of leaded glass, which at night stands out prominently when lighted from behind. Eight arc lights of unique design augment the lighting of the front. For the exploitation of attractions the Rivoli front has four large frames and two small ones and four large doors open into the lobby.

The usual comfort facilities are provided in the Rivoli, ladies' and gentlemen's rest rooms opening off the mezzanine floor, where the manager's office is also located. The mezzanine floor is furnished with wicker furniture.

An eight-piece orchestra accompanies the picture entertainment. Walter Mehowski is conductor.

New Theatres in Southeast

THE Lake Wales Amusement Company is planning the erection of a new theatre, with a seating capacity of six hundred, to cost $20,000, and to be located at Lake Wales, Fla. The theatre building will also include a first-class, highly modern restaurant, to be owned and operated by the same people.

The Savannah Savings and Real Estate Co., Savannah, Ga., has under construction a new theatre for colored people. The equipment is to be of the best—orders having been placed with the Southern Theatre Equipment Co., of Atlanta, for two Powers 6-B machines, and a gold fibre Minusa screen.

E. W. Gould, vice-president and general manager of the Empire Investment Co., Macon, Ga., is remodelling the Macon theatre, and will call it the Criterion. He will run a program exclusively of motion pictures, cutting out the "Tabs" and vaudeville which has been the usual feature of the Macon.

W. L. Harris, of Forest City, N. C., is to build several theatres, construction on the one in Forrest City having already begun.

Large Organ for Empress

MR. TOM H. BOLAND, the popular manager of the Empress theatre at Oklahoma City, has recently added several very attractive improvements for the edification and comfort of the many patrons of the Empress. A new pipe organ has been installed, to the tune of $15,000. The instrument is really a wonderful piece of mechanism. It is equal to a large band, a great sympathy orchestra or a pipe organ. The great, handsome new organ does everything in response to the expert operator's touch that either an orchestra or a band with its multitude of instruments can do and with complete harmony and effect.

The organ occupies a space that extends almost every inch of the way across the wide auditorium in the pit reserved for an orchestra. It is a beautiful product of superior craftsmanship, massive yet graceful, and of beautiful design.

Its music is simply superb, as all who have had the pleasure of hearing it will testify. But the organ isn't all that the Empress is getting. Elegant upholstered seats, the very latest pattern, have also been installed, which are both handsome and up to date in every particular.

In addition, the Empress will blaze its identity to all passersby at night. A fourteen-foot sign, designed to represent an empress's room, and flaming with the illumination of 500 incandescent lights, has been raised above the front and, being double-faced, flashes an invitation and message of amusement in all directions. In the center it has a twinkling star effect, and its border appears to be ceaseless in a series of waves of changeable colors. The lights flash on and off, being a changeable pattern of striking glorious illumination. With these extremely expensive improvements the Empress will, indeed, boast its supremacy as a photoplay theatre in this section of the country, and its patrons will feel more proud than ever of their loyalty to it.

Saxe Commences Chain Construction

The first step in the formation of a chain of motion picture theatres throughout Wisconsin by the Saxe Brothers Amusement Enterprises Milwaukee, was taken when negotiations for theatre sites in Janesville and Green Bay, Wisconsin, were started by Thomas Saxe, head of the amusement firm.

The chain of theatres, plans for which were announced exclusively in the Motion Picture News some weeks ago will upon completion practically cover the entire state of Wisconsin and will be booked from the general offices in Milwaukee. Negotiations are now under way between M. G. Jeffris, Janesville, and the Saxe Brothers. The theatre will be built in the rear of the Grand Hotel corner of High and Dodge streets, with entrance extending thruogh to Milwaukee street, the principal thoroughfare of Janesville. According to Thomas Saxe the theatre will cost $250,000 and will seat twenty-two hundred people. Plans are now in the hands of Martin Tullgren, Milwaukee architect.

Negotiations in Green Bay have not materialized sufficiently to permit the name of the location of the theatre, but both leases, it is understood, will run for ninety-nine years.

Saxe Brothers at present own seven theatres in Milwaukee and plan to acquire several outskirt houses in that city.

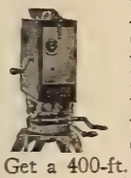
Newman News Notes

The Strand Theatre at Wellsburg, W. Va. has just installed in their lobby five more Newman brass poster-photo frames, and have further dignified their lobby with brass door-pulls and kick-plates.

Two more Newman brass unit frames have been added in the Majestic Theatre, Middletown, Ohio.

The Bijou Theatrical Enterprises Co. of Battle Creek, Mich., make it a point to send a representative to Cincinnati whenever they need brass fixtures. They recently purchased four special frames for their Franklin Theatre, located in Saginaw.

Twelve brass frames and a special ticket-office rail have been installed by the United Amusement Co. of Hugo, Okla.



Portable brass standards with velour-covered ropes have been ordered by the Circle Playhouse, Annapolis, Md. Similar fixtures have been installed by the Newman folks in houses owned by the A. H. Blank Enterprises of Des Moines, Iowa.

All theatres owned and controlled by the Wells Amusement Co. of Norfolk, Va. have been outfitted with brass fixtures. Six new-style choppers have just been ordered from Newman by this chain of show houses.

Ruttenberg to Open Globe Soon

Construction work on the new Globe theatre, a motion picture house of 1,200 seating capacity, is fast nearing completion. A. Ruttenberg, the manager, formerly of the Grand Circus theatre in Detroit, is on the ground preparing for the opening which is expected to take place some time late in August. The house will have both orchestra and organ music. It will maintain a policy of first-run pictures. The theatre is being built for The Globe Theatre of Flint Co., an enterprise founded by Flint capitalists.

Armature Reaction and Commutation

When current is allowed to flow through the armature windings of a motor a field is set up by the armature windings which is at right angles to that of the field magnets. A force is then exerted between the two magnetic fields which tends to cause the armature to rotate. Figure 86 shows the diagramatic relation of the two fields. The direction of the magnetic lines of the field is from left to right, and the lines set up by the armature conductors pass thru the armature in a downward direction. The action of these fields causes the armature to revolve in a counter-clockwise direction.

Due to the effect of the field set up by the current in the armature conductors the magnetic lines of the main field are distorted. This effect is shown by Figs. 87, 88, and 89. Fig. 87 is the magnetic field set up by the field coils when no current is flowing in the armature conductors. Fig. 88 shows the field set up when there is a flow of current in the armature windings, and Fig. 89 is the resulting effect produced by the action of the two fields. This distortion of the magnetic field has a tendency to strengthen the field under one set of pole tips and weaken it under the others, so that the natural plane of the magnetic field is shifted back from the normal neutral plane. Thus in order that commutation will take place when the least amount of current is flowing in the conductors it is necessary that the brushes be shifted backward against the direction of rotation and placed more nearly in the neutral plane. Fig. 89 shows the approximate position of the brushes for a motor operating in a counter-clockwise direction.

As the armature of a motor revolves it is necessary that the direction of the current in the conductors be changed as they pass from one pole face to the next. As the armature moves the brush passes from segment 1 to segment 2 of Figure 90. As segment 1 passes from one side of the brush to the other the direction of the current in the connected coils is reversed and for a short interval of time while the brush is in contact with two segments the coil connected to these segments is short circuited so that there is no current flow.

As the segment leaves the brush this coil is connected in series with the other coils on that side of the armature and the current flow is opposite from that when this segment made contact with the brush. In order that commutation may take place with the least possible amount of sparking it is necessary that the short circuiting occur when the coil is passing through a field which will tend to reverse the direction of the current, and also when the minimum amount of current is flowing. In order that the above conditions may be fulfilled it is necessary that commutation take place at the neutral plane. In this position the counter e.m.f. in the coil undergoing commutation is practically zero as the direction of cutting of the lines of force is changing direction and the current flow has been brought to rest and is about to flow in the opposite direction.

In order to obtain the proper position of the brushes they should be shifted backward against the direction of rotation until the least amount of sparking occurs, this position will also be the minimum speed obtained with a certain field strength, for at this point the back e.m.f. induced in all the conductors will be connected in series in the various windings of the armature.

As illustrated by Fig. 86 the polarities set up by the flow of current are such that the armature is caused to rotate. However unless proper means are provided to reverse the polarity of the armature as it reaches a magnetic equilibrium, there would be no force to continue the rotation. The construction of the machine is therefore made such that the polarity of the armature core, caused by the direction of the armature current in the coils, is reversed at the proper instant, by means of the commutator, to give continuous rotation.

Fig. 90 shows a complete armature diagram with the direction of the current in the various coils indicated. Fig. 91, A, B, and C show the position of brush contact and the change in the direction of the current flow as the segments pass the brush. In the case of Fig. 91 A. current flows from both sides of the armature winding out thru the negative brush, and in doing so passes thru the segment 1. The direction of the curent in the coil between the segments 1 and 2 is indicated by the arrow.

A short interval of time later when both segments 1 and 2 are in contact with the brush, the current is conducted to the brush in proportion to the area of each segment covered by the brush. This allows for a falling of the current flow in the coil between the segments covered by the brush.

When the commutator has traveled so that the brush is in contact with segment 2 only, all the current to the brush from both sides of the armature winding is conducted through this segment. The direction of current flow in the coil between 1 and 2 has now been reversed as is shown by the arrow.

This process takes place between the various coils as the armature revolves so that a polarity is maintained in the armature such that a constant drag is produced by the field pole pieces.

The NICHOLAS POWER CO.,
90 Gold St., New York City, N. Y.

Gentlemen:-

Having noticed that during the past month your corporation is interested in the criticisms and comments of approval on your product, from the leaders and "Big Men" of the industry, I am tendering you the opinion of one (of a very great majority) of "small town" men who are fortunate enough to have the POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH in their projection rooms.

We are now using the POWER'S machine (both the 6A and 6B) in our four theatres. The two 6A's have been running without a break for five years, and outside of a few minor repairs, have not cost us a cent. They are still delivering the goods. The picture we are getting through our 6B's absolutely cannot be beaten. It is the best we have ever seen or could wish for.

Another theatre is in the course of planning and our Chief Projectionist will install no other but POWER'S MACHINES.

Yours sincerely,

A Plea for More Active Co-operation Between Exchange, Theatre and Projectionist

What One Observing and Broad Minded Projectionist Has to Say on This Important Matter

Do not let a part wear out before having it replaced. Do not let a machine run out of adjustment any longer than absolutely necessary. The machine is the property of the manager and is just as delicate in some parts as his watch that he carries. He would not ask you to repair his watch and you would have nerve enough to tell him that you couldn't if he did ask you. Why,—because you know that you do not have the knowledge nor the tools necessary for that work and you do not hesitate to tell him so. Why then attempt to repair a machine that cost four, five or six times as much as his watch when you know or should know that you are not equipped for the work. PROJECTION is one profession and REPAIR WORK is an entirely different one. I as a rule have no use for the man that will say CAN'T, but here is one case where I take off my hat to the projectionist that puts his pride to one side and admits that he CAN'T repair a machine.

There are, I am sorry to say, some theatre managers who insist on the projectionist doing repair work and the projectionist generally has a couple of screw drivers and pliers that he calls tools and you can imagine the job. You fellows who are doing your own repair work—examine the intermittent sprocket on your machine and notice the teeth on it. In most cases you will find that the teeth on one side will show more wear or undercut than on the other. This is caused by the intermittent shaft not being set true with the cam shaft and that causes the teeth on one side of the sprocket to catch the film as it comes through a trifle quicker than on the other set of teeth and this causes the undercut of the teeth. This also causes a strain on the sprocket holes of the film as the film passes over the intermittent sprocket. If you MUST do repair work, do it RIGHT and do not set intermittent sprockets by guess but use calipers on the shaft and be sure that shaft is set true with cam shaft. Remember in setting this shaft that the two bushings are eccentric and for that reason extreme care should be used. On one make of machine you will find but one bushing, but the other makes use two bushings.

Keep your sprocket teeth clean. Use a tooth brush on them and do not allow them to gather dirt. In rewinding film, wind it slow and do not hold the reel on the dummy end and take loose film on crank end—this scratches film and gives you the beautiful rain effect. If your rewind is motor driven, gear rewind down so that it will take at least four minutes (more time is better) to rewind a thousand feet of film on it. In removing a reel either from the magazine or rewind, turn the cotter catch on the shaft before trying to remove reel. When you pull a reel off the shaft without doing this you shove on the sides of the reel and bend the sides. You do not like to use crooked reels, so do not bend them yourself.

Remember, Mr. Projectionist, "TWO WRONGS DO NOT MAKE A RIGHT," so do your bit and live in hopes that the other fellow will wake up with a start some day and things as far as you are concerned will be different and life will be worth living after all. Do not punch mark the film just because the exchange does it. Do not leave misframes in the film because the other fellow does. Do not send the film to the exchange or the next projectionist in bad condition with the reel bands in the bottom of the case just because you got them in that shape. These things will not help the CAUSE at all—only make things worse. Go after the party that you get the service from—he is the fellow to get and if your manager is worthy of the name manager, he will do the kicking himself, instead of letting you do it for him. As I said before, CO-OPERATION will do WONDERS.

The Theatre Manager

You are in the business to make money—no question about that. You are selling your patrons pictures and you advertise that you are showing good pictures. Did some of you ever stop and think that you are getting your money under false pretenses? If you were in any other kind of business you would be arrested. Your business, at least ninety per cent of it lies in the projection room and the projectionist on the job is the man behind the gun. More than one manager has gone on the rocks just because he did not recognize that fact. Your lobby display, your music, your wonderful organ, your decorations on the walls and your cooling fans all help, but all of them together would not make you a dime without the projectionist. Many a manager has spent his money equipping a house in first class style and then hired a boy in the "booth" to put him out of business.

I am not trying to tell you, Mr. Manager, how to run your business, but am merely leading you up to the point in the question at issue and show you where you come in with the care of film. It is to be taken for granted that you have absolute confidence in your projectionist and his judgment. If you cannot place your confidence in him and his judgment as far as the projection is concerned then fire him at once and place a man on the job that you can depend on. When your projectionist makes a request for repairs on the machine he knows or should know better than anyone else just what he needs and he would not request these repairs unless he needed them. Do not be PENNY WISE AND POUND FOOLISH and ask him to wait a day or two or give the excuse that you are busy and will attend to the matter later—DO IT NOW. You are the one that will suffer if the machine damages film or refuses to work properly. You would not ask your piano player to play on a piano out of tune or the janitor to keep the place clean with an old broom and do not expect your projectionist to get results on the screen without first class equipment and service. When he gives you bad film or calls your attention to the condition of the film, take up the matter with the exchange that has supplied you with the film. Do it at once. The most important thing on your mind, as far as business is concerned, is your service and projection room. When these two are working right you are not getting your money under false pretenses, but when either one of these is off then the theatre is going to lose out. You, Mr. Manager, are wholly responsible for both. Do your bit and help the cause.

Mr. Exchange Manager, Mr. Projectionist and Mr. Theatre Manager, let us ALL CO-OPERATE. Yours truly,

E. C. Scobey,
Projectionist, Oriental Theatre, 1105 South Meridian Street, Indianapolis, Ind.

Agreed!

In the issue of August 7th there was carried an article submitted by two New Orleans projectionists in which a device "for the catching of dripping oil" was described. This article has caused considerable discussion among other members of the profession as is evidenced by the letters received. Without exception the writers of the letters condemn the authors of the article for believing that such a device should ever be necessary. Our position in the matter is the same as that of D. B. Shepard, projection engineer for the Lucas Theatre Supply Co. of Atlanta. Mr. Shepard says in his letter:

> With much regret I notice your article on page 1224 of the News, issue of August seventh, and I wish to comment on same.
> I have before me the sketches of the "crow-foot" and the lower magaine of a Simplex projector, with the oil-drip attachment devised by a projectionist from New Orleans.
> I wish to say that if the projectionist or in fact any operator, who takes pride in his achievements, in the operating room, will take the necessary care of his apparatus, and keep the right amount of lubrication thereon, there will be absolutely no requirements for such a useless device as is shown in the aforesaid number of the News.
> I know, positively, that you will agree with me as an exponent of cleanliness of the projection room and of perfect screen results, as obtained by the man "in the booth."—D. B. SHEPARD.

Notice! N. A. M. L. Slides

A large number of requests have been received recently for the names of makers of N. A. M. L. slides. Motion Picture News is not in a position to furnish this important aid in the work the members of the organization are carrying on but we have arranged with individuals to supply them. These slides are now being made in two places and it is our suggestion that the member write to the maker nearest him. Mr. Chas. W. Dorr, 41 Sargent St., Winthrop, Mass., and Mr. C. B. Hutchison, 510 N. 2nd St., Richmond, Virginia are the gentlemen manufacturing the slides on order, at a cost, we believe of 50¢ each. When ordering be sure to mention your membership number so that it can be included in the finished slide.

We have not seen a sample of Mr. Door's work for several months but he no doubt is continuing his fine work. A number of samples of Mr. Hutchison's slides have been received and we have no hesitancy in saying that no professional slide-maker could improve on the workmanship.

14 Years as a Projectionist

CHARLES ZERR, now with the Saenger Enterprises of New Orleans, is willing to place his record against that of any other projectionist. For 14 years he was with the Fitchburg Enterprises of the South. For twelve of these years he worked day and night without a day off. Then three years ago the Saenger Enterprises took over the Fitchburg interests and he was placed in charge of projection at the Globe theatre in New Orleans. Up to the present year he continued his record of steady work without a day off but this summer his employer recognized his service by allowing him a three weeks' vacation with pay which he spent at the Saenger home at Elmwood Manor Bay, St. Louis, Miss. Is there anyone who can beat this record for faithful work for a long period of years.

L. F. Smith, of Duncan, Okla., writes: Where can I find a device to trim sprocket holes that are broken? I have seen such a device and the handles of it are shaped like ticket punches. It trims the outside of the sprocket holes and leaves round corners.

A Real Automatic Arc Control

The Peerless Automatic Arc Control is made for use on all projectors having direct current at the arc. The device is so sensitive that less then one sixty-fourth of an inch increase in gap will start the motor and bring the carbon back to the proper position. Operation is so slow and delicate that the carbon movement is not noticeable to the eye.

Practically frees the operator from giving any attention to the arc, and enables him to attend to other duties. Durably made of best materials. Can be adjusted to maintain any desired arc gap.

DAYLIGHT SCREEN

Kiewert Returns from Europe

AFTER quite a lengthy stay in Europe which included a month's study and research in the laboratory of the Siemens Carbon factory at Berlin, Robert Kiewert has returned to his office in New York.

In discussing his observations of motion pictures in the theatres of Germany Mr. Kiewert said that as a rule the films are exceedingly poor both as to the story told and the quality of projection on the screen. The flicker at times was unbearable. In investigating the cause of this latter fault a number of different reasons were advanced.

A projectionist blamed it upon the German type of projector which as a matter of fact is far behind the American projector in mechanical perfection. A film printer claimed it was due to the low quality of raw stock with which he had to work. And some blame was placed upon the camera which was to be expected inasmuch as the cameras now in use are old ones that have seen years of service without opportunity for repair.

In general the German theatre boasts of but one projector, this necessitating the usual intermission while reels were changed. Although the intermission is not relished by the American who is used to the continuous program yet it comes as somewhat of a relief after 15 minutes of flicker.

Mr. Kiewert believes that the German producers have become so accustomed to the presence of this flicker that its effect on the audience is not being appreciated. They will have this fact brought home to them, he believes when they attempt to dispose of their product in the world's market.

Due to the coal shortage but two performances are permitted daily, these being between 6 and 10 P. M. On Sundays and Holidays three shows are allowed from 4 to 11 P. M.

American films are popular with the public but do not appear with the desired frequency because of the German inability to pay the price asked for them.

Can You Answer Them?

With this issue there is commenced a series of questions and answers having to do with all the various phases of projection. This material may be used as a supplement to the Practical Electricity Lessons now running and to other articles appearing in the projection department. The questions may also be used as the basis of examinations conducted by Local Unions.

If there are questions you wish answered send them to this department and they will appear in the order received.

1. What is electricity?

Electricity is a word commonly used to denote the cause by which electrical phenomena are produced, and for practical purposes may be described as a form of energy known by the effect which it produces.

2. Give a practical definition of the following: (a) volt, (b) ohm, (c) ampere.

(a) A volt is the electromotive force necessary to cause a current of one ampere to flow thru the resistance of one ohm.

(b) An ohm is the resistance of a uniform column of pure mercury 106.3 cm. long, having the cross section of one square millimeter.

(c) An ampere is the current which when passed thru a solution of nitrate of silver will deposit silver at the rate of .001118 grams per second.

3. How is voltage found? Amperage, watts, horsepower, ohms?

Voltage is found by connecting a voltmeter across the line and measuring the drop in potential.

Amperage is determined by placing an ammeter in series with the line.

For a D. C. circuit the watts consumed is the product of drop across the line by the current flowing. W=ExI.

Horsepower is found by dividing the watts consumed by 746. H.P.=W/746

The ohms resistance of the circuit may be found by dividing the line drop by the current flowing. Ohm's law R=E/I

4. What different ohms are there and what one is used in the U. S.?

The value of the ohm as a unit of resistance has undergone several modifications, the international ohm being the one most generally used at present. The international ohm is the resistance offered by a column of mercury 1 sq. millimeter in cross section by 106.3 centimeters high at zero degress centigrade.

5. What are the two great classes of electricity?

Electric circuits may be divided into two classes, those pertaining to direct current and those pertaining to alternating current.

6. Distinguish between A.C. and D.C. circuits.

An alternating current is one in which the polarity changes a given number of times per second, as is shown by the sine wave voltage curve.

A direct current is one in which the polarity remains the same and the current is unindirectional.

7. Give the theory of why electricity performs work.

Electricity is a means of storing or transmitting energy. When this energy is used up as in setting up inductive lines of magnetic force in a motor the armature is caused to rotate and work is performed.

The Story of Louis R. Fuster and His Accomplishments

The Los Angeles Photo-Chemist Known as "The Green Eyed Mystery"

A SELF adjusting emulsion has been perfected by Louis R. Fuster at his private laboratories in Los Angeles. The emulsion is the result of many experiments made by this photo-chemist who has spent the past five years in research work here to perfect a natural color process and other needs and improvements of present day photographic methods.

Interest has been centered in the activities of Fuster for the past five years for he has been most secretive concerning his work. Many people of the film colony who learned to know him called him "The Green Eyed Mystery" because of the colored glasses he wore when about the lawn of his laboratories. Fuster now explains that he wore the glasses so the light would not effect his sight when he returned to the darkness of his laboratories. Other laboratory men learned of the advantage of colored glasses when out of their laboratories during working hours and now practically all laboratory men wear goggles.

The first definite information given concerning his experiment was the outcome of tests made recently concerning which the Los Angeles Examiner contained the following:

"A new X-ray plate, claimed to be capable of detecting bones and solid substances in the human body many times more clearly than the plates now in use, was given a trial recently by a number of local X-ray specialists and hailed not only as a success, but as a great step forward for medical science. The plate was perfected by Louis R. Fuster, well-known photo-chemist.

"A man's hand wearing a ring with two stones was X-rayed on both Mr. Fuster's plate and the ordinary standard plate last night. Both stones in the ring were plainly visible in Mr. Fuster's plate, while the standard plate was capable of detecting but one stone. On each plate three expocures were made and all three on both plates produced the same result.

"X-ray specialists hail this as a decided leap toward the perfection of X-ray work. Last night's demonstrations were the culmination of a long series of tests made by Dr. H. A. Jones and Dr. A. C. Houghton of this new super-sensitive emulsion for radiography.

"Often a life depends upon the exactness of a picture taken with the Roentgen rays," said Dr. Houghton, who is a well-known X-ray specialist. "Heretofore all advancements have been made in the direction of the machinery and tubes and no step has been taken for the perfecting of the plates.

"This emulsion of Mr. Fuster's is self-adjusting and is synchronized with the raising of the E. M. F., capable also of increasing or decreasing the frequency of the undulations or 'discharge waves.'

"It is self-adjusting to a high, low or any degree of vacuum, and due to the virtue of this emulsion, the influence of the secondary rays is completely reduced.

"Specialists pointed out that X-ray plates now used register about 40 per cent of gall stones in a person. The new plate is capable of registering nearly twice as many."

Since the above tests were made with the Fuster emulsion a fairly good sized piece of film has been coated and the emulsion with slight alteration has been found to be adaptable to motion picture films which will serve to excellent advantage as the claim is made by Fuster that it will prevent the waste of time and expense occasioned by the necessity of retaking scenes.

Fuster will be remembered as the inventor of the first American two-color optical color process perfected and shown in 1912 known as the "Chrono-Chrome." He has also perfected numerous formulas for developing color plates without fog, sensitizers for color plates permitting instantaneous exposure in combination with his filters, formulas for dye-tones of any color or shade, color screen plate and film of unusual transparency and a number of mechan-

Dear Mr. O'Brien:

About two years ago you installed a motor-generator set for our photo-play lantern. Our lantern is a Powers 6A of the commercial type, and the set furnished was of the commercial type, Since then the only care given the set has been the customary oiling, commutator cleaning, etc. As far as repair or trouble is concerned, we should not know we had the outfit. ical devices useful in laboratories for both testing and finishing. His laboratory is without a doubt the most pretentious privately owned plant of its kind, representing as it does, a layout of approximately $50,000.

When asked concerning the color process for motion pictures on which he has been working for several years, Mr. Fuster stated his activities in this respect had been along lines of perfecting an emulsion with far greater speed than that used on any raw stock to be supplied today. "My early training as a photo-chemist thoroughly convinced me before I took up my research work for a color process for motion picture film that the success of such a process depended entirely upon the speed of the emulsion," Mr. Fuster said. "Others who have been working for the perfection of such a process have not followed the same lines that I have, although there are some who have reached the same conclusions. In conversation with C. B. de Mille more than three years ago I advised him that a faster emulsion was the requirement necessary for a perfect color process that would make interiors in any condition of light. Such a process will not be used by the film industry until an emulsion exposed with a lense opening not less than F-S for the photographing of interior artificially lighted sets through a camera fitted with color filters, gives a perfect exposure," I told Mr. de Mille.

"My experiments have been along these lines and the results that I have obtained will be made known shortly when final specimen on which I am now working is completed."

Bass Buys Cameras

President Charles Bass of the Bass Camera Company, is back at his Chicago headquarters after a visit to Washington, D. C. where he purchased a large amount of surplus equipment of the Army Signal Corp, including a number of standard moving picture cameras and tripods built especially for the exacting and hard work of the corps.

Mr. Bass states that the cameras are splendid machines and all bear the official O.K. of the army, given them after exhaustive tests.

A few of the cameras were used in active service overseas, but a number of them have never been out of their original wrappings.

New Camera with Many Excellent Improvements Makes Appearance on West Coast

George Mitchell Designs Latest Instrument After the J. E. Leonard Camera Patents

THE National Camera Company which for more than two years has been working on the perfection of a camera along lines of invention and patent of J. E. Leonard, have now sold their first instrument which bears the name of "National."

The new camera has a stationary head which contains floating a iris, the center of which may be taken to within an eighth of an inch of any edge of the frame; four-way mats; revolving disc containing eighteen standard mats to be made up to suit the wants of the user—This disc may be revolved from the center by means of a thumb screw; and a revolving lens holder of standard design containing spaces for four different sets of lenses. The front may also be raised or lowered thus doing away with the need of changing position of the tripod after once set up.

When the mechanism is in position for exposure of the film the focusing tube is directly behind the finder lens. To focus, the mechanism is moved to the right which brings the focusing tube immediately back of the lens. The mechanism has some new features and is similar to the Pathe camera and the Hausman printer. During exposure, the film is held between the aperture plate and a register leaf. After the exposure, claws enter the the film and the tension is released simultaneously. After the downward stroke of the claws which advances the film, the tension is again applied, the claws removed and raised to position and the mechanism is again ready to make exposure.

The mechanism is ball-bearing throughout and is made in units of standardized design so that they may be replaced by a new unit in case of accident of any kind.

Although the camera is made on the J. E. Leonard patents, practically all of the designing has been done by George A. Mitchell who is in charge of the National factory which devotes considerable of its time to mechanical work on cameras.

The Story in the Music

By Charles D. Isaacson

(Author, "Face to Face With Great Musicians")

AS indicated in the last issue of the NEWS, I am in this division attempting to put in words the meanings and moods, stories and interpretations of well known musical compositions.

It is so much easier to win audiences to the beauty of music when this method of visualizing the idea is discovered. I realize that many conservative musicians object to my method.

One night as we were conducting one of those delightful concerts where audience and artists find each other on a common plane, I was severely interrupted. The ideas we were preaching and experimenting with, had struck another snag. That is to say, a very serious, conservative musician, found fault.

In these concerts of which I speak, it has been the custom to look upon all music as an expression of an idea, a mood, or the description of a thing or the narration of a story. Thus, one composition may be the crystallization of a great gladness; another may be the development of the composer's feelings on a gray, stormy day; another may quite definitely show the progress of a mountain stream down its course from the little freshet to the rushing river below; another may with quick perception, interestingly and dramatically tell the story of a great drama.

Then, with such an ideal of music, the audience follows the splendid development of the number, comparing the narrator's idea with its own; or what is more invigorating, a composition is played without any hint from me, and members of the audience tell me just what the music meant to them. Quick to catch the spirit of the ideal, the listeners set their minds to find the clue in the notes, and so are chained fast to the performance by a common action with the interpreter.

In the midst of the aftermath of ideas, which came from the audience with poetic beauty, a gentleman arose, cleared his throat and very gruffly complained.

"This is all wrong, sir, all wrong. This is not the way to listen to music. You seem to forget that music does not need to rest on anything else for its interest. You hear it! It is beautiful or it is not, as an harmonic thing. Music is purely a pleasurable thing for the ear. It is cosmic, not specific. This, sir, is an insult to the art. It is, it is breaking down of old traditions and concepts."

He cleared his throat again, and sat down.

There was a movement in the audience of unrest, and one could see that what the gentleman had said, hit many of the crowd, especially the men.

"What the gentleman means to say," I began in explanation, "is that the best music is so called pure music. He is a professional musician—of the school, I might say. I can tell that by listening to him, and by looking at him. He looks like a musician. He will grant me that some music is also called programmatic music—"

The gentleman nodded severely.

"Programmatic music is a definite attempt on the part of the composer to describe some definite thing or idea. I will admit"—this in answer to severe frowns from the conservative, "that the programmatic music has been condemned on the same grounds as that on which my experiment is accused tonight. Music is a pure, unrelated thing, and not meant to be used as the vehicle of other ideas.

"Well, it is just here that I differ with the gentleman and all his conservative brethren. I find that the way to interest people in music is to show them the way of finding in it, a method of travel—they must think or feel or move with the music—or else the music can never be the great democratic equalizer we want it to be. I find that all the masters had something in mind when they wrote anything—they didn't sit down and say "I think I'll write a waltz in the key of G."

They probably were very much excited or very much depressed and actuated by their mood of the moment, they were inspired to compose—and it happened to take the form of a waltz in the key of G.

But with all their objections I am winning over in my free Globe concerts in New York City, over a million people a year to attend fine music, where they refused to do it before.

My interpretations are sometimes what might be called authentic, but more often they are my own. If they suggest a method whereby the public can devise "their own interpretations," I will be delighted; or if the musical director will make "his own pictures" when he learns the system, I will be glad.

Now, continuing on my series of pictures, let me give you now the story of the most popular Chopin Nocturne.

CHOPIN'S NOCTURNE,
Opus 9, No. 2, (Key E flat)

Night time. All alone. I, Chopin, maker of music. The sad moon rises pallid over the city and the darkening shadows of buildings grow black as ravines. My spirit soars off and beyond. Far away, far, to the dream woman.

Softly the gay laughter soars to my ears, but I hear not. I will not listen. I am trying to catch the voice of the dream throat—far off in the beyond. Oh, nocturne, whisper my words to her. Carry the longing of my heart. Say to her—I long for you phantom—say it to her, cry it to her, cry it aloud, over and over again. Oh heart, how you ache, how you tear at me. Oh, yes, I know—I believe. She will long for me.

Notes of my muse, make her long for me. Make her droop her head as the fair hair falls into the nightlight. Make her eyes grow dim and misty and pensive, until she stretches out her arms into the space, reaching for me — her dream armour.

And as she faints, I will catch her in my arms. None of you shall see as I embrace her. Through the vast space I long to touch you—through the night spaces and in the pale ocean of moonlight. Dance at her pearly ears, little notes, and curtesy at the threshold of her lips—kiss them ever so softly.

Dream woman—phantom of my music's muse!

Here in a very different mood is a typical Oriental phantasy. This is told of Amani's Orientale, but with adaptations it might be used with any oriental phantasy.

ORIENTALE — Amani.

The priests in an Oriental city are gathered to pass judgment on an offender. It is a sultry day, and the justice-priests are in a mood to brook no interference.

Like the murmuring of a hundred voices whispering the music begins.

Then it bursts into a mutter and then a roar. It is a gray idea and a fierce passion which drones through the picture.

Dancers are summoned. The snake dancer is called and she wriggles through a moaning movement while the priests sit in judgment.

At last all jump to their feet and swing around the circle, muttering, moaning, singing and uttering their imprecations on the offender who stands tied and helpless at the stake.

Most musicians are familiar with Beethoven's "Turkish March" from the "Ruins of Athens." Does this seem familiar?:

TURKISH MARCH
(Beethoven-Rubenstein)

It is in the old Grecian city of Athens, after the Turks had conquered. Off in the distance the triumphant army approaches, gayly, comfortably. The lazy music of the band sounds pitifully to the defeated Athenians as the army approaches. As the soldiers near us the sound becomes louder — louder — still louder. The sultan sits on his throne, drawn by a hundred horses; the Turkish cabinet pass in their open carriages, leisurely smoking their pipes. The band plays loud and brazenly, until we can just see them before our very eyes. Then they pass, gradually, and off they go again into the distance. Softer, softer, softer sounds the mus ic. Then only a fleck of dust do we see as they disappear toward the horizon.

For Nachez's Gypsy Dance, which could be used with variations or adaptations I offer the following story:

The King was very disconsolate. He had received bad news of the neighboring tribe. These days all Kings are inconsolable. But the Gypsy King was very, very grouchy and blue.

His advisers and staff tried to cheer him up. But as you will notice it was all of no avail. They told him stories, but he made no comment. They brought him drink—for he was before temperance days. It mattered nothing. They tried to play games. But no, no, no, he stamped his foot and said, "Let me alone."

But one adviser, more wily than the rest, sent for the famous dancer. They brought her on a swift steed, and sat her quietly before the king. Hear the whispering sound of the accompaniment instrument and the soft steps of the bare feet of the dancer.

The King looked up—he looked again. Then began a swift dance, with the artist whirling like the wind before him, round and round, swirling the drapes and the cloths. The King smiled. Eagerly he watched the nimble feet of the girl, caught the rhythm of the music and forgot his trouble. The King was won over. The Gypsy Dancer had done it.

The other day I went to one of the biggest motion picture theatres in New York where I heard an Opera Medley—it was beautiful to me—but I knew that very few of the audience knew what it was all about. Then I said to myself, why shouldn't this theatre use the same method that I have employed in introducing grand opera. Why not tell or print a story. For instance, suppose I show you how I would describe the popular opera of Carmen?

Next week I will give this for you.

Questions, Answers and Discussions

I wish to register with your Musical Exchange. Have had experience as Manager of M. P. Theatres and as musician. Years ago, led the orchestra in the Old Bijou and later in the Sorg Opera House, this city, and at present, in the same capacity at the Gordon Theatre. We are to put on vaudeville and pictures September 6th. Prefer pictures only, but am led to believe by the manager's talk that the show is the 5 acts to be put on, so I desire a change.

Have been in correspondence with Mr. Paul Robinson, Roanoke Rapids, North Carolina—but he has not yet decided what he will do. I can do all and more than he wants done. Had three-almost four years with the Atlanta, Ga. Symphony under Carl Busch, theatre work in Cincinnati, Ohio, here, Atlanta, Ga. K. C. Mo. Miami, Fla. and last fall and winter played a Photo-player in the American Theatre, Canarsie L. I. and enjoyed the change. Prefer to manage a theatre and lay out the music program, (I have a large library) or will play part of time, or take charge of the music same as at present position.

Have had experience in all lines. Public School Music, Church Choir and Organ, Band Directing, and playing, Theatres, Dance, Symphony and instituted the Music Department in the State Normal School at Athens, Ga., and U. of G. same city.

Play piano, organ, violin and viola, and will be glad to get in touch with anyone to whom you may refer my name. I do not think I know it all by any means, but I can and do play pictures, use good music and have ideas as to the work. I am no artist, just a business player who knows the game.—Chas. S. Stanage, 731 East 4th Street, Middletown, Ohio.

Could you place me in a good house playing an organ. I am a steady worker and put my whole heart in playing to pictures.—Mr. S. Johnson, Palace Theatre, Ardmore, Pa.

Theatre Notes of Philadelphia

The Savoy Theatre, 515 Market St.

Has a seating capacity of 700, 500 down stairs and 200 in balcony; book in open market; use a piano; have two Power's machines, and show pictures on a plaster wall.

The Dockstader Theatre, 828 Market St.

This is a 1200-seat house. The Pathe Weekly opens each show and is the only film run, as the Dockstader is a vaudeville theatre. An orchestra furnishes the music. An Edison machine is used for projection, and the pictures are shown on a white screen.

The Grand Opera House, 818 Market St.

This theatre has a seating capacity of 1500 and is under the able management of F. L. Bradfield, who took over the management of the house for the Harris Amusement Co. of Harrisburg, Pa., after the death of his father. Mr. Bradfield reports a capacity business and states that the theatre will be remodeled. A pipe organ furnishes the music. Pictures are projected on an ordinary screen, Powers machines used for that purpose. Moving pictures are used exclusively in the Grand.

Nearly all of the Market Street theatres have beautiful fronts and a canopy or marquet covers the sidewalks.

The Polonial Theatre, 405 Maryland Ave.

This theatre, located in the residential district has a seating capacity of 500. The Select, Fox, Robertson-Cole, Universal and Vitagraph film are run. Two Powers machines are used, and the pictures are projected on an ordinary screen. A player-piano furnishes the music.

The Brandywine Picture Theatre Corp., of Wilmington, purchased lots at the corner of 20th and Market Streets, on which to erect a moving picture theatre. Plans were drawn and they were ready to commence work when it was discovered that the actual cost of the building would be twice the amount of the estimate furnished by the architect, so the corporation decided to hold the building of the theatre in abeyance until some future date.

The Park Theatre, at 4th and Union Sts.

Being erected by the West End Amusement Co., is progressing very nicely. Will probably be ready to open the last of Sept. Some of stockholders expect to go to New York within the next few days to look after an organ for the theatre.

The Victor Theatre, 1715 W. 4th St.

Work was started on this theatre the day the armistice was signed. Mr. Anthony Corleto, the owner named it Victor on that account. This theatre will open about Oct. 1st. One Powers and one Simplex machine will be used in projecting the pictures on a Gold Fibre Screen.

The National Theatre, 810 French St.

This theatre is owned and controlled by colored people. Has a very pretty front, canopy extending over the sidewalk, and the owners are doing a very satisfactory business.

"TRUMPET ISLAND"

A TOM TERRISS PRODUCTION

From the Story by GOUVERNEUR MORRIS

Intensely dramatic and abounding in spectacular scenes. The climax is reached in a honeymoon airplane flight into the center of a violent thunder storm, where the machine is wrecked. The fall of the shattered airplane, and its crash into a tree on Trumpet island, provide thrilling spectacles. There is a love story of rare charm, and the brave struggle of a man against poverty and then against the temptation which come with sudden wealth. Wild orgies in a metropolitan hotel are shown, followed by scenes on rugged and lonely Trumpet Island, to which Richard Bedell fled from vice. The shattered airplane brings Eve De Merincourt to the island.

DOINGS IN LOS ANGELES BRIEFLY TOLD

Production on the West Coast

BY J. C. JESSEN, 412 WEST SIXTH STREET

VITAGRAPH

ALBERT E. SMITH president of Vitagraph Company, arrived in Los Angeles from New York September 6th, and plans to remain at the West Coast studios for several months supervising scenarios and productions. President Smith's arrival was simultaneous with the filing of a suit for $407,338.22, against Larry Semon, in which the Vitagraph Company charges that approximately $42,000 was needlessly spent in Semon's most recent production, "The Suitor," and that the Vitagraph Company is damaged to the extent of $365,000 as Semon has completed but seven of the twelve pictures he was to complete within one year according to provisions of the Vitagraph Semon contract.

It was also announced by President Smith that upon completion of the serial, "The Veiled Mystery," within the next month, Antonio Moreno is to be starred in feature productions. This is the first definite statement from the Vitagraph Company regarding the report which has been rumored for several months.

Mr. Smith has been going over the plans for the filming of the Vitagraph special, "Black Beauty" which will star Jean Page. Her most recent work was opposite Joe Ryan in the Vitagraph serial, "Hidden Dangers."

Director William Bertram and the Joe Ryan serial company, producing the "Purple Riders" are working at Campo California, and from there will journey to Lower California for a number of scenes.

A number of books and original screen plays have been read by Earle Williams and Director Chester Bennett as a suitable vehicle for Williams, but no selection has been made. His most recent work was in "The Romance Promoters."

The Jesse Robbins comedy company is working along the Ventura highway, sixty miles north of Los Angeles, where they have occasioned considerable delay because of injury which befell Aubrey when he leaped from a barn door. He is now almost fully recovered.

GOLDWYN

NO apparent effect has been felt at the West Coast studios of the Goldwyn Company resulting from the resignation of Samuel Goldwyn as president and the appointment of Mesmore Kendall as general manager until a successor is elected. Production continues with all companies working on subjects previously announced in this department.

From a new Sunshine Fox comedy, "Kiss Me Quick," in which Clyde Cook is featured

Wallace Worsley, who has been directing Madge Kennedy at the eastern Goldwyn studios, has returned to the coast, and it is expected will shortly be assigned to the direction of a coming subject.

Circus day was celebrated by all members of the Goldwyn staff this week even though the circus was staged exclusively for members of the Edgar series of comedies. Scenes from the parade and circus were taken for the eighth release of this series now being made under the title of "Fans."

As a result of the debate held before one of the largest meetings in the history of the Advertising Club of Los Angeles Tuesday of this week on the subject: "Resolved, that cowboys have done more for the benefit of civilization than preachers" in which Will Rogers took the affirmative and Rev. J. Whitcomb Brougher, pastor of the Temple Baptist Church, the negative. Rogers has been invited to occupy the pulpit of the Baptist Church, and preach to Brougher's flock on the subject of Humor and Religion.

F. P.-LASKY

THE second of the Sir James M. Barrie plays purchased by the F. P.-Lasky corporation was put in production this week under the direction of William C. de Mille. This is the Maud Adams starring vehicle, "What Every Woman Wants" which played for two seasons at the Empire Theatre, New York City, and had long runs in many other cities. Mr. de Mille has Lois Wilson and Conrad Nagel as his principals and the screen script was prepared by Olga Printzlau.

George Melford will begin the filming of the "Faith Healer" from the Dwight Moody play within the next few days. Scenario for this play has been prepared by Mrs. Moody and Milton Sills. Sills will play leading male role in the production.

Tom Foreman is still at work in the direction of "Easy Street" with Tom Meighan and Gladys George and Joseph Henaberry is making the final scenes for the Arbuckle play "Brewster's Millions" following which he will take up the making of "A Dollar a Year Man" an original screen play by Walter Wood.

Wallace Reid is working in final scenes for "Always Audacious" and will shortly begin work in "Free Air" which is from the Sinclair Lewis serial story adapted for the screen by Byron Morgan.

Paul Powell, who has been directing for F. P. Lasky for the past six months is to be sent to their London studio and will sail from New York on September 30th.

FOX

THE preparatory work for the super feature "The Queen of Sheba" to be produced by J. Gordon Edwards by the William Fox studio is going forward and practically all of the big sets are nearing completion. Carl Harbough arrived from New York this week to assist in the direction of this spectacle subject.

The studio manager Sol Wurtzel and aides are now engaged in casting the picture and the two players taking the leading parts have been selected. They are Betty Blythe who is to play the title role and Fritz Leiber who appeared as Louis XI in "If I Were King" will appear as King Solomon.

Both the Shirley Mason and Eileen Percy companies are between pictures and directors E. J. LeSaint and Howard M. Mitchell are working with scenario department in the selection of stories.

William Russell and company being directed by Scotty Dunlap are at Big Bear filming exteriors for "The Iron Rider" and Buck Jones and company directed by Jack Ford have gone to Pleasanton, California for exteriors for 'Bimbo" which was prepared for the screen by Paul Scardon.

An addition to the Sunshine Comedy force is announced to be Al St. John who is to direct as well as act. His engagement dates from September 8th and up to this time no story or cast has been selected.

Jack Cooper who was under contract with the Wiliam Fox organization for featured parts in Sunshine comedies has been released from his contract.

A number of the former Fox Sunshine comedy directors who left recently are now identified with other companies. Roy Del Ruth is directing for Henry Lehrman and Vin Moore and James Davis are both directing comedy companies for Universal. Abe Linkof former assistant director at Fox is now assisting Harry Revere in the direction of the "Tarzan of the Apes" serial.

BRUNTON

THE Bessie Barriscale company has begun the filming of another subject for Robertson-Cole which is an adaptation from the Marion Lerner story "The Living Child." Continuity for the screen play has been written by H. H. Van Loan and Paul Scardon who directed Miss Barriscale's most recent production has been retained to direct the making of this subject. This will be Miss Barriscale's first release on the Robertson-Cole program. The supporting cast includes Walter McGrail, Albert Cody, Winter Hall, Ethel Grey Terry, Margurete McWade, Eugenie Besser and Irene Yager.

Roy S. Clements whose most recent work was the direction of "The Tiger's Coat" for the Dial Film Company at Brunton has been placed under contract by Louis B. Mayer and will in all probability direct the making of Anita Stewart productions.

B. B. Hampton's production "The Spender" adapted from the Harry Leon Wilson novel has been entirely completed and negative was shipped to Eastern laboratories this week. The production was directed by Jack Conway from scenario by W. H. Clifford.

Sidney A. Franklyn has completed all scenes for Parrott & Company co-starring Sylvia Breamer and Richard Dix which is his first independent production and his time is now being spent in the cutting room at the Brunton studio.

The Los Angeles branch of Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company has just installed an additional three unit motor generator set with a 300 kwt. capacity. Other electrical improvements being made provide for the laying of 800 feet of cable to all of the seven stages and the erection of an annex to the fire proof generator building. The estimated costs of these improvements are $15,000.

Stuart Edward White the author who has just returned from a hunting trip in Alaska spent the week with B. B. Hampton in going over matters pertaining to his recent novel "The Killer" now in production under direction of Howard Hickman.

UNIVERSAL

RELEASE titles were announced this week for the three Universal productions now receiving final attention at the hands of the editors. The subject made under the title of "Black Friday" and starring Frank Mayo will be known as "The Marriage Pit"; "Wanted at Headquarters" is the name given the story filmed under the title of "Kate Plus Ten" which is the initial starring vehicle for Eva Novak, and "Pink Tights" is the name selected for the circus picture originally titled "Out of the Sky" which features Gladys Walton and Jack Perrin.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran have selected a complete cast for their fourth comedy special "Fixed By George" from the Edgar Franklyn story. The principal players will be Hazel Howell, Beatrice La Plante, Daisy Robinson, Maud Wayne, Fred Gamble, Earl Martin and Jack Biron. Complete working script has been prepared by C. B. Boadley and the company began filming this week.

Fred Datig, casting director at Universal, is now picking players for the second Eva Novak subject which will be a film version of the George Ricks Pacific island tale "Out of the Sunset" which is to be directed by Stuart Paton.

Edward Burns has been selected as leading man for Carmel Myers in the production of "The Orchid" and Irving Cummings has arrived from New York to play the leading male role of the story, a man of the frenzied financier type. George B. Williams has also been cast for an important role.

Upon the completion of "West is West" the Eugene Manlove Rhoades story, Harry Carey will begin the filming of an original screen play written by himself. This is to be a Western but no title has been selected.

Norman Dawn will direct Edith Roberts in an original play titled "White Youth" by Clara Baranger and Forest Halsey. Miss Roberts is now in New York on vacation but is expected to return to Universal City within two or three weeks.

The Universal companies working on location during the past two or three weeks have completed their out of door shots and the several troupes have returned to Universal City. Tod Browning, Priscilla Dean and company filming "Outside the Law" are back from San Francisco; director Jacques Jaccard, Frank Mayo and players appearing in the South American rubber plantation subject "The Throwback" are back from filming beach scenes at Balboa Beach, and Val Paul with the Harry Carey aggregation working on "West is West" have returned from the mining districts of Arizona. Other companies to return to the studio are those directed by Rolin Sturgeon making "The Gilded Dream" which has been working at Santa Barbara and the Stroheim organization filming "Foolish Wives" which made many exterior scenes in the vicinity of Monterey, California.

The Universal has three comedy companies at work under the direction of Fred Fishback, Tom Buckingham and Chuck Reisner. Hoot Gibson is working on a short western titled "Teacher's Pet" and the other companies now busy are the three units filming serials. The episode subjects now being made are "The King of the Circus" starring Eddie Polo with Pansy Porter as leading woman and J. P. McGowan as director; "Queen of Diamonds" starring Eileen Sedgwick under the direction of Edward Cull and the Elmo Lincoln serial "The Flaming Disc" which is being directed by Robert F. Hill. The latter company is now on the seventeenth episode and plan to finish the subject within the next two weeks.

David Brandman who has served as secretary to manager of production Isadore Bernstein for the past five months has been promoted to the position of assistant manager of production.

A technical organization has been at Monterey, California, for the past eight weeks creating a gigantic set measuring 1,600 feet in length and representing the terraces on the bay of Monaco with the Hotel de Paris situated on higher ground and overlooking the terraces and bay.

A set of freakish construction has been devised for the use of the Tod Browning company making "Outside the Law" with Priscilla Dean. It represents a six room cottage and the construction is such that any wall may be moved to enable better photograph effects. Some walls are on wheels while others are fitted with block and tackle apparatus. The inside walls are built with 2x4 studding with lath and plaster and the outside walls are of brick. It was necessary to make this building very strong as more than an ordinary fight is to be staged therein and when the building is knocked to pieces as will be recorded by the celluloid it is necessary that the walls have a realistic appearance.

METRO

CHANGE in production plans at Metro studios caused an off shore pirate F. Scott Fitzgerald story to be the next starring vehicle for Viola Dana instead of "Rings and Things" by John A. Morosco, previously announced as the play for Miss Dana. Dallis Fitzgerald has been selected to direct this production, story of which is by the same author as "The Chorus Girl's Romance." Most of the scenes are laid on an ocean going yacht in the Atlantic where the heroine is kidnapped by a strange band of pirates and wooed by the handsome leader until she is rescued by Government revenue cutter. Cast is being selected while the story is being prepared for the screen and production will be started shortly.

The Doraldina company resumed work this week after a delay of several weeks because of the absence of Sidney Bracey who began playing in the picture when it was first started but was called East. Edward Earle is the leading man and Florence Turner takes an important role. This story was originally titled "The Passion Fruit" the name of the Carey Wilson story from which it was adapted and the release title is now announced to be "But Yet a Woman." Stuart Holmes is another member of the cast selected this week for the Doraldina production and immediately upon completion of his work in the "Four Horsemen" he will play the heavy role in "But Yet a Woman."

Gareth Hughes as the result of his exceptionaly good work in "The Chorus Girl's Romance" has been placed under a long term contract by Metro and will appear in leading man parts, for the present, and later is to be starred. Bayard Veillers is now in search of suitable stories for this young actor. Hughes has been playing for the screen but a year following several years on the speaking stage.

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

Edward Connelly has been added to the cast of the "Four Horsemen" and is to play one of the important character roles.

Announcement is made from the Buster Keaton studios of the beginning of work on the fourth comedy for Metro. The third, titled "Paradise Alley" was recently completed and is still being edited by director Edward Cline. In the forthcoming production Keaton will have a new leading woman in the person of Virginia Fox who is one of the original members of the Sennett bathing beauties, toured with one troupe in connection with the showing of "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" and has since played in Sennett's "Married Life."

1st NATIONAL

THE last scenes for two First National subjects were made Monday, Sept. 6th. Marshall Neilan on this day took the last shots for his fourth release "Dinty" in which Westley Barry is starred in the title role. The story is an original one by Marion Fairfax and the subject is set for early release in November.

Producer Neilan is now preparing his fifth subject which will be titled "Pards" and is based on the Ben Aimes Williams story "Not a Drum Was Heard" which appeared in a weekly magazine recently. This is a decided western type of story and is the first western to be made by Neilan for more than two years. Aside from a few interiors which will be made at Hollywood studios all of the scenes will be filmed in Glacier Park Montana, the company going there shortly.

The other First National film to be finished so far as the taking of scenes is concerned is "Man, Woman, Marriage" the first Al Kaufman subject produced by Alan Holubar and starring Dorothy Phillips. Holubar on Labor Day took the important scenes for the amazonian allegorical scenes in which the battle for physical supremacy of the sexes was fought on the stony banks of Chatsworth Park reservoir forty miles north of Los Angeles. The completion of these scenes marked the breaking of camp where for more than ten days eight hundred players, technical workmen and others have lived in camp life that two brief episodes totaling less than 600 feet of finished film in all could be taken for this subject.

"Peaceful Valley" the second Charles Ray release adapted from the Sol Smith Russell stage success was given its initial studio preview this week and the negative was accepted by First National's representative, Sol Lesser. The screen version for this play was prepared by Isabelle Johnston and Bernard McConville.

First National is to have another Lehrman comedy in the very near future as this week the final scenes were taken for the third of the series which is to be known as "Wet and Warmer". It is spoken of as a laugh-making mixture of prohibition and pyrotechnics and has a cast that includes Al Ray, Billie Richie and Charles Conklin.

King Vidor is now casting for the "Sky Pilot" the Ralph Conner story recently purchased and plans to make his first scenes next week. David Butler by special engagement with D. N. Schwab Productions, Inc., will play one of the important parts in the third Vidor First National release.

INCE

COMPLETE cast for the Thomas H. Ince super special "Magic Life," has been selected and the subject will go into production immediately under the direction of John Griffith Wray. Florence Vidor and House Peters will be the co-stars of this all-star cast composed of Joseph Kilgore, Emit King, Lillian Langdon, Margurite Livingston, Edith Yarke and Charles Smiley. The company is leaving shortly to spend a week securing location scenes near San Francisco.

The Douglas MacLean coming play, "One a Minute" is now being cast and it is expected production work will be started the first of the week under the direction of Jack Nelson.

The third Ince company is now at work on filming "The Bronze Bell" from the Louis Joseph Vance story with Courtney Foote and Doris May in the leading roles under the direction of James Horne.

Casts are being selected for three new Thomas H. Ince plays. One is the "Bronze Bell" to be known as a Louis Joseph Vance special which will have Doris May as leading woman in an all star cast headed by Courtney Foote. This Vance story has been adapted for the screen by Louis Stevens and will be directed by James W. Horne, recently engaged by Ince. This subject will be a Paramount release.

House Peters and Florence Vidor are to head the cast for "Magic Life" from the novel by May Edington which is to be made under the direction of John G. Wray with Harry Schenck as assistant director. Joseph Kilgore will appear in the role of heavy and the screen version was written by Miss Bradley King.

The Fred Jackson farce "One a Minute" will be the next vehicle for Douglas MacLean who recently completed work in "When Johnny Comes Marching Home."

Gladys Walton, who is to be a new Universal star. Her first production will be "The Flip Flapper"

Madge Bellany who has been appearing in "Dear Brutis" in New York has been engaged by Ince through John H. Blackwood now in New York and will play opposite MacLean. This farce is to be directed by Jack Nelson. Joseph Franklyn Poland has written the screen version.

Thomas H. Ince has purchased the Helen Topping Miller novel "Deuce High" and it will probably serve as a vehicle for an all star cast.

Violet Clarke is a new member of the T. H. I. scenario department following considerable experience in writing continuities for Whitman Bennett and B. A. Rolfe.

Material change has been made in the comedy department of the Fox studio as a result of the retirement of Hampton del Ruth who for two years has been supervising director. Del Ruth announces that he is to open a studio for the production of feature comedies and shorter comedy subjects for an organization backed by Wall Street money.

The Sunshine Comedy department in the future is to be under the management of Sol M. Wurtzel who is general manager at the studio. The announcement is made that the number of producing units is to be increased to make possible the production of thirty-four comedies each year. J. G. Blystone is to direct a series of eight comedies featuring Clyde Cook the former Hippodrome clown and the other directors engaged by general manager Wurtzel are Harry H. Williams, Melville W. Brown and Del Mar Lord.

Lucy Cotton Chosen

Lucy Cotton, who recently completed her work in the Metro production of "The Misleading Lady," has been selected for the leading feminine role in "The Devil," the much talked of picture-play for which Edmund Goulding was brought back from England just to write the scenario. This should be of flattering consequence to Miss Cotton—for it is a distinction much to be envied by feminine screen players.

Big "Explosion" Thrill in "Bride 13"

One of the most realistic of motion picture "explosions" was staged by Director Richard Stanton to provide a thrill for serial fans in "Bride 13," the Fox serial. This was accomplished on a desolate island off the coast of Gloucester, Mass. A plastic and wooden "castle," apparently built of granite, was sent into oblivion by the dynamite magic of Henry McAvoy, of the Fox forces, with many of the natives as eager spectators.

"Polite Comedy Has Arrived"

So Says Al Christie in Exclusive Interview

"THERE has been a judge and jury working on the 'polite comedy' moving picture for the last few years, and now it may definitely be stated that our judgment of four years ago has been vindicated," is the claim made by Al. E. Christie, of Christie Film Company. "I mean by this that four years ago the polite comedy—that which approaches the comedy-drama in short length pictures—was a thing unheard of and the judge, that is to say, the picture exhibitor, was harder to convince that the idea was right than was the audience jury.

"This is illustrated in our own case. We started out on a theory or a principle several years ago and my brother and I were firmly convinced that audiences would appreciate comedies which were free from slapstick, clean and with a modicum of cleverness. They were in reality little comedy-dramas in one reel. The exhibitor was hard to "sell" on the idea, but once the pictures were past him, audiences did appreciate them. That judgment has been backed up by the fact that now, after several years of struggle to get this same type of picture before audiences, they or rather their two-reel counterparts, are now getting more money in leading theatres throughout the country than any other type of two-reel fun film.

"In fact it used to be hard for producers to get any money at all for any sort of film comedies, chiefly for the reason that comedies were mainly made by producers who were also making feature length productions and the exchange managers generally had to "throw in" a comedy after they had closed a fat contract with an exhibitor for a feature film. This was the greatest handicap of the independent producer of film comedies who had no feature films on which to rely to pay expenses.

"But now all that has been changed. Comedies are made and sold on their own merits."

Holubar's Difficulties

THE big task necessary for the making of a spectacle is beyond the conception of anyone who is not intimately identified with production of such a spectacle and should the public be permitted to see the making of scenes requiring certain heroic action enacted by hundreds of people, the people will not wonder why directors sometimes lose their leads and step into the ranks designated as temperamental.

"It is not the thousand and one details that prey upon the mental energy of a director," director Alan Holubar said in speaking of his experience in directing the amazonian scenes for his coming production. "What annoys a man responsible for the result of a big expenditure is that people employed at $10.00 per day do not attempt to follow instructions or worse still, try to get out of doing anything after once they secure their time order with the costume order in the morning."

"A big movie camp is a genuine melting pot," Mr. Holubar continued, "and it is impossible to congregate hundreds of people for this class of work unless such a melting pot is brought together. In the 800 people working in the amazonian period scenes we had everything from a college professor to a red, red bolshevik, all creeds, all nationalities and people with all degrees of ambition. Such a horde cannot be handled with the same discipline as an army for numerous reasons, and while we introduced army tactics in our organization and attempts at discipline, we found our work each time greatly handicapped by the scores who would leave their posts and wander away into some secluded spot to avoid the action assigned them. At meal time they were always there—sometimes twice and when pay checks were issued they had no scruples about falling in line the second time. It is unfortunate that this condition exists but it cannot be avoided—it is one of the features in film production where mobs are required that add hundreds of dollars in expense every hour. It required nine days to make the scenes which in the final release will consist of not more than 600 feet and the cost for the production of this nears the 100,000 dollar mark."

The scenes referred to by Mr. Holubar are those appearing allegorically in his coming production "Man, Woman, Marriage" starring Dorothy Phillips which will be the first Al Kaufman release through the First National exhibitors. The allegorical scenes were made forty miles north of Los Angeles where a camp was prepared by the producing company and the 800 men, women and horses constituting the troupe, lived during the ten days required for the making of the scenes.

CLEVELAND

The Cleveland office of the Educational Film Company recently received a telegram from E. W. Hammons, president of the Educational Film Company, relative to the controversy between the company and Babe Ruth, baseball star, which read: "No injunction granted. Therefore go ahead and release picture." (Signed) E. W. Hammons.

On the strength of this telegram from Mr. Hammons, local manager, Harry Skirboll, announced that beginning Sunday, Sept. 8 "Babe" Ruth would be exhibited in the picture, "How He Knocks His Home Runs," simultaneously at the Stillman, Mall and Alhambra theatres, Cleveland; Rivoli, Toledo; Walnut, Cincinnati; Strand, Dayton; Schade's theatre, Sandusky; New Regent, Lima; Ceramic, East Liverpool; and the Strand, Canton.

Another "Babe" Ruth picture, "Over the Fence," is distributed locally by the Standard Film Service Company, of Cleveland. The Standard Film reports they are booked up solid on "Over the Fence" for many weeks to come. It opened its first-run engagement last Sunday at the Orpheum theatre. Subsequent runs include the Bank, Empress and Goodyear Auditorium, all of Akron.

Cleveland, the fifth city of the land, has awakened to the importance of the motion-picture industry. This public acknowledgment of the industry's importance became manifested recently when the local exchanges received communications from The Advertising Cleveland Community, located in the Statler Hotel. The Advertising Cleveland Community is an organization composed of the city's representative business men. The organization promotes public activities and in this capacity held a meeting at the Statler Hotel last Wednesday for the purpose of boosting motion pictures. The letter states that it is the object of the organization to "make Cleveland nationally recognized as a film centre, second only to California."

Harry Charnas, president of the Standard Film Service, is in New York, buying more pictures to be released in this territory through his organization. Standard Film has recently purchased "The Son of Tarzan" for Ohio and Pennsylvania.

Buster Keaton and his first comedy, "One Week," was very much in evidence here the week of Sept. 8. It played at the Stillman, Mall and Alhambra simultaneously for an entire week. Davis movie critic of The Press, says of Buster Keaton, "I think him funnier than Larry Semon and as funny as Harold Lloyd."

Paramount week in Cleveland was celebrated at approximately twenty-five motion picture houses, five among them being first-run houses. The Stillman played "Lady Rose's Daughter." The Euclid played "The Right to Love." The Mall and Alhambra offered "Hairpins" for the week, and the Liberty played "The Cost," featuring Violet Heming. Practically every first-run neighborhood house ran Paramount pictures, making the directory of attractions look like a Famous-Players Lasky release schedule.

Frank Gross sold his Crown theatre, East 105th street, the other day to Mr. Jules Schwartz. Schwartz also bought the Manhattan theatre, Superior avenue, near East 105th street.

Victor Kremer stopped for a day in Cleveland last week, going over some details of interest with Fred Schram and Mr. Papineau of the Ohio Film Classics, who are handling the distribution of the Kremer pictures in Ohio.

E. J. Smith, who used to steer the Universal boat in northern Ohio and who now is waking up Philadelphia with his cyclonic sales methods, was here last Sunday, partly on business and partly for "auld lang syne." All the Universal force turned out to welcome Smith back and to speed him on his way East again.

INDIANAPOLIS

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's new Indiana exchange at 40 South Capitol avenue was opened last week with C. C. Wallace in charge. Oscar A. Kantner, theatrical advertising man for the Indianapolis News for a number of years, is a newcomer to Mr. Wallace's sales staff.

The Grand, Indiana and Lyric theatres at Marion, Ind., have been added to the Frank Rembusch circuit. Mr. Rembusch took over the houses from the Mutual Theatre Company of Marion.

Wrecking operations on the south wing of the Hotel English, preparatory to construction of Famous Players-Lasky's new $2,000,000 house, has been postponed until some time in 1922 because of the high price and scarcity of building materials, it was announced last week.

The musician's strike, which compelled photoplay houses to use vaudeville teams, pipe organs and phonographs for a month, has been settled, the union men getting a salary increase of twenty-five per cent. This, it is understood, is what the managers offered before the walkout.

Joseph N. Webber, national president of the American Federation of Musicians, and John J. Murdock, head of Keith's circuit, came from New York to attend the meeting at which the settlement was arranged, and both were instrumental in bringing it about.

NEW ORLEANS

New Orleans is soon to have an office of Educational Films Corporation. Henry Ginsberg, domestic sales manager, was here last week completing arrangements for the branch.

Decorators employed by the Saenger Amusement Company are painting the new stage and lobby of the Crown theatre in Biloxi, Miss. A $10,000 pipe organ is to be installed this fall.

The Saenger Company has acquired control of the Hauber theatre in Pine Bluff, Ark. Officials say the theatre will be renovated, remodeled and improved up to the Saenger standard. It is also rumored that vaudeville is contemplated with pictures.

Three motion-picture reels, showing the port facilities of New Orleans, were screened for the New Orleans Ad Club recently. The pictures were made by the Harcol Film Company of New Orleans.

PROVIDENCE

Manager William J. Mahoney of the Rialto theatre has just closed negotiations with the Associated Producers, Inc., for the firm's pictures. The first one was shown Sept. 13, "Homespun Folks." Manager Toohey of the Emery theatre has taken on the Universal first-run subjects.

The Providence Opera House opened its winter season on Labor Day. Instead of the usual big-time dramas, the house put on moving pictures, the principal attraction being "While New York Sleeps." The prices were placed at 50c. to $1 for evenings and 25c. and 50c. for matinees.

All moving-picture theatres in this city on Labor Day announced an increase in the admission fees. In most cases the increase amounted to the war-tax, plus one cent.

DETROIT

Several Detroit theatres announced increases in admission prices, to become effective last week. Phil Gleichman, operator of the Broadway Strand and Ferry Field theatres, has raised prices in the former house to 75 cents, lower floor; 50 cents, first balcony; 30 cents second balcony; and $1.10 for box seats, for evening and holiday performances. Matinee prices will be 40 cents, lower floor; 25 cents for the balconies; and 60 cents for box seats. At the Ferry Field, prices will be: boxes, 40 cents; main floor, 30 cents; balcony, 20 cents, with no change in the week day matinee prices. The figures for both Broadway Strand and Ferry Field theatres include war tax.

Charles H. Miles, owner of the Regent, Majestic, Orpheum, and Miles theatres, presenting both vaudeville and picture programs, has announced the following scale of prices: boxes, 75 cents; lower floor, 60 cents; first balcony, 40 cents; second balcony, 20 cents. No change is made in the week-day matinee prices. The ten per cent war-tax is included in the new prices.

Higher rail and Pullman rates, increased cost of films, salary increases to employes, and higher prices for everything used in the operation of the theatre are assigned as reasons for the increases.

"A Trip to Mars," portraying an imaginative voyage to the planet in the year 1930, with the action centering about an astronomer's home in Mars; and "The Heart of a Woman," featuring Pat O'Malley and Mignon Anderson, have been secured by Joe Horwitz for release in this territory in September.

Eight Detroit theatres will open "The Lost City," a new serial released by the Standard Film Serve Company, at the same time, according to Jess Fishman, manager of the company. The theatres are: Ferry Field, Rialto, Stratford, Lincoln Square, Gladwin Park, Kramer, Oakman Boulevard and the New Home.

BUFFALO

The Associated First National franchise in Buffalo goes to the Strand theatre, according to an announcement by Hugh Rennie, local exchange manager. The Strand in Binghamton; the Strand and Eckel in Syracuse; and the Amusu in Waverly, N. Y., have also purchased franchises. Mr. Rennie has just returned from a ten-day tour of the territory. Murray Hawkins in Syracuse and G. E. Dickmon in the Buffalo territory are both sending in large numbers of contracts and City Sales Manager E. O. Hayes is closing up a large number of local houses.

Walter Roberts, for several years assistant manager at the Strand theatre, has been appointed to a similar position at the new Mark-Strand theatre in Albany. He will leave for the Capital city about September 14.

C. John Predari, local W. W. Hodkinson branch manager, has signed "Love Madness" for a week's presentation at the Palace theatre. This is the first seven-day run ever put on at this house. Through Mr. Predari's efforts the local office has jumped from twenty-seventh to seventh place in the amount of business done among the Hodkinson exchanges. "Love Madness" has also been booked by the Lumberg, Niagara Falls; Wintergarden, Jamestown; and the Lyceum, Elmira.

Buffalo Shriners will show the films made by Elmer C. Winegar, manager of the Central Park and Premier theatres, of the Portland Pilgrimage, the outing of the Patrol down the Niagara River and the big Shrine picnic at Hamburg, N. Y., in Elmwood Music hall, Tuesday evening, September 14. Following this presentation, Mr. Winegar plans to release the films for presentation by other Shrines throughout the country.

The Palace theatre has signed up for the Realart franchise, and Manager Harry E. Lotz of the local exchange reports that Harold B. Franklin will present Constance Binney in "39 East" at Shea's Hippodrome in October.

W. Griffith Mitchell

W. GRIFFITH MITCHELL, manager of the Majestic Gardens of Kalamazoo, Mich., has been exhibiting since 1914. Back in 1901 he joined the Royal Northwest Mounted Police and can relate more than one thrilling experience that befell him during his period of service which terminated in 1906. Maybe it was the desire for more "thrills" or maybe a keen business sense, but at any rate along in 1914 Mr. Mitchell fell victim to that modernly discovered microbe, popularly designated "the lure of the movies," and following his entry into the new field he managed the Strand and Regent at Toronto, Canada; the Strand at White Plains, N. Y.; and later the Orpheum at Jackson, Mich.

Mr. Griffith runs First National, Paramount-Artcraft and big specials. Of the News he says, "A valuable trade-paper which every exhibitor should have," and Mr. Mitchell knows whereof he speaks.

The Glen theatre in Williamsville has been purchased by J. Cardina of Buffalo and will be reopened following remodeling on September 19. Mr. Cardina also operates the Kensington theatre in this city. Al Becker of the Becker Theatre Supply Company is installing two new Simplex machines.

Otto Siegel is now on the road for Robertson-Cole. Otto was formerly assistant manager, in which position he has been succeeded by Ray Powers, who was formerly assistant manager at Universal. P. H. Smith, R.-C. manager, recently held a private screening in the Strand theatre of "The Wonder Man," which was attended by members of the executive committee of the American Legion, exhibitors and guests.

Leo Murphy, formerly with Empire State Sales Company, is now handling "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" for Universal in this district. A. A. Fennyvessy has booked this production for the Rialto, Rochester, and the Palace will show the film here.

M. H. Hoffman, vice-president and general manager of the Pioneer Film Corporation, visited the local exchange on Thursday, September 9. With Bob Murphy, manager, he visited exhibitors here. Mr. Murphy reports the Empire having booked "The Tiger Band" for a first-run. J. L. Cook and Byron Interbitzen are members of the Pioneer sales staff.

Bruce Fowler, manager of the Elmwood theatre at West Utica and Elmwood avenue, reports that his company has purchased property in the rear of the theatre on which an addition to the Elmwood will be built. The stage will be eliminated, the screen pushed back and the boxes along each side of the house extended further to the rear. The improvement will give the theatre 650 more seats. The remodeling will be done next summer. The Elmwood has raised its admission price five cents.

Hub Taylor has resigned from the Nu-Art Pictures Corporation staff and is now devoting all his time to his new venture, The Buffalo Theatre Supply Company at 249 Franklin street. Mr. Taylor has acquired the state-rights for the Motiograph machine.

The Majestic was opened by Fred Peters in Hornell, N. Y., on Thursday, September 2. This house has a seating capacity of 2,000.

The Orpheum theatre at Niagara Falls has been taken over by J. C. Berkey. The house was formerly owned by Howard Carroll.

The Van Curler opera house at Schenectady has been purchased by the Miles interests and will be re-named the Miles. The J. F. MacDonald Company formerly owned this theatre. W. G. Bondy will be manager. The policy will be pictures and vaudeville.

DETROIT

One of the first acts of Sid F. Lawrence, newly appointed manager of the Ferry Field theatre, was to sign up the entire output of Educational subjects, from M. Harlan Starr, Detroit manager of the Educational exchange.

"The Fall of Babylon" has been rebooked by the Shubert-Detroit theatre for the eight days from August 28 to September 4, inclusive. James M. Minter, of the Minter-United Amusements, Inc., will visit the larger towns and cities in the territory soon, to make bookings for this picture and for the "Soul of Raphael" which has just completed a first-run at the Madison theatre.

Three men who gave their names as Joe P. McCormick, James E. Lawrence and Joseph J. Claves, have been arrested in Detroit on charge of conducting a real-estate business without a license, following their distribution of a species of lottery-tickets at outlying motion-picture theatres. The tickets were numbered, and the names of the recipients taken. The latter were informed that those holding lucky numbers would obtain a lot on Dickinson's Island, in the St. Clair River, it is stated. One man, replying to notification of his lucky number, is said to have been informed that a payment of $49.50 was necessary to cover the expenses of transfer. Each ticket-holder was also given a year's subscription to a magazine. Examination of the defendants will take place later in the week.

Fred Shafer, former manager of the Adams and William Fox Washington theatres, Detroit, and recently employed in the East by the Fox organization, has been engaged as manager of the Miles theatre here.

The Globe theatre, Flint, opened on Wednesday of last week, to a crowded house. The new theatre has been beautifully built. It will show first-run pictures only. It has an orchestra of 14 pieces. The projection equipment includes two arc 75 ampere Hertner transverters and two type S. Simplex projectors. Leon Melekov and his brother, owners, plan the erection of several other theatres. Al Ruttenberg, former manager of the Grand Circus theatre, Detroit, is the house-manager of the Globe.

"The Devil's Passkey," a Universal special production, is booked for early exhibition at the William Fox Washington theatre.

The LaSalle Garden theatre, Fourteenth avenue and West Grand boulevard, Detroit, was crowded to the doors at its opening performance Monday night of last week. The new theatre, seating 2,500, and beautifully decorated, will offer combination programs of vaudeville and motion-pictures, the programs to be changed twice weekly. Bert R. Williams, manager of the Palace theatre, is the general manager.

Contracts for the Riveria theatre, Grand River and Maplewood avenues, were let last week to Frank Farrington, who plans to start building as soon as he can get adequate materials. Harry A. Ross, Clyde Quimby and several Michigan exhibitors are interested in the theatre.

W. R. Priest, a veteran film-man, arrived in Detroit Monday of last week to assume the management of the Goldwyn office in Detroit. He succeeds J. E. Flynn, who has been promoted to division manager. Mr. Flynn will make his headquarters at the Detroit office, but will give a good deal of attention to Cleveland and Pittsburgh, which offices are included in his territory.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass.

Springfield, Mass., Sept. 4.—Walter J. Linehan, superintendent of Poli's Palace theatre here for the past year, will be manager for the Goldstein Bros. Amusement Company, of Springfield, of their newly acquired Bijou motion-picture house at Ware, Mass. The Bijou will be reopened this month. Manager Linehan came to this city from Holyoke, Mass., where he was in charge of the P. F. Shea house. At one time he managed the Gilmore theatre in this city, a Shea house.

The Allah theatre at 688 Main street has been reopened under the general direction of Abraham Cheffetz, manager of the Garden theatre, also of this city, who recently bought the block in which the former playhouse is located. Active management of the Allah will be in charge of Asa Cheffetz, son of the new owner.

Added to the financial problems of local theatrical managements, due to demands from the bill-posters and musicians for substantially increased pay, received several weeks ago and under consideration since, is that of the motion-picture machine operators, who have "climbed on the band wagon" and want a 50 per cent increase in their pay envelopes. Included in their organization are the electricians. Conference between theatrical managers and operators, with a satisfactory compromise being offered, is said to practically eliminate likelihood of a strike. Theatrical men intimate that if the demands are granted, in whole or substantial part, the public will have to "pay the freight" by paying an increased admission schedule this fall and winter.

CINCINNATI

Lazarus Hoffman, owner of the Bon-Ton theatre, Montgomery road, filed suit in Common Pleas Court against G. E. Hunteman, seeking to compel him to complete a lease and give bond for its performance, and for an injunction directing Hunteman to replace two motion picture machines, two pianos and other articles which Hoffman declares Hunteman removed from the theatre. Hoffman says the lease was entered into last February, Hunteman to pay $75 a month for the rental and have a privilege of purchase at any time within three years for $12,000. Hoffman alleges Hunteman failed to give a bond to perform the lease and removed the articles.

Talk of a new theatre, to take the place of the Walnut Street theatre, ceased this week with the letting of contracts to the Ohio Building and Construction Company for general alterations to the present auditorium. The work is to result in the addition of slightly more than 200 seats, this to be brought about by moving the stage toward the east wall.

H. Serkowich, former lieutenant-commander in the United States Navy, stationed in Cincinnati, has opened offices in New York as president and general-manager of the Luke McLuke Producing Company. The new company will release "Film-osophy," the screen version of the famous Enquirer humorist's wittiest and cleverest sayings, as well as a number of features written by J. S. Hastings, better known as "Luke McLuke."

Mr. Serkowich is well known among Queen City movie men, as he was formerly managing-secretary of the Associated Film Exchanges, Motion Picture Exhibitor League, and the Theatrical Managers' Association of this city.

It is rumored that the People's Theatre Company, owning the People's theatre at 1301 Vine street, is contemplating the purchase of another theatre in or near Cincinnati involving approximately $75,000. The theatre under consideration is at present a vaudeville and motion picture house, it is stated.

SPOKANE

Paramount week, observed universally in picture houses over the country, was made a big feature at Spokane picture houses, the annual festival falling on Interstate Fair week at that city. Spokane picture palaces are drawing big houses every night, and fair week has brought thousands of visitors to the city from Inland Empire towns. Box office receipts are expected to go away ahead of any previous year.

As a special Paramount week bill, the Liberty and the Clemmer, Paramount houses here, are showing feature attractions and conducting special musical programs in addition. At the Liberty, Miss Viola Krantz, organist, who has returned from an absence of several weeks for a summer outing, is scheduled to give a special concert three times daily during Interstate Fair week. The picture bill includes Charles Ray in "The Village Sleuth," said to be one of his best characterizations, with a Mack Sennett comedy, "Let 'Er Go." The Thursday bill of the week includes Enid Bennett in "Hairpins."

The Clemmer bill features the George Fitzmaurice production, "The Right to Love," with Mae Murray and David Powell. The picture will be shown throughout the week, with special musical attractions.

The Clemmer will show the super-production, "Humoresque," for the week beginning September 19. "Humoresque" shattered records in New York, running twelve weeks at the Criterion theatre. Its tenth week was the biggest in the history of the theatre, and the eleventh was almost as good.

"TRUMPET ISLAND"
A TOM TERRISS PRODUCTION
From the Story by GOUVERNEUR MORRIS
Edited by LILLIAN and GEORGE RANDOLPH CHESTER

It is an ill wind that gives the supreme dramatic fillip to this simple, powerful story. It is of a girl, forced into unhappy marriage; of a man, drunk with sudden millions. They should have mated, but barriers of money stood between.

The girl went for a honeymoon trip in the clouds, the man to a lonely island to make himself over. Disaster overtook the girl, but instead of the death she craved, it gave her life and true happiness in the arms of a man of her choice—on Trumpet Island. A virile narrative, natural, fascinating, impressively scened, brilliantly enacted.

"The Cradle of Courage"

(Starring William S. Hart—Paramount)

WILLIAM S. HART lays aside his chaps and Stetson for the none-the-less becoming uniform of a San Francisco policeman in "The Cradle of Courage," and to the many admirers of the Western star, the change will not lessen their admiration. Hart has tried to get away from the tried-and-true portrayal with which his name is now associated, and that he succeeds, attests to the ability of the sterling actor that he is. "The Cradle of Courage" is adapted from a story by Frederick Bradbury and the director is again Lambert Hillyer.

The entire action is laid in San Francisco, and strange to relate, the majority of the scenes are interiors. At the opening, the return of Frisco's Own is pictured with consummate skill. Here, evidently a number of "shots" taken during the war festivities have been worked in to advantage. The dock scenes have been directed with originality and some humorous types are introduced in pleasing fashion. The action then shifts to San Francisco's underworld, and with the exception of a few scenes, remains there 'til the finish.

Hart appears as "Square" Kelly, the smoothest worker in the smoothest gang in Frisco. Returning from the Great Conflict he finds that the war has exerted an influence to go "straight" and this influence is furthered by his "buddie," the son of the Sergeant of Police, and his girl, the adopted daughter of Tierney, the manipulator of the gang. After a moral struggle, he accepts the Sergeant's offer of a position on the force, but not until he completely "beats up" Tierney and his mother drives him from home as "the only yellow Kelly and disgrace to the name." To get even, Tierney and the gang victimize the section in which Kelly has his beat. Then follows a daring burglary, in which Kelly's own brother is killed before his very eyes, although the pal who did the killing makes his escape. Kelly finds out later, who the traitor was, and confronts Tierney with the accusation. By a queer twist of circumstances, Tierney is shot, and although Kelly is wounded, he finds happiness in the returned love of his mother, and the love of "the girl."

Hart is as effective as usual in the leading role, but could, perhaps, stand the elimination of some of the close-ups, as his role calls for the expression of a great deal of the same emotion. Ann Little has but little to do in the leading feminine role, and appears once in boy's clothes. One of the best portrayals of the entire picture is that of Gertrude Claire as the Mother. An unsympathetic role, she makes of it one of the outstanding ones of the picture. Thomas Santschi returns to the screen after a considerable absence as Tierney, and makes of the part a thoroughly despicable character. The fight staged between him and Hart is a real stand-up-and-scrap affair and each uses his fists with telling effect.

"Don't Blame the Stork"

(Christie Comedy—Educational—Two Reels)

IF an exhibitor wants to book a comedy which is founded upon a logical idea, which carries a perfect continuity, which is well fortified with amusing incident, which is zippy and to the point in its flashes, and which is well acted by a competent comedian and fellow players, let him look no further than the latest Christie, "Don't Blame the Stork." The wedding ceremony is utilized again but with delightfully new trimmings. So simple is its development that it puzzles one why it has not been thought of before. The title is a knock-out when you learn the meaning of it.

The bride-groom is tendered a farewell banquet on the eve of his wedding day. He is intriqued into getting intoxicated by sipping from an apparently innocent punch bowl. While navigating home he discovers a baby on the door-step. Eventually, why not now? So he takes it in to the discomfiture of his valet and his intended bride. For when calling up the next morning she hears the child squalling. Explanations are futile. Meanwhile Harry Gribbon, as the disappointed benedict, puts the audience in a happy frame by his high jinks with the infant. Washing and feeding and all the other jobs of a nurse are indulged in with nary a slip. There is no hokum, nor slapstick. The points used are natural and funny. Finally Harry takes the babe out for an airing and wishes it off on a flirtatious girl—a girl who consents to become his bride eventually.

The moral is here too, for it brings home the truth that one shouldn't jump at conclusions. The first fiancee loses a husband by accusing him of being faithless. The Christie girls are given a spare moment. Attired in bathing suits, the shot is hard on the eyes because of the absence of close-ups. They really serve no purpose in a story which builds with plenty of idea, punch and humor. Mr. Gribbon's assistants are Helen Darling and Teddy Sampson.—Length, 2 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"Get Out and Get Under"

(Harold Lloyd Comedy—Pathe—Two Reels)

IT'S Harold Lloyd with a flivver this time. Not the picture, but the tin grass-hopper as it is called by one of the comedian's foils. One would think that Ford jokes and tricks had spent themselves by this time—that nothing could be offered that would bear the stamp of originality. But trust Harold Lloyd to invent something new. Taking advantage of a sure-fire title, he starts just like a Ford—with plenty of zip and with the confident manner that a flivver owner always manifests when he passes a Rolls-Royce on the road. The star is determined to reach the party at which he is to impersonate Romeo. Being a new driver, the car jumps into reverse and tears out the back wall of the garage.

With this scene as the first laugh, the comedy develops spontaneously until it becomes a riot. Harold has a breakdown. Which is sufficient cause to squeeze out some hokum with the engine. The motor-cycle cops ride into the picture and the manner in which they are foiled by the hero's ability to disguise himself and the car proves the high spot of a comedy rich in new tricks and surprises. The reason why Lloyd is forging ahead is because he refuses to stand still. He never uses an old stunt over again. He even introduces here the familiar sight of a Ford passing a high-powered car—a trick which is constantly being played on the highways. Ask any owner of a Packard or Pierce-Arrow!

One of the funniest bits is found in the little pickaninny jumping on the running board when Harold is under the car and causing it to vibrate. The owner thinks he has started it and hops in to put it in gear. Such pleasant bits as these—none of which are burlesqued are the vital props behind this comedy. There is no let-down through the two reels. Lloyd has more fun with his flivver than all the slapstick presentations on the stage (which are built around it), rolled into one. The exhibitor who passes up this comedy deserves to be passed up by his audience.—Two Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Perils of Paul"

(Keefe-Lifograph-Arrow—Comedy)

MISS OUIJA and her w. k. board have their innings in William Keefe's two reel satire, "The Perils of Paul." Through the medium of the talkative woman from the spirit world and a thrust at man's inability to cope with woman in this modern day, Mr. Keefe may be said to have furnished a likely idea even though it doesn't generate a great deal of humor. More fun is obtained from Wee-Gee than from the presentation of the gentler sex assuming masculine characteristics and vice versa. Probably because there is nothing amusing in the sexes adopting opposite traits.

There is a laugh contained in the scene of the Korset Krusaders coming to the rescue of the innocent and asinine Paul. In all "The Perils of Paul" is amusing comedy in spots. It is quite original with the Wee-Gee stuff. The title is a good take-off on Pauline.—Length 2 Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the last twenty weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to May 15, 1920.

Feature Subjects of Short Length

"The Tamer the Wilder"
(Educational)

CHESTER OUTING PICTURES need no introduction, yet in "The Tamer the Wilder," there is introduced a clever way of finding out and telling the world a great deal about four footed animals of our own United States, which we did not know before. There are some close up views of the moose, the buffalo, the bear and kindred animals of the north woods, which, in order to get, must have given the camera-man an uncomfortable thrill, especially when shooting the quarrel settled by the more clever user of his horns, between two buffalo. We see how the bear climbs out of his own and everybody's way and we see him when he climbs down again, and the most interesting feature of the footage is that the camera has caught the players absolutely unaware. There are antics of each animal portrayed which will interest the adult and delight the juvenile. Withal, the actual settings being the country in which they live within the camera-line supplies the basis of interest, with comedy touches playing upon the tricks of different species, bearing out an over-used description "the female of the species is more deadly than the male."—LILLIAN GALE.

"A Painter's Paradise"
(Prizma—Selznick—One Reel)

THIS contribution by Prizma is all that the name implies. The color process is certainly appropriate in giving soul to a painter's canvases. In Brittany a country of fisher-folk the camera catches the simple people in their bizarre costumes. It also catches the broad bay, the glint of the sun on its lapping waves, and the vari-colored ships. A pattern for any painter to feast his eye. As a subtitle says it reveals a beauty, an aristocracy, an enchantment that only the Old World's touch of time can give it. Sunday dawns and the natives of Concarneau hold their regattas. The strife of the New World, the wars of the Old are unknown. For these people are nature's children. The fishermen fish and the painters paint in Concarneau, Brittany. The sails of white, the skies of blue, the waters of blue-green, the air of perfect contentment in these marine shots—these are truly vistas to be caught by a painter or by a mere picturegoer for that matter. Terry Ramsaye's titles are fashioned in the proper spirit.—Length, one reel—LAURENCE REID.

"Syria, the Land of Religious Hatred"

THERE may be some question as to whether the great picture-going public is interested in what might be termed "religious pictures," meaning the kind with no other mission than to preach. But, what about the kind that teach?

Such is "Syria, the Land of Religious Hatred," a couple of reels of film which bring us back to earth, so to speak and remind us that in other countries, by comparison, our labor strikes and general uprisings are likened to comparing the Pacific Ocean's perhaps uncomfortable storm, with one that would break a record for the Atlantic.

"Syria, the Land of Religious Hatred" is what may be called of an informative nature, but is not to be construed as boresome history. It is current fact and recites intelligently of actual conditions in the countries where there is a huge remnant of the religious quarrels such as we picturize with the days of Martin Luther. The photography is excellent and the scenic value commendable. We see such portrayals as would give our best equipped and largest studios something to worry about. "Syria, the Land of Religious Hate," might be recommended to act as a relief subject to immediately precede or follow a feature founded upon light comedy.—LILLIAN GALE.

"The Great Mystery"
(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—Fox—One Reel)

WHEN an exhibitor presents a picture which features crooks and detectives—especially if it carries a strong vein of humor, he should book this little trifle from the Mutt and Jeff lots to send them away satisfied. Keeping a bill in harmony has much to do with an exhibitor being called a capable showman. Bud Fisher has placed his two comedians in detective roles. A man enters their office to engage them for solving the mystery of a haunted house. Mutt trots out his disguises, which are in reality other freaks. But when he investigates a trunk in the house, Jeff jumps on the lid and the elongated Sherlock is imprisoned. The little pal thinks he has "copped" the spook who has caused the mystery. The climax reveals the fact that the owner of the haunted house is a "nut" recently escaped from an asylum. And Mutt executes the w. k. revenge when he breaks out of the trunk. The cartoon hits a higher mark than some of the recent releases.—Length, one reel.—LAURENCE REID.

"Tropical Nights"
(Bruce Scenic—Educational—One Reel)

THIS Bruce scenic, "Tropical Nights," takes the spectator on a dusky journey in a land of perfect atmosphere. The whipping of the waters, the giant trees, the expanse of tinted skies—these contribute toward making this animated landscape a thing of enchantment. Quiet solitude forms the background—the solitude of the explorer or painter who stops and wonders at the soul of a night in the tropics. The offering affords the spectator a real treat. While it doesn't vary to any extent from other Bruce shots insofar as photographic appeal is concerned, the fact that it catches a charm and conveys it is sufficient to bring a satisfactory response.—Length, one reel.—LAURENCE REID.

"Edendale"
(Special Pictures—One Reel Comedy)

THIS is a series of manipulations of clay within a minature stage setting showing in a humorous sort of way the creation of Adam and Eve, their bibical temptation and fall through acquaintance with the serpent and their subsequent recourse to fig leaves to cover their naked bodies. It is in this last sequence that the reel oversteps making the tag of the offering suggestive.

Except for this one scene the reel is mildly amusing carrying the same sort of appeal as does a cartoon production. The artist who handles the clay is clever. The reel might have been given a little more human interest if the clay modeler had been shown at his work now and then instead of waiting until the very last few feet of film and then shooting only his hands.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"The Castaway"

LEAVE it to Robert Bruce to find the spots to photograph which are a story in themselves. However, in the instance of "The Castaway," he goes via the story of a man who was aboard a seagoing freighter, and who was finally discovered, exhausted, lying upon one sandy beach of the Caribbean Cea, where no ships seem to come close enough to hear his cry for help.

The first thing we get a glimpse of is the onrush of water, during a storm on said Caribbean, which dashes in unruly fashion right over the bow of the boat and picks up a small quantity such as a man and deposits him within the aquatic surroundings.

It was not his time to drown, altogether, so we find him in a half drowned condition, hungry and very wet. His quest for food furnishes a logical reason for showing us the things which grow on the island where he is isolated, except for the monkeys who chatter and make a general denial of the human right to eat of the unpicked cocoanut. After months of living upon clinging mussels, which he finds clinging to rocks near shore, and upon fruits we have heard of yet failed to taste, there heaves a ship in sight, but it is a wrecked one, and all it has to offer is a welcome amount of matches, a new shirt and some tools.—LILLIAN GALE.

"Out of the Inkwell"
(Max Fleisher Cartoon—Bray—Goldwyn—One Reel)

A CLEVER cartoon is this contribution of Max Fleisher's entitled "Out of the Inkwell," and offered by the Bray studios. The cartoonist takes his brush, dips it in the ink and the figure on the compo board becomes animated. The secret has not been given out concerning this process. Another company has used the idea, too. Mr. Fleisher leaves the room to play cards with some friends and the plot of the little drama shows him cheating considerably.

One wonders just what this game has to do with the tiny Pierrot on the board. But he takes it into his head to wander into the card-room, climb atop the moulding and tip off his maker. Then becoming real devilish, developing temperament as it were, he jumps on his creator's head and snatches off the toupee. This is done at the moment the cheater has accused his opponents of crookedness. And he is exposed as a genuine fakir when the cards come tumbling down his head. This little sketch is not so humorous as it is interesting. One's curiosity is provoked as to how he does it. A capable filler.—Length, one reel.—LAURENCE REID.

"MID-CHANNEL"
(Garson-Equity)

Drama Lost Amidst Family Squabbles and Omnipresent Dream Ending

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG starring in a former Ethel Barrymore play by Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, sounds like a far more thrilling picture than it is really is. The story is one of conjugal difficulties—a neglected wife allowing herself to be entertained by some half dozen men friends, and her eventual separation from her husband. The star never really gets beneath the skin, possibly because of the lukewarm incidents that are intended to make up the drama. She wears beautiful gowns and becomes very emotional in places that do not seem to warrant such intensity.

We don't see how any audience can quite forgive the ending. All the characters are hopelessly involved, and the only way out is the original ending—suicide by the heroine. Then comes the flash of the star turning the last pages of the novel she has been reading. Her husband returns, promising to neglect her no longer, and the fade-out ends with this artificial, unsympathetic happy ending. If tragic endings are absolutely impossible from an exhibitor's standpoint, this "it-was-only-a-dream" idea will soon be in the same category.

Neither of the two leading characters are sympathetic. The wife is quick-tempered; the husband, lacking in understanding. Their relations are strained when a kindly friend tries to patch matters up. But they break forth into another quarrel over a picayune matter, and the breach is wider still. The wife finds another lover, and her husband a sweetheart. At a second attempt at reconciliation, each confess their faults. The wife's former lover is now engaged to be married and the despondent heroine, thinking that he had truly loved her, commits suicide.

The picture has been artistically produced and there are plenty of striking interiors. The English atmosphere is partially created. The cast is average. No one will be offended by the scenes, for the delicate points of the story are brought out by subtitles only.—Length, 6 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

One of the established favorites of the screen, Clara Kimball Young, will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— in the popular stage play, "Mid-Channel." It was in this play that Ethel Barrymore appeared in several seasons ago, and which registered a hit on Broadway. It is from the pen of Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, one of the most popular and successful of British playwrights.

"Mid-Channel" is laid in London and gets its name from a comparison of a crossing of the English Channel, between Folkstone and Boulogne, and married life. All is clear sailing in the beginning, but when one reaches mid-channel, or passes the first few years of married life, the troubles are likely to commence. So also when mid-channel is safely passed all is clear sailing.

It is in this dramatic story that Clara Kimball Young has one of the best opportunities of her screen career. Playing opposite her is the popular J. Frank Glendon, and others in the cast include Betram Grassby, Eileen Robinson, and Edward M. Kimball.

"Mid-Channel" will remain at the ———— theatre for ———— days. The host of followers of this star are expected to crowd the theatre during every performance, for Miss Young has been rising rapidly in popular favor ever since her remarkable portrayal of the role of Trilby in the gripping play of the same name.

PROGRAM READER

A special attraction is offered to the patrons of the ———— theatre on ———— when "Mid-Channel," a photoplay adapted from the popular stage success of the same name, in which Ethel Barrymore starred, will be the feature picture on the bill. In its picture version none other than Clara Kimball Young is given the starring part. "Mid-Channel" was written by that master playwright, Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, and revolves about the domestic life of a wealthy English couple. A comparison is made between the crossing of the English Channel and the years of married life. As one starts out on the voyage, everything is clear sailing, but in mid-channel the storms are encountered. So in married life, after the first few years, the troubles arising from misunderstandings are liable to wreck the barque of marriage. "Mid-Channel" is a highly dramatic play, with an entirely capable cast to interpret it.

SUGGESTIONS

You have a number of big names to exploit in connection with this picture. First there is the star. You know her drawing power, and what her personal following in your community is. Among a colony of theatre-goers the name of Sir Arthur Wing Pinero will also mean a great deal, but in the smaller communities it will not have the same prestige. You can dress your lobby up in imitation of the deck of a boat and have a sign across your door—"Mid-Channel—a voyage on the sea of matrimony." Do not forget to state that the part was a former success of Ethel Barrymore.'s.

CATCH LINES

There is danger in mid-channel. Although the sea runs smoothly near the shore, there are breakers beyond the horizon. Such is the sea, and such is matrimony. Pass mid-channel and the sailing is clear.

A remarkable interpretation by Clara Kimball Young of Ethel Barrymore's famous part in Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's drama of domestic life.

Slight Story, But Entertaining Incident, in Circus Picture

"PINK TIGHTS" luckily does not attempt to be a big picture. It is satisfied with dessing up its slight story with a few interesting incidents of circus life, mixed with Puritanical New Englanders, and getting as much entertainment as possible by this means. The story, in fact, is not feature material, being merely a tale of the intolerance of the stern villagers against circuses in general and tights in particular. It is only when Gladys Walton, the wearer of the tights, rescues a small boy from a burning church tower, that they change their attitude.

The leading male role, that of a minister, is played by Jack Perrin. His congregation is forcing him to prepare a sermon against tights, when the circus girl, "the queen of the air," drops by means of her parachute from her balloon and lands on his roof. He takes her in his house, but when a crowd of parishioners come unexpectedly, he hides her in his room. She is discovered there by a small boy, but by a clever story, she saves the minister from gossiping tongues. Then comes the church fire and the thrilling rescue. The novel part of it all is that the expected romance dies out. The girl returns to her first sweetheart and the circus, and the lonely minister is still a bachelor at the end.

There is some fair comedy in the situation of the circus girl in the minister's home, and the fire scene is effective. Gladys Walton is attractive, but put little personality behind her characterization. Perrin is stilted in some scenes and does not seem very well cast as a clergyman. The honors should go to little Reeves Eason, Jr., who looks and acts the American boy to perfection. The various villagers are well choosen, and Stanton Heck is the strong man of the circus and Dave Dyas the good looking manager. Director Eason has injected some padding of the most appealing type (there is a dog and a baby and a jar of jam), but disappoints in not showing more intimate views of the circus freaks, which a subtitle promises. If offered as mild entertainment it may not disappoint. It is entirely inoffensive.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

Rev. Jonathan Meek ..... Jack Perrin
Jerry McKeen ..... Dave Dyas

Mrs. Shamfeller ..... Rosa Gore

Mrs. Bump ..... Dorethea Wolbert
Johnnie Bump ..... Reeves Eason, Ja.
Willie Shamfeller ..... Martin Neilan

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Pink Tights," which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— is a story of circus life that is bound to entertain all those who have some happy memories of the "circus days" of their youth, tucked away in the corner of their minds. The romance of the "big tops" is faithfully depicted upon the screen to bring back before the tired business man visions of those glorious days when he watched the big tent rising like a giant mushroom at dawn, or when he carried pails full of water to earn his way into the "greatest show on earth."

Gladys Walton is the featured player in this entertaining picture ,and Jack Perrin plays opposite her. The scene is laid in a Puritanical New England village, where an outraged populace protest against the appearance of the dainty aviatrix in pink tights. So they appeal to their new minister, fresh from the divinity school, to make an example of her. But when the girl, tights and all, falls on the roof of his house after her parachute jump, he finds himself sheltering the very person he promised to condemn. To make matters worse, the admirering members of his flock decided to give him a surprise party and he is forced to hide the girl in order to avoid the gossiping tongues.

"Pink Tights" will remain at the ———— theatre for ———— and is expected to prove one of the most popular comedy dramas that have appeared recently.

PROGRAM READER

Throughout the town of Pleasanton rang the slogan "Pink Tights Must Go!" The circus had come to town and with the circus was the dainty aviatrix who wore the pink tights, which so offended the good church people. So they appealed to their young minister to condemn her. But Miss Pink Tights, jumping with her parachute from a baloon, landed on his roof and he found himself enjoying the company of this strange young lady he had promised to denounce from his pulpit. Such is the opening of the story of "Pink Tights" the feature photoplay which will be the attraction at this theatre on ———— . Gladys Walton plays the leading feminine role, and opposite her is Jack Perrin, both of whom are largely responsible for the success which this picture is going to be. "Pink Tights" will be shown ———— days and is expected to win the verdict of one of the most popular of comedy dramas.

SUGGESTIONS

You have no author or big star to feature in this production. Gladys Walton and Jack Perrin are not very well known as yet. Emphasize the circus atmosphere of the story however, and bring out the contrast between life in the circus and life in a clean, neat, and quiet New England town. Street stunts without number suggest themselves for this picture. You can put a tent top across the front of your door. Your doorman can be a clown, or a ringmaster. A tie-up might be arranged with a dressmaking shop.

CATCH LINES

An entertaining story of the day when the "greatest show on earth"—brass bands, animals, bareback riders and so forth—hit a sleepy New England town.

A story of the meeting of circus life with New England church life and the clash that followed.

"THE HUSBAND HUNTER"
(Fox)

Farcical Development of Fitzgerald's Comedy Drama

"THE HUSBAND HUNTER" was written by F. Scott Fitzgerald and appeared in the Saturday Evening Post in story form. In its screen version some of the characters are burlesqued and the sub-titles descend to a less subtle form for their humor. The picture on the whole can be summed up as sheer nonsense, done in a clever way and containing some good laughs on this account. Undoubtedly some who see it will fail to find entertainment because of its extremely frothy style, but the nonsense lovers will enjoy it immensely.

Eileen Percy is the star, but the comedy depends upon situations and the various types introduced for its success, and she has few opportunities. She plays the "husband hunter"—a girl who is openly and frankly on the trail of unattached millionaires. She catches one, who decides to put her to a test by introducing her to his eccentric "family." The "family" is surely a test for any girl, for her fiancee has hired actors to play the parts of his mother, father, sister and butler. The girl is led to believe that she is marrying into a family of semi-lunatics. Edward McWade plays the rheumatic, miserly father and makes a most ridiculously funny character out of him.

The sub-titles are certainly modern, "Ponzi's Good-bye" is sung. It consists of "a lot of noise and a few bad notes." There are numerous others along the same lines. Of course the audience is kept in suspense in regard to the trick of the fiancee and the less sophisticated will be given a genuine surprise when they learn that the "family" is a frame-up. In the end the girl reciprocates by fooling her lover by arranging a phoney marriage.

Mr. Fitzgerald's story is changed somewhat to afford a happy ending. The heroine is not made very sympathetic, but it makes little difference. The comedy situations are the big thing, backed by the types. "The Husband Hunter" is novel, inasmuch as it stoops to farce, to put across a good comedy idea. Some well produced society scenes enliven the opening reels. Emory Johnson is satisfactory opposite the star.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

Photography by Walter Williams.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

It is a Saturday Evening Post story by F. Scott Fitzgerald, translated to the screen by the Fox Film forces, that is to be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. "The Husband Hunter" is its title and it was published in story form under the name of "Myra Meets His Family."

Eileen Percy, newly raised to stardom, is the featured player. Mr. Fitzgerald's story is one admirably suited for this latest recruit to the heights of starland, and one that contains an almost limitless amount of humor, with a thousand laughs guaranteed. The direction was done by Howard M. Mitchell, who has turned out, among many other successes, the popular Shirley Mason pictures.

Miss Percy plays Myra—one of the types known to society as a husband hunter. She hunts and captures her prey, but before the marriage the prey decides to make a test of her love. So he introduces her to his family, and a most peculiar family it proves to be. Poor Myra finally comes to believe that she is engaged to the son of a lunatic, and a feeble minded old lady who keeps for pets some thirty odd poodle dogs. But the test works, and Myra proves her love and also punishes her fiancee for developing a mythical family with the idea of scaring and terrorizing her. The picture is chock full of surprises, one following on top of the other. It is one of the daintiest comedies of the season, and Eileen Percy helps to make it so.

PROGRAM READER

Summer is the open season for husbands. Any game is fair prey, and any weapon—even the choicest of bathing suits and the most vampish eyes, are legitimate weapons. Eileen Percy, playing Myra in "The Husband Hunter" at this theatre on ————, uses both her figure, eyes, and the daintiest of dresses to bring home the kill. Then someone warned the nice young millionaire's son that she was husband hunting. So he decided to make a test of her love. And what a test it was. It makes one of the most amusing and interesting comedy dramas of the season, and gives Eileen Percy an opportunity to make many more friends. The story is from the pen from none other than the popular F. Scott Fitzgerald, and was originally published in the Saturday Evening Post under the title "Myra Meets His Family." It is a delicious bit of clean humor, and a guaranteed chaser of weariness and ennui for an entire evening and as long after as you think of the humorous situations—which will be some time.

SUGGESTIONS

You can boost this as a refreshing comedy, good for any number of laughs and without a real serious moment in it. Tell them Eileen Percy looks exceedingly pretty and wears plenty of nice clothes and an attractive bathing suit. Spend considerable energy in catch lines which will get over the idea of "husband hunting." Have a "game warden" in your lobby and signs about saying "This is NOT the open season for husbands." Do not neglect by any means the fact that the author is F. Scott Fitzgerald and that the story was originally published in the Saturday Evening Post.

CATCH LINES

Young Kent, the millionaire, thought he was the victim of a "husband hunter," but when the hunter stopped hunting, he found that he liked being the prey.

A Saturday Evening Post story by F. Scott Fitzgerald, chock full of humor. And admirable story for Eileen Percy.

"39 EAST"
(Realart)

Entertaining Picture Made From Stage Success

IT has remained for the screen version of Rachael Crother's successful play, "39 East," to present Constance Binney at her best. The Realart star has been burdened with poor material aside from "Erstwhile Susan"—material which has almost engulfed her. Her personality never had a chance. But now the personable and talented actress comes forward in an adaptation of her own stage success and scores as surely as in the spoken version. It is seldom that a play can stand such a close translation without losing some of its spark or vitality, but "39 East" follows the original in every important incident and entertains without any padding being discernible. The dialogue is the only element missing and since it is a play of character studies and atmosphere one can truthfully say that the picture is every bit as entertaining as the original.

The boarding house which "39 East" represents, the views of Central Park—these are more significant in the silent version. The peculiar types that compose the list of boarders are as real since six or seven of the original company are enacting their parts again. Indeed "39 East" is a sample of faithful fidelity. The fact that practically the same company is interpreting the photoplay is an assurance that the characters are well depicted. The original offering didn't strike us as particularly good screen material—as if it lacked substance or vitality.

It is a feather in John Robertson's cap that he has been able to give it so much life and to keep an audience constantly interested. He has taken the spirit of the play and Miss Binney, knowing the part so well, has given it animation. Her study of the wistful country girl who comes to the city to gain a livelihood and who has a hard time keeping the wolf from the door is rich in sympathetic appeal. The gossips of "39 East" endeavor to make her unhappy. But she conquers in the end and finds romance with the youth who never gave up believing in her. The picture builds to a satisfactory climax with Robertson showing good taste in not spoiling it with melodramatic hokum. "39 East" may be obvious, but it is so perfectly constructed, so well balanced with humor and pathos, and so finely directed and acted, that every spectator will enjoy it. Certainly it is Constance Binney's best bet.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Constance Binney, the charming and talented Realart star, is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in an adaptation of Rachel Crother's play, "39 East." This is the offering with which the star has been identified upon the speaking stage and it has done more than any other vehicle to establish her following. Miss Binney appears in the part of a country girl who comes to New York to gain a livelihood. She finds refuge at the boarding house situated at 39 East on some street, and has a difficult time keeping the wolf from the door.

The boarders are a gossipy lot with one exception. Napoleon Gibbs, takes a kindly interest in her—an interest which soon ripens into love. A time comes when she is provoked at him and danger looms ahead but the youth shows his steadfast purpose by watching after the girl. The picture abounds in pretty sentiment and homely humor. In fact the boarding house touches are rich with atmosphere, quaintness and humor. Miss Binney is supported by many players who were in the original company. Thus the picture is assured of perfect interpretation. Kathryne Stuart adapted this charming play, while John S. Robertson directed.

PROGRAM READER

Constance Binney is the star of the Realart production, "39 East," which comes to the ———— next ————. This is an adaptation of the play of the same name in which the star has appeared with great success.. So she comes to the screen in a perfect study of her delightful role. Many others of the original company are in support, thus assuring the spectators that the picture is every bit as good as the play. How the little country girl comes to New York to find expression—how she suffers trial and heart-aches—how she triumphs in the end is told in scenes rich in sentiment, humor, pathos and romance. The atmosphere is perfect. The direction by John S. Robertson is splendid. A very pleasant evening is in store for you.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is an adaptation of a play which can be exploited in several novel ways. The title can be used to good effect in arousing interest. And much can be made of the fact that the star of the picture is the same star of the play. Mention that the original version scored a wide success in New York and wherever it appeared. Bring out the value of Miss Crother's' name. She has been responsible for many successes. Tell that seven of the original cast are present in the picture. Make use of the director's name. He will be remembered as the man in charge of "Dr. Jeykll and Mr. Hyde." Treat it as a sentimental comedy-drama with the personable and talented Constance Binney.

CATCH LINES

See "39 East" with Constance Binney. A play of New York boarding house life with the talented Realart star appearing in her original role.

She went to 39 East, a boarding house. Did she find happiness? Did she find romance? See Constance Binney, the dainty star in "39 East."

"THE VILLAGE SLEUTH"
(Ince-Paramount-Artcraft)

Ray Scores Again as Country Yokel

THE combination of Charles Ray and Jerome Storm makes "The Village Sleuth" loom up as acceptable entertainment. This story by Agnes Christine Johnston does not measure out the customary logic and homespun incident. It is really quite impossible. Yet there is a sparkle about it—a rich vein of humor which will captivate any audience. Hokum, it has in abundance. Nearly every scene charged with it, but Charles Ray contributes so much of his inimitable style, and Director Storm has embellished it with such appropriate atmosphere and provided a spontaneous development, that the hokum is excusable. The star is more of the buffoon here. So the strong note of pathos which usually accompanies his stories is absent.

Miss Johnston has simply taken the idea that at some time in a youth's life he is anxious to become a sleuth. Which is natural considering that Nick Carter and Sherlock Holmes are favorite characters. So Ray neglects the cows, horses, chickens, et cetera, to sleuth, as it were, in a neighboring sanitarium. Much hilarity is gained from the star's efforts to invent mystery. He plays the boob for all he's worth. Mr. Storm has given him the character and all the room in the world and it must be said that not a trick is missing. The yokel stumbles on to several important clues and is certain that a crook is in hiding somewhere. Romance enters and is taken care of by Winifred Westover. In reality this element is not needed, since a youth, determined to be a detective, would have no thought of love.

The action finally develops into a grand chase which is saved from slapstick by Mr. Storm's sense of proportion. A mysterious character—in fact a "nut" walks around and utters—"Have you found the knife?" This is occasion to bring forth a loud guffaw. And the incident isn't overdone. The heroine is suspected of murder, but the village sleuth with his peculiar powers of deduction, saves her and the story by detecting the real criminal. The "victim" turns up and no crime, other than robbery, has been committed. Of course the story is weak and ridiculous, but there is such an abundance of amusing incidents, such unadulterated hokum, that the average audience is certain to like it. Ray and Storm have worked together so long that their combined efforts have always spelled success.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Charles Ray, the inimitable star, who has established his place in the film firmament through his remarkably human studies of homespun characters, is coming to the ———— theatre beginning ———— in the latest of his small-town stories, "A Village Sleuth," by Agnes Christine Johnston. This picture presents the psychology of boyish character at the age when youth is desirous of becoming a sleuth. Detective stories compose the favorite reading matter. So the star as William Wells, a farmer boy, has ambitions to become a Nick Carter in the flesh. He evolves some novel and amusing methods for detecting crime.

He notices the disappearance of watermelons from his father's patch and solves the mystery by running a string from the patch to the barn and then sprinkling lime around the melons, so that the thief might be traced. William finds himself involved in deeper mysteries and solves them. His various disguises and implements are sufficient to make him a genuine village sleuth. The star contributes an undeniably good study of the part, giving it his generous gift of humor and keen characterization. Miss Johnston's story is ably directed by Jerome Storm, who has been responsible for much of the star's success.

PROGRAM READER

Every youth at some time in his life has longed to be a detective. To solve mysteries, to detect crime carries with it an element of danger. The suspense attached is what fascinates the youth. He would like to emulate Nick Carter or Sherlock Holmes. So it happens that Charles Ray appears as a detective (even though an amateur) in a country town. He was inspired through reading detective stories and so found expression by a natural impulse. The story is written by Agnes Christine Johnston and directed by Jerome Storm. The latter deserves a great deal of the credit which has made the star so popular. "A Village Sleuth" comes to the ———— next ————. A sure-fire entertainment, rich in local color humor and homely touches.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is one of Charles Ray's country stories again. The fact that he appears as an amateur sleuth and solves a few crimes in the village is highly conducive of laughter. Make much of the theme and dwell particularly on the fact that there comes a time in a boy's life when he would like to be a detective. Go after your patrons with atmosphere. Of course play up the star's name, the director who was instrumental in establishing him and the author.

CATCH LINES

He had read so many detective stories that he was sure he could beat Nick Carter at his own game. See Charles Ray in another homspun picture, "A Village Sleuth."

He had several disguises, a gun and a lantern. And became the village sleuth. Come to the ———— and see Charles Ray. A picture of laughs and homely touches.

"THE KENTUCKY COLONEL"
(National-Hodkinson)

Old Time Favorite Makes Moss Covered Picture

IN taking Opie Read's old time favorite, "The Kentucky Colonel," and making a photoplay of it, the producers have turned out a moss-covered entertainment—one which is vastly more interesting in its original shape. The time-worn ingredients are revealed in all their nakedness. Which is to say that every element is incorporated to supply interest and suspense. Heroes are present with their haloes and villains with their evil faces. Contrasts and conflicts are seen in rich abundance. The director who fashioned it has paid too much attention toward adding every little detail. There is much that might be called extraneous and, taken out, would make the action more compact. With such atmosphere as this tale of the South abounds it strikes us that some of it might have been incorporated. Their is no glamour, no color in the backgrounds. And the photography is not up to present day standards.

The main plot has to do with a Kentucky feud carried out in the familiar way. Various counterplots are offered which tend to make the action quite confusing at times. For instance, the conflict between the two young aristocrats for the love stakes. One of them becoming disappointed drags in the melodrama by the heels. Which is occasion to introduce an assortment of characters. A few of these may be catalogued as an adventuress, an escaped convict, gangsters and what not. A bank is robbed, feminine honor takes the count, and the feud brings with it the death of the disappointed lover and villain.

The final touch in this hectic play is the conflict between "those old friends for forty years"—the Colonel and the General. Through a "poison pen" letter, the latter is led to believe that his friend has been faithless all this time. An understanding is never brought about through quiet discussion. The evil thought predominates always. Until such time as the threads of sympathy and pathos are stretched to the breaking point. The quarrel is patched up quite as innocently as it was developed. The figures in this story have become stilted with time. So that in this day they have lost their appeal. Yet "The Kentucky Colonel" is fair entertainment to those who like plenty of hokum, false incident and melodramatic fireworks. It is capably enacted by Joseph J. Dowling, who in the title role, contributes a colorful sketch. Frederick Vroom is adequate as his crony, the General. Re-editing would help the picture. Less titling, details and characters would give it a unity and even a simplicity,—two elements which it needs.—Length. 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Kentucky Colonel," an adaptation of Opie Read's celebrated novel of the same name, is the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— and ————. Many of the ———— patrons will remember the story of the two cronies who grew old together and who loved the same girl in their youth. Colonel Osbury is rejected because he is thought dead, but he returns to make his home with his best friend and the only woman he ever loved. The story develops counterplots in the romance of the daughter of the union and the Colonel"s nephew, and a feud between Osbury's kinsmen and certain neighbors.

The action pilots the spectators through exciting situations and climaxes. Romance, sentiment, hate, conflict, jealousy, pathos—these are a few of the vital ingredients which compose this stirring drama. Joseph J. Dowling appears in the leading part of the Colonel and contributes a performance marked by dignity and poise. Others who render capable assistance are Frederick Vroom, Francis MacDonald and Elinor Field. The picture is scenariozed by L. V. Jefferson and directed by William A. Seiter.

PROGRAM READER

Coming to the ———— theatre on ———— and ———— is "The Kentucky Colonel," a picture version of Opie Read's famous story. The patrons are assured of excellent entertainment in this tale of the Kentucky Blue Grass, of the belles and beaux of that romantic region. As a story it thrilled our parents. As a picture it will bring back memories and offer new delights to their children. The feature abounds in crackling action and suspense, offers real atmosphere, generates humor and pathos and sends forth a delightful romance. How the Colonel was disappointed in love—how he resolved to make the best of his sorrow—is told in six reels of interesting drama. Don't forget—next ———— and ————.

SUGGESTIONS

In exploiting this picture be sure to play up the fact that Opie Read's name is well known and that the famous book which has been adapted into a play has had a universal appeal everywhere. Bring out the value of the title. Play up the name of Joseph J. Dowling as the featured member of the cast, telling that he created a sensation as the "miracle man" in the play of that name. Bring out in your copy that the picture carries a wealth of action and suspense. Tell that it deals in romance and sentiment among the blue-blooded, hot-blooded Kentuckians. Bring out that it offers an exciting feud. Get atmosphere in your exploitation. Dress your ushers in crinolines. Fix up your lobby with Southern atmosphere. Go after the elderly patrons—those who remember the book.

"THE DWELLING PLACE OF LIGHT"
(Hampton-Hodkinson)

Picture Is Heavy and Morbid, Though Well Acted

THAT ancient pattern, which seems to be ever with us, and which may be called Capital vs. Labor, is resurrected again in the film adaptation of Winston Churchill's novel, "The Dwelling Place of Light." Every incident which formerly found a place in the ten, twent and thirt melodrama is emphasized here, so much so that the picture reaches the height of morbidity. An erring daughter, a grasping capitalist who is as lustful as he is mercenary, a good Samaritan, the poor, working "peepul," the evicted tenants, the strike-breakers—these are the stilted figures in this uninspired picture. Churchill usually has something to say in his stories. Whatever he said in "The Dwelling House of Light" has not been caught.

The grewsome details are everywhere. Why, one of the evicted tenants is lugged out on top of his mattress and lugged back in again. And they call this realism. Again, the figure of a poor, downtrodden mother is shown in a particularly morbid light. A close-up of her blood-shot eye peering through a curtain and her subsequent appearance after she loses her memory isn't healthy to watch. Nor the sight of the dead man, arms crossed in his last sleep. The plot builds to the depths as if the director was determined to present all the eyesores of life for the sake of realism. The forces of right and wrong are sharply divided and in the conflict between them nothing has been left out which might aid in establishing a hectic and far-fetched melodrama.

It is like an oasis in a desert when a flash of "sweetness and light" enters in the shape of romantic interludes. But these are mostly subordinated to present the heartaches, the lustful desires, the depressive depiction of tenement and factory life. Mob violence and mercenary greed rule for five reels. The sixth brings the sunshine. The poverty stricken workers are not told how to better themselves. It is a drama temperaments. If a capitalist happens to have a kind heart, a big well of generosity in his soul, then all is right with his workers. If not—well, bring on your eternal conflict between them. Such a picture may be entertaining if one looks no further than the interpretation. But it is too morbid and heavy otherwise. It is excellently acted.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

An adaptation of Winston Churchill's famous novel of New England factory life, "The Dwelling-Place of Light," is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— with an all-star cast which includes Claire Adams, King Baggot, Robert McKim and Aggie Herring. Produced by Benjamin Hampton, and directed by Jack Conway, the picture may be said to be technically perfect. It tells a tale of throbbing life in a factory town where the oppressed workers rebel against the tyranny which controls them. Interspersed with this melodramatic incident, is a romance which is tender in its appeal. The figures will be recognized as real, everyday people who face the same problems as the spectators who watch them.

It depicts the age-old conflict of Capital versus Labor, though the story proper uses one family to establish its moving moments. It is one series of trials for the heroine, who is determined to find happiness even in the shadowy corners of her environment. Claire Adams, as this heroine, plays with much tenderness and charm. King Baggot, as the benefactor, extracts much sympathy from the part, and Robert McKim, ac Capital's representative, is villainous to a realistic degree. The others are conspicuous with good performances.

PROGRAM READER

Winston Churchill's celebrated novel, "The Dwelling-Place of Light," is coming to the ———— theatre in the near future as a motion picture with an all-star cast that includes King Baggot and Robert McKim, interpreting its gripping situations and climaxes. The picture details the problems of the working people of a New England factory town—problems which are ever with us and which will be recognized by the majority of patrons. There are abundant flashes of tense drama, romance, sentiment and realistic incidents. Mr. Churchill is a finished author who always has something to say. And his story as a motion picture is rare entertainment. Watch for further announcements.

SUGGESTIONS

The name of Winston Churchill should be exploited here. Tell what he has accomplished in the literary world. Make use of his novel picturized here, and play up the title and covers, using facsimiles for newspaper space. Treat the feature as a gripping drama of New England life as it flourishes in a factory town. Tell that it depicts the age-old battle between Capital versus Labor. Go after the working people if you are located in a factory town. Play up the cast. Most of your patrons are familiar with the names of King Baggot and Robert McKim. The title can be used for teasers or newspaper briefs.

Dead Men Tell No Tales

"HONEST HUTCH"
(Goldwyn)

Rogers Scores Again in Human, Likeable Role

WILL ROGERS, a perfect cast of great types, an ingenious although simple and quite obvious story so far as plot is concerned, all contribute about equally in making this production a very much worth while bit of entertainment, especially for those who enjoy characterizations that are out of the ordinary and are tired of the eternal "marry and live happy ever after" pictures.

The star is cast as a shiftless happy go lucky individual with a brood of ragged and dirty children and a jewel of a wife, Mary Alden, who supports the family while her no account spouse spends his time hunting up excuses to keep out of work and fishes if some one else will dig the bait. That he is perfect in the role goes without saying. In the hands of a less distinct personality it would have been a dangerous part, since most people haven't much patience with the lazy and shiftless "white trash" type of man; but Rogers makes "Old Hutch" likeable and lovable by sheer skill in portrayal. You find yourself glad that the plot makes it perfectly apparent that before the end "Hutch" will have reformed and that "Sary" will enjoy a reasonable amount of prosperity that she herself didn't provide.

There are times when the offering comes perilously close to being burlesqued, but the sincerity and skill with which Rogers and Miss Alden portray their roles save it from criticism on this score. There are a lot of terribly long titles that threaten to kill the nice tempo in which it is played, but these are written in that droll, dry humor style for which Rogers is famed and are entertainment in themselves.

As to detail, seldom does a picture come through where so much care has been exercised. From fish pole to bait can, all the little properties have been provided. Some nice scenic shots have been secured as backgrounds and the photography is of the best. All in all, a very good production, with little that can be really called drama, but much that should be labeled entertainment.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Honest Hutch	Will Rogers
Mrs. Hutchins	Mary Alden
Ellen	Priscilla Bonner

Three Children	Trebaol

Thomas Gunnison, Jr.	Byron Munson

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Good old "Bill" Rogers who is so homely he is handsome and so good an actor that apparently he doesn't act is to be seen in another Goldwyn picture "Honest Hutch" at the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ————.

"Honest Hutch" is a story of how "Ort Hutchinson" the laziest, most shiftless, no account man who ever married a jewel of a woman, capable of and willing to support herself, her brood of a half dozen children and her lazy spouse, reformed even if it was almost under duress and became a real honest to God plutocrat, as the result of hard work and some good luck.

It is perhaps the best role that Rogers, the famous rope twirling ex-cowpuncher has ever had in pictures. Best because it fits him so well and presents such wonderful opportunities for charactization, all of which are accepted.

In support of Rogers is Mary Alden who as Mrs. Hutchinson is entitled to as much praise as is the star for her splendid acting in a role of almost equal importance. Then there is a cast of players, including Tully Marshal and Nick Cogley, all selected for their ability and peculiar fitness for the roles. "Honest Hutch" is a wholesome, fine bit of entertainment with many a laugh and chuckle mixed in, not only in the scenes but in the titles many of which are the work of the one and only Rogers when it comes to writing the kind of humor that never grows stale or stilted.

"Honest Hutch" adapted from the story "Old Hutch Lives Up To It" with Will Rogers in the best role of his craeer comes to this theatre as the feature attraction for a ———— day engagement beginning ————. Rogers has been cast as a lazy, shiftless, no account, yet likeable and lovable personage residing on the banks of the Mississippi down in the sugar growing belt whose greatest claim to fame lies in the fact that he is the husband of a jewel of a wife and the father of smart but dirty lot of children. How the finding of $50,000 in thousand dollar bills which he doesn't dare attempt to use knowing that even a ten dollar bill from his pocket would be unbelievable, stirs him into actually working long enough so he finds that he rather likes it, is a story that entertains every foot of the way. There are no thrills, no great problems to be decided, no trite examples of movie romances, although "Old Hutch's" daughter does marry the grocery clerk as sort of a side issue and no sex truths or untruths according to the way one looks at, revealed but there is five reels of entertainment with many a laugh contained in this offering. It is presented as one of the most enjoyable pictures of the season. A distinct novelty and a welcome change.

PROGRAM READER

Bill with full information of the kind of a role Rogers, Miss Alden and Tully Marshall play. Give a synopsis of the story promising plenty of humor much of it contained in titles of the well known Roger's brand. As a prologue the river boat idea with a ragged fisherman as a vocalist is appropriate.

Quote from the subtitles in your advertising with attention to the humor contained in many. For a lobby display, we suggest the front of a "poor white trash" cottage with tin cans, fish poles and all manner of odds and ends lying about.

CATCH LINES

"Women are queer critters," says Will Rogers in "Honest Hutch." "When they ain't bawlin' they're singin'.

The thing "Old Hutch" did best was hunt up excuses for not working. He claimed he was just able to fish if someone would dig the bait. Then he actually reformed and inside of a year he had contracted the habit of working so strong that he decided that he liked it.

A story of a lazy, shiftless, no account "whitetrash," living on the banks of the Father of Waters who went to work because he found fifty thousand dollars when all his life without a cent in his pocket he had loafed and fished while his wife earned the living for the family.

"The County Fair"

(Tourneur—Guy Croswell Smith)

Founded on Neil Burgess' play of the same name.
Scenario by J. Grubb Alexander.
Supervised by Maurice Tourneur.
Photographed by Charles Van Edger and Rene Guissart.
Cast of characters:

Aunt Abigail ..... Edith Chapman
Sally (her niece) ..... Helen Jerome Eddy
Joel (with whom she is in love) ..... David Butler
Bruce Hammerhead (in love with Sally) ..... Arthur Housman
Solon Hammerhead (his father) ..... William V. Mong
Otis Tucker (admirer of Aunt Abigail) ..... John Steppling
Tim Vail (farm hand and jockey) ..... Charles Barton
Tommy Perkins (juvenile hero) ..... Wesley Barry
"Cold Molasses" ..... By Herself

"The County Fair," the new rural screen drama, made under the supervision of Maurice Tourneur from Neil Burgess's classic stage success of the same name, is a simple, entertaining tale of simple life and complex emotions. Just as the scenes are mostly simple natural country scenes, so are the people simple, and natural. There isn't any sex problem in "The County Fair," nor any murders, nor any robberies. The million dollar lobster palaces are conspicuous only by their absence. French modiste shops were not scoured for new sensations.

"The County Fair" wasn't made to thrill audiences. It was made only to entertain. And it does just that. Instead of the problems that have confronted the photoplay plans during the past few seasons, there is a big fair, with its funny side shows; a greased pig chase with a surprise ending; a shinny race up a slippery pole which the youngsters will enjoy; a horse race with a new twist to the stereotyped ending and a lot of the human interest love stuff that makes the world go round.

Helen Jerome Eddy, like the famous professor in economics so often quoted, who made the problems so simple that they didn't seem like problems, made the role of the young girl seeking to save her aunt's farm from going under the hammer so simple and natural that it seemed as if she weren't acting at all.

Wesley Barry carried off second honors in the production. He and his younger associates duplicated the efforts to win the girl of his choice, just as Joel, the young farm hand strives to win Sally, and just as old Otis Tucker uses the same tactics to win Aunt Abigail.

"County Fair" is a human interest picture unalloyed.—ELSIE LOEB. (Reviewed at Rivoli theatre, Toledo, O.)

Pathe Review No. 70

THIS reel is up to the usual standard set by its predecessors. It contains many interesting subjects among which are "The Four Legged Detectives," showing the various ways in which weasels are trained for sport; the raising and picking of "Sunshine Berries" otherwise known as "Strawberries"; "Sea Ghosts," some beautiful scenes of rock bound coasts, which with the tinted clouds above and the sea below gives an entrancing effect.

Ultra-rapid motion pictures are again shown this time illustrated by a young man who is an expert in twirling a stick, which he keeps in motion with the aid of two smaller sticks held in each hand.

The Grecian Festival Dance is also featured in this number, the Misses Williams, three very pretty dancers giving pleasing portrayals of ancient classics.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Rock a Bye Baby"

(One Reel—"Snub" Pollard Comedy—Released Through Pathe)

ONE of the best Pollard's we've seen to date. It is bright, snappy, full of action and has plenty of comedy incident.

The star does about everything in the tumbling line, gets into many mixups and for a little novelty in the comedy line rides one of the old time-high wheeled bicycles through the streets. And how he does ride that old machine or rather fall off it; sometimes on his head, at other times on his chest and shoulders and at others on his back.

When one considers the height of these old "runabouts" with their enormous front wheels, it is really marvelous that he escaped a dangerous accident, even though he knew how to break the falls with his hands, for he does these stunts out in the streets.

In this picture he is cast as the judge of a baby show in which entries are made by various nationalities.

The part gives him plenty of opportunity to display his talents as a comedian and he is ably assisted by a well selected cast, who put plenty of life and action into their roles, especially in the scenes where objection is raised to the method in which "Pollard" distributes the prizes.

The picture builds to a strong finish.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Dawnland"

(One Reel Scenic—Sponsored by the Sunset Magazine)

"DAWNLAND" is a most beautiful tinted and wonderfully photographed scenic that has no faults except that it has nothing to identify it from hundreds of other pictures of its kind which depend on good shots of exceptional bits of nature's handiwork for their entertainment value.

The Capitol theatre program on which the picture is shown announces it as "a pictorial tour across dawnkissed water passages and over snow capped mountain peaks that lead from our great Northwest into Canada, produced by Leland J. Burrud in conjunction with the Sunset Magazine" which is a nice poetic way of saying that the reel is a better than average offering and suitable for any theatre where scenics are appreciated.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"It's a Boy"

(Sennett Two-Reel Comedy — Released by Famous Players-Lasky)

"IT'S a Boy" is a bird of a slapstick comedy if you are not too particular about some of the individual scenes such as the blacksmith searing his helper's rear portions with a hot iron, a big buck sheep trying out his battering ram abilities on Louise Fazenda in a like manner, etc. It gets off to a good start with action and incident of a semi-new variety and keeps going until the end.

As usual the plot is of the impossible melodrama variety which burlesqued in playing provides some good laughs.

The cute baby used in many of Sennett's recent comedies and the Sennett dog contribute to this offering. Some good titles also help in putting the picture over. The usual Sennett players are all given parts and for once the bathing girls are missing.

Good for any theatre where slapstick is appreciated.—J. S. DICKERSON.

Prizma Scenic

"TROUVILLE, WHERE PARIS PLAYS" is a combination scenic and educational subject showing scenes at the Trouville, France, bathing beach with a number of good looking girls parading around in one-piece bathing suits.

The costumes have been colored by the Prizma process as well as some of the scenic shots making the offering very artistic.

J. S. DICKERSON.

Something To Think About

"Thus at the flaming forge of life
Our fortunes must be wrought
Thus on its sounding anvil shaped
Each burning deed and thought."

WHO shall come out of the forge of life unscathed? Who shall come through the fires of suffering and the blows of the hammer of fate as strong and true as steel?

Only those to whom there has come a vision of understanding.

A few men and women, caught in the toils of tragedy, suffer and struggle—dumbly, pitifully—

And then suddenly, a radiance, an enlightenment!

Cecil B. De Mille has accomplished in this production something never done before. He has unlocked the secrets of the human heart.

HOMESPUN FOLKS

All star cast with Lloyd Hughes

Story by Julien Josephson

With every American newspaper filled with political news, every exhibitor playing this lively melodramatic comedy can positively assure himself of big business and that "satisfied feeling" in all of his patrons who have seen "Homespun Folks."

"You'll laugh a lot, cry a bit and come out saying 'some picture'" is what the newspaper critics of the big cities are saying about it.

This is why 2,000 of the nation's best theatres are playing it. One hundred prints means all of the 2,000 can play it before Election Day—and some more.

Playing the Capitol Theatre, New York, week of October 3rd.

POLICE RESERVES CALLED TO CAPITOL

Sale of Tickets Stopped When Thousands Storm Photo-Playhouse to See "Earthbound."

BIG CROWD PROVES ORDERLY

Lines Extending Into West Fiftieth and West Fifty-first Streets Formed When Doors Are Closed.

Police reserves from the West Forty-seventh street police station were summoned to the Capitol Theatre last night, when between 5,000 and 7,000 motion picture fans attempted to gain entrance for the first evening performance. The crowd, attracted by the Goldwyn film, "Earthbound," which enjoyed a successful run at the Astor Theatre and is the Capitol's leading photo-play this week, was orderly, and after several minutes' work by the police was formed into lines extending from the Broadway entrance of the theatre into West Fiftieth and West Fifty-first streets.

It was shortly after 7 o'clock last night when the evening patrons began to storm the box office in the lobby of the playhouse, and half an hour later the sale of tickets was ordered stopped.

Informed that there would be no more tickets sold until the later performance, the crowd surged forward, and it was necessary to close the front doors of the playhouse. It was then that the police were called upon for assistance in clearing the street in front of the theatre. After the crowd had been formed into the two lines, which extended up and down Broadway, the sale of tickets was resumed as patrons who had seen the program left the theatre one by one.

The Goldwyn production of Basil King's story stands out as one of the finest achievements of the cinema in acting, directing, photography and production. Ruled by the creed, "No God, no sin, no future life," four lives are shattered and then recreated by the love and faith which finally releases the "earthbound" spirit and brings the true meaning of life to those left behind.

S. L. Rothafel has arranged a special musical setting for the picture, which includes Gounod's "Ave Maria," sung by Helen Wallace. Encouraged by the success of the Kol Nidre number presented last week, a Festival Chorus is offered in appreciation of Yom Kippur. The Andante and Allegro Marziale from Tschaikowsky's "Symphonie Pathetique," is another of the orchestral features and there is also a ballet solo by Mlle. Gambarelli. An interesting scenic showing the natural beauties of Glacier National Park and the news reels complete the program.

Was It The Brand Of Hate—Or The Mark Of A Great Love?

Can a woman still love a man who, in a fit of mad jealousy, seared her shoulder with the brand of his ranch cattle?

ECKELS WILL SOON HAVE FEMALE STAR FOR INDEPENDENTS

Exploitation Methods of I. F. A. Attract Many Big Producers

Within the past two weeks, five different producers have visited the offices of the Independent Films Association in the Consumers Building, Chicago, to negotiate for distribution of their output through the Association.

During the same period, Eddy Eckels, general manager of the Association, has been offered two female stars and three male stars, all of first magnitude, in series releases. These stars are so well known that the publication of their names here would startle the film industry and take the independent exchange men off their feet.

In the very near future it is certain that Independent will announce a new series of releases for the state right market—and indications point to the acquisition of a series of big productions with a female star of tremendous drawing power.

Harts Contracted in Thirty Days

Early in July the Association took over the exclusive distribution of Pinnacle Productions, starring Neal Hart in a series of eight productions founded on well known and successful plays of action and human interest. Within the unbelievable period of thirty days, the entire United States had been closed on the Hart series—and in many territories competition waxed so keen among the exchange men over the Hart franchises that it became a problem of no small proportions to adjust the differences which developed.

The case of Pinnacle Comedies was even more astounding.

Dealers Eager for Comedies

Distribution arrangements were completed with the producers of Pinnacle Comedies the latter part of August. A very small announcement of the forthcoming releases appeared August 28 in The News. The first national advertisement of Pinnacle Comedies was not published until September 11. Yet in the two weeks following August 28, when the first rumor of these two-reel releases reached the state right dealers, a veritable flood of inquiries by mail and telegraph swamped the offices of the Association, and half of the country had been closed prior to the publication of the first full-page advertisement.

Campaign Proved a Winner

The story of the Independent Films Association's meteoric rise to prestige and power is a story of right principles plus advertising.

Starting out with the conviction that first class attractions produced expressly for the independent exchanges were badly needed, Eddy Eckels and his associates launched an advertising and exploitation campaign so unique and original in conception and so gigantic in proportions that the entire industry sat up and took notice. Results secured were startling and, in many instances, unexpected.

Talk of the Industry

Congratulations and comments of a most flattering character have been received from some of the biggest factors in the films, and the growth of the Association is right now the talk of the industry.

The same cleverness and originality which characterize the Association's own advertising are to be found in the exploitation materials supplied by it to the exchange men for the use of the exhibitors. New ideas have been introduced in the making of posters, lobby photos and advertising cuts, and the exhibitors' press books are exhaustively complete. The theatre men have been supplied with ammunition of a sure-fire sort by means of which to carry out their campaign aimed at the general public.

Success Won by Keeping Faith

Additional units of distribution are eagerly awaited by the exchanges throughout the country; and with the Association's policies so well known and so heartily approved, and its invariable practice of fulfilling its promises so well established, the time is at hand when productions of merit accepted for distribution by the Independent Films Association may be contracted throughout every territory in the United States and Canada by telegraph in twenty-four hours.

MI GOSH MEN! CAN THIS BE TRUE?

WHO IS THIS LITTLE LADY?
She is dainty Blanche White, of the well known Pinnacle Comedies.
What seems to amuse her?
Well, you see, it's like this: Those DAMFOOL TWINS—Leo White, "the perfect fool," and Al Martin, "the poor fish," are going 'round and 'round in a whirlwind of in-trick-it confusion, and Blanche, the "delightfully damfoolish one," has made her escape on the lawn.
What's the confusion about?
Watch for "Cedarbrook Farm," the first release of the Damfool Twins. We'll not tell it in advance. But——
Notice the dimples?
This cut for sale by THE MASTER ADVERTISERS, 109 N. Dearborn St., Chicago. Price, 60 cents.

WEIRD SCENIC EFFECTS SECURED IN "SKYFIRE"

Some wonderful effects are being secured in Neal Hart's second vehicle, "SKYFIRE."

It is freely predicted that when this picture finds its way to the screen it will attract the attention of technical experts everywhere, particulary in the sequences showing the aurora borealis or so-called "Northern Lights." This has been done in a manner never before attempted in the films.

According to a legend of the Chippewa tribe of Indians, the spirit of the mystic aurora once led the starving remnant of the tribe from a land of darkness, misery and death to a big hunting ground. In the story of "SKYFIRE," this legend is related by "Little Wolf," an Indian runner. The subsequent appearance in the northern sky of the shimmering auroral phenomenon and the sensational results which follow will go to make up one of the most gripping and spectacular pictures ever produced.

NEW CAMERAMAN FOR NEAL HART SPECIALS

Milton Moore, for four years with Universal as head cameraman, has been engaged for the Neal Hart Specials and is now shooting scenes for "SKYFIRE," the second Hart picture, at the Pinnacle Studios in Glendale, Calif. Moore replaces "Chuck" Welty.

ILLINOIS, INDIANA, CLOSED FOR ENTIRE NEAL HART SERIES

A. Lowy, newly appointed head of the Illinois and Indiana Film Exchange, of Chicago, closed all arrangements last week for the entire output of the Independent Films Association.

This deal embodies the series of eight Neal Hart Pinnacle Productions, a series of twelve Pinnacle Comedies, featuring the Damfool Twins, and the Roy Stewart feature, "The Lone Hand."

Ilinois & Indiana Film Exchange also has an option on all future output of the assocation.

ARROW, DENVER, BUYS NEAL HART FRANCHISE

The Arrow Photoplay Company of Denver has purchased the entire eight Neal Hart special productions from the Independent Films Association for the states of Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico, southern Idaho and Utah. E. J. Drucker, Arrow's action agent, is tickled over grabbing the franchise and already has a number of big first runs lined up.

Squidgelums

Ollie Moore, general manager of Calumet Productions, Inc., may not be the champion checker player of the world, but you can tell the world that he holds the watch against any one riding the trans-continental rattlers. Moore just got back to Michigan avenue from a two weeks' visit to old California. East and West, he beat all comers at the squared chart and the buffet cars both ways looked like twenty minutes before the world's series at the Polo Grounds. Lotsa gallery.

OLLIECHECKEDEMUP

"How to Beat the Bread Line," by Charles Christie, is a title that had a wide vogue on board the California Limited last week. In fact the yarn has an aged inception. Christie, the comedy fame bird, makes so many cross-nation leaps that all the crews from dining car stewards to the news agents, know Chas. by initials. When the dining palace is jammed, Charley winks at the steward, who does some B. P. antics with the wrist and eyes, and Chas. flops down to a big spread. It pays to be popular.

HOWABOUTAWETWINK!

Nat Spitzer left the Pacific coast long enough last week to dash madly to New York, stopping off for a day in the breezy metropolis of Chi. Nat had a smile as big as a traction grab. He said everything was jake everywhere. Fine biz.

NATPACKSABIGSMILE

Louis Hyman, right-hand-man for Sol Lesser, spent a week or 10 days in Los Angeles recently. He found affairs at the exchanges flourishing. Hyman is known among producers as the shrewdest buyer along film row.

LOUISFINDSOPTIMISM

RELEASE OFFERED FOR PICTURES OF SUPERIOR MERIT

Producers of first class films need not worry about getting a favorable release.

The independent market is crying for the right kind of distribution units, and the Independent Films Association is in mighty close touch with the market.

The demand is for series releases built around a single star personality. Five-reelers are going nicely, and two-reel Westerns or comedies are enjoying heavy bookings throughout the country.

The Association will be interested in your product if it possesses merit to stand up under high-pressure exploitation.

SUNDOWN SLIM

Reason No. 1

WHY "The Devil's Passkey" is the one great dramatic achievement of 1920

YOU have seen the picture—you remember well the scene. It is in Warren Goodwright's Paris apartment, just after the premiere of his successful play at the Theatre Francais—and just after Goodwright has discovered that the plot of his play is the story of his own wife's love affair, which all Paris knew only too well. But he is not yet quite sure of her guilt. So—while his wife and her lover stand speechless, waiting for what they know can not be postponed, Warren Goodwright drops his eyes while he pours Captain Strong a drink. He drops his eyes —but he raises them—to catch the lightning-like exchange of warnings between the guilty pair. And now—he knows! Right there, gentlemen—in that wondrous bit of silent, quiet, all-revealing action is the secret of a great part of Von Stroheim's genius—his marvelous perception of the moments that count—the actions that tell—the gestures that speak louder than words.

Carl Laemmle offers Von Stroheim's Universal-Jewel Master-Play

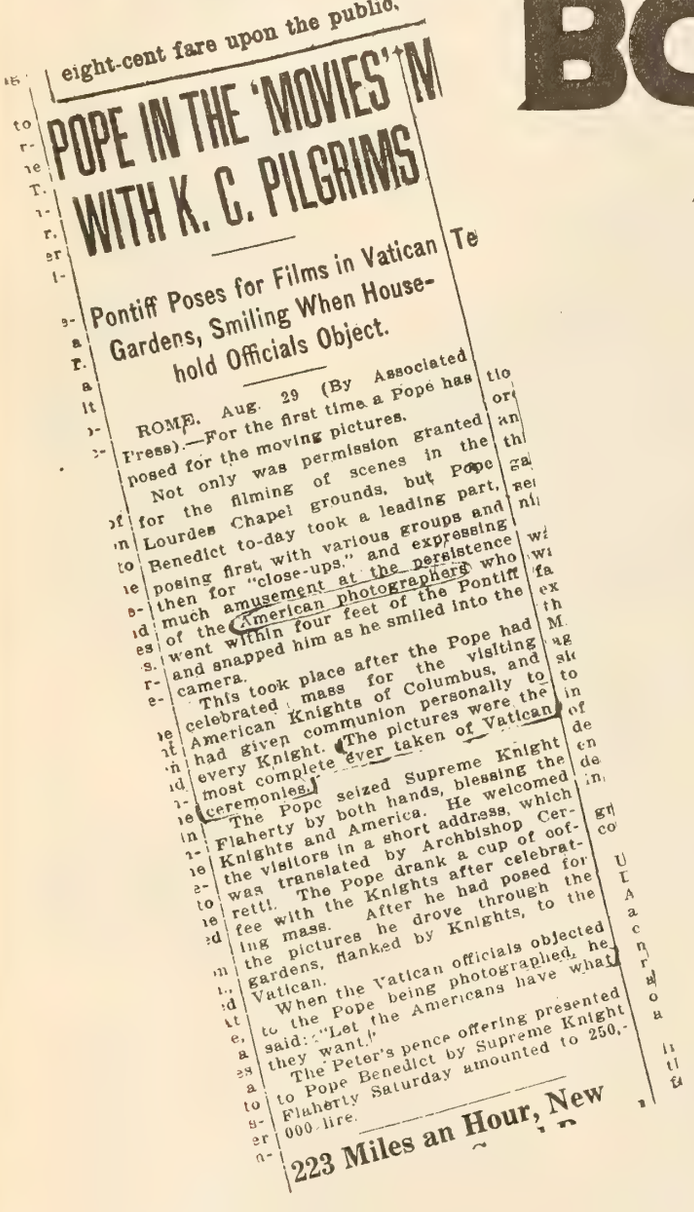
CARL LAEMMLE presents

"ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN"



EVERY girl's heart feels it—every woman knows it at least once in her lifetime—the ungovernable longing to break away from home surroundings and embark on some great career that will bring her fame and fortune and romantic love. A few fortunate ones gain their heart's desires—but those who have to forsake them may be counted in millions. And those millions are the ones for whom the genius of Allen Holubar has produced this huge drama of woman's ambition, the picture of her dreams.

IN this absorbing picture of the progress of Aurora Meredith from her small-town home to the mighty stage of the Metropolitan, DOROTHY PHILLIPS gives a portrayal of the very soul of woman. And Allen Holubar has staged his dramatic moments amid scenes that have no equals for their perfect taste, their finish and their fidelity to detail. Book this picture on Universal's flat statement that it will prove the one biggest heart-appeal photodrama of your year. And book it now!

POPE IN THE 'MOVIES' WITH K. C. PILGRIMS

Pontiff Poses for Films in Vatican Gardens, Smiling When Household Officials Object.

ROME, Aug. 29 (By Associated Press).—For the first time a Pope has posed for the moving pictures.

Not only was permission granted for the filming of scenes in the Lourdes Chapel grounds, but Pope Benedict to-day took a leading part, posing first with various groups and then for "close-ups," and expressing much amusement at the persistence of the American photographers who went within four feet of the Pontiff and snapped him as he smiled into the camera.

This took place after the Pope had celebrated mass for the visiting American Knights of Columbus, and had given communion personally to every Knight. The pictures were the most complete ever taken of Vatican ceremonies.

The Pope seized Supreme Knight Flaherty by both hands, blessing the Knights and America. He welcomed the visitors in a short address, which was translated by Archbishop Cerretti. The Pope drank a cup of coffee with the Knights after celebrating mass. After he had posed for the pictures he drove through the gardens, flanked by Knights, to the Vatican.

When the Vatican officials objected to the Pope being photographed, he said: "Let the Americans have what they want."

The Peter's pence offering presented to Pope Benedict by Supreme Knight Flaherty Saturday amounted to 250,000 lire.

IN Baltimore, both the Keith and Loew houses made these two issues showing the Pope a headliner in all their advertising. They considered it the greatest news feature ever on the screen. More than that—the Baltimore theatres using news reels of competing organizations used every endeavor to secure in place of their competing reels prints which would show that they were as good pickers of the leading news reel as Keith and Loew.

Announcement

TO FURNISH A CONSISTENT AND CONTINUED BOOKING SERVICE providing a variety of recognized talent, consisting of singers, musicians and including quartettes, trios, duos and "singles," as well as instrumental organizations, miniature "jazz" bands, there has been organized

THE MANHATTAN BOOKING EXCHANGE

THE PLAN OF BOOKING HAS BEEN CAREFULLY STUDIED, with a view to meeting conditions in the "average" city, rather than the metropolis. It is the intention to book only talent which is proven; which has a "reputation," and which can really entertain audiences. The exchange will not serve in any way as a clearing house for ambitious amateurs, or untried, unproven talent.

THE COST OF SERVICE WILL BE FIXED, it will be no more or less for one theatre than another. This exchange is absolutely independent of any film-interest domination; is financially responsible, and the bookings will be arranged and supervised by as well known bookers as there are in the world of vaudeville and theatricals.

THE SERVICE WILL BE UPON THE SPLIT OR FULL WEEK BASIS, that is, a change of artists twice each week or weekly. Bookings will be varied; for example, the first half, a male quartette, last half, a "single"; first half, a female trio, last half, a small "jazz" band; first half, a man-and-woman piano and singing act, last half, a concert tenor and so on.

ONLY ONE THEATRE WILL BE BOOKED IN EACH CITY; it must be a reliable and responsible theatre, the service is not an experiment, but a proven success in every theatre which has tried it out. It is no longer sufficient to give your audiences a program of pictures alone. It must be broken—its monotony interrupted—if it is to achieve a maximum of entertainment.

BRANCH OFFICES WILL BE OPENED in principal cities, as occasion warrants, to guard against disappointments; but all bookings will be made in New York City, from talent that has "made good" here, and is known to be of excellent entertaining value.

INQUIRIES, which will be promptly responded to, ARE INVITED FROM INTERESTED THEATRES.

That following is waiting to crowd your theatre to the doors when you advertise "The Kentucky Colonel."

The director has caught the very spirit of Old Kentucky, with its beautiful women, its gallant men, its wonderful horses, its romance, its glamour, its charm. And there's action—lots of it—for the men, and a delightfully tender love theme that will reach the hearts of the women.

"39 East" was a tremendously successful play due to its delightful comedy, its genuine humorous characters and the wholesome sentiment with which the lighter elements were mixed. And by the same token "39 East" will be a successful picture—very likely a very big success. Certainly it is by far the most enjoyable picture in which Constance Binney has appeared and it is also one of the best pictures produced by Realart.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"39 East" ought to prove a big attraction. It is still a pleasant memory with those who saw it as a stage play and the publicity it received in this form last season is new enough to have served as an advance campaign for the coming of the picture.

In advertising be sure to bring out the fact that Constance Binney is seen in her original role of the stage play. You can also safely say that it is the best picture she has appeared in.

Mention also the name of the author. Her plays

"39 EAST"
(Realart)

Entertaining Picture Made From Stage Success

It has remained for the screen version of Rachel Crother's successful play, "39 East," to present Constance Binney at her best. The Realart star has been burdened with poor material aside from Erlanger material which has almost engulfed her. Her personality never had a chance. But now the personable and talented actress comes forward in an adaptation of her own stage success and scores as surely as in the spoken version. It is seldom that a play can stand such a close translation without losing some of its spark or vitality, but "39 East" follows the original in every important incident and entertains without any padding being discernible. The dialogue is the only element missing and since it is a play of character studies and atmosphere one can truthfully say that the picture is every bit as entertaining as the original.

The boarding house which "39 East" represents, the views of Central Park—these are more significant in the silent version. The peculiar types that compose the list of boarders are as real since six or seven of the original company are enacting their parts again. Indeed "39 East" is a sample of faithful fidelity. The fact that practically the same company is interpreting the photoplay is an assurance that the characters are well depicted. The original offering didn't strike us as particularly good screen material—as if it lacked substance or vitality.

It is a feather in John Robertson's cap that he has been able to give it so much life and to keep an audience constantly interested. He has taken the spirit of the play and Miss Binney, knowing the part so well, has given it animation. Her study of the willful country girl who comes to the city to gain livelihood and who has a hard time keeping the wolf from the door is rich in sympathetic appeal. The gossips of "39 East" endeavor to make her unhappy. But she conquers in the end and finds romance with the youth who never gave up believing in her. The picture builds to a satisfactory climax with Robertson showing good taste in not spoiling it with melodramatic hokum.

"39 East" may be obviously but it is so perfectly constructed, so well balanced with humor and pathos, and so finely directed and acted that every spectator will enjoy it. Certainly it is Constance Binney's best bet.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

EXHIBITOR'S TRADE REVIEW

"39 East" Scores A Decisive Hit

Realart Photoplay in Five Parts. Adapted from Rachel Crother's Stage Comedy of the Same Title. Director, John S. Robertson. Cameraman, Roy Overbaugh. Running Time, Fifty-Five Minutes.

"39 East" scored a decisive hit as a stage attraction, and the film version has been such at the Appreciative welcome during its initial exhibition given last night at the Rialto Theatre, New York, that it certainly ought to be a big box office attraction for exhibitors will make no mistake in booking this admirably clean picture. From the standpoints of Appeal, Story and Treatment, it is artfully developed. Settings, Photography and Lighting, it is a perfect example of its type.

Appealing work in the story which is a screen version of Rachel Crother's stage success. There is not a dragging moment in the entire seven reels. The love theme is artfully developed, the comedy element is cleverly worked in and the climax is a most satisfactory one.

Constance Binney wins the heart of all patrons by her delightful performance in the heroine role. She is not a stranger to the screen, as she has appeared in several productions, but this picture is exceedingly charming and is by far the best vehicle for her talents that we have seen. Her support is splendid.

Supporting Cast.—Herbert Heyman is originally effective as Edward Dillingham, the boarding house youth who never gave up believing in the heroine. Alice Joyce Haworth supplies an excellent character sketch as Mrs. Appworth, a lifelike Broadway type as Edward Peterson, all in the boarding company and adequate support is rendered by others.

Photography and Lighting.—The Central Park shots are admirably done, the interiors well framed and effective lighting is employed throughout. Continuity is even and the action moves at a smooth, steady pace.

Direction.—Of this as an unusually fine adaptation of the stage play that will make such a successful run on Broadway that it should run for months. Feature the name of Constance Binney in your billing. Feature the photographs for display purposes in the lobby and in store windows without trouble.

"39 East"

Constance Binney Charming as Ever in Realart Production of Rachel Crothers' Interesting Stage Play.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

As Penelope Penn, in "39 East," Constance Binney made her debut on the speaking stage. The Realart production of the screen version of the Rachel Crothers' play, released by Realart int, proves to be quite as entertaining and amusing as the original work. The story is not at all unusual, but it is clean and bright and has an atmosphere of youth and happiness that will always be welcome. There isn't the slightest pretense about "39 East." It is pleasantly human, and the struggle of the heroine to make a name for herself in the world of song is just difficult enough to win her real sympathy, without causing the spectator any undue distress. None of the persons about her is shockingly bad, and even the villain turns out to be a fairly decent chap and remarks that the goodness of Penelope rather restores his faith in human nature.

The production is entirely satisfactory. The Central Park scenes form an excellent contrast to those in the second rate boarding house and in the theatre where Penelope is given her chance to win fame and extra slices of bread and butter for the other Penns, big and little.

Constance Binney is steadily improving as a screen actress. Her attractive personality from every point of view is a great asset, and she has grown more sure of herself and has broadened the scope of her facial expression. Always a delight to the eye, her grasp of the emotions is quicker and firmer

GOOD MUSICAL PROGRAM

Grace May Hoffman and Sascha Fidelman Are the Soloists of Week.

By AGNES SMITH.

Constance Binney comes to the screen of the Rialto this week in the stage play that changed her from a charming little dancer to a charming little star. It was no fitter comedy played near Broadway than Rachel Crothers's comedy played to a motion picture. The result is a perfect success. Judged merely as light entertainment, the picture is a perfect success. The story of the heroine is a familiar one. She comes to the boarding house in the Central Park district, merrily and innocently in the beginning, and ends by becoming involved in the affairs of the other boarders. Most of the action of the picture stay [illegible] of Rachel Crothers's subtitles, and many of them are quoted as subtitles. The film moves with such zest and humor that you forget, however, who wants much of a plot, when the characters are shrewdly and amusingly presented.

Many of the players who were seen in the play also appear in the picture. Constance Binney is delightful. As she takes the part she achieves a certain distinction which makes her a screen actress. Reginald Denny is likewise a screen actor. Alison Skipworth, Frederick Burton, Luela Moore and Blanche Frederici are [illegible] some of the players who do adequate work. Alfred Hickman is the villain who [illegible] turns out to be almost the hero. The pic[illegible] ture was directed by John Robertson and is presented by Realart.

The comedy for this week is called "Don't Blame the Stork." But, really, it is not as bad as it sounds. The picture is nearly has a plot and it contains nothing to blush about. Harry Crabb, Teddy Sampson and a delectable girl called Helen Darling are the principal players.

JEWISH POLAND TODAY

Not a propaganda or war picture but a
"HUMAN TRAVELOGUE"

THREE WEEKS AT MADISON SQUARE GARDEN

the most interesting of its kind ever brought to these shores—taken in June and July, 1920, in the 11 largest cities of Poland: Warsaw, Vilna, Grodno, Brest-Litovsk, Lublin, Radom, Kobryn, Krakow, Lemberg, Przemysl and Pinsk.

A series of six 2-reel special features

THE NEW YORK TIMES,
FRIDAY, AUGUST 27, 1920.

THE SCREEN

"The Jews in Poland," perhaps the most human travelogue ever brought to these shores, was shown to an invited audience of Jewish writers and Orthodox ministers, for the most part, in the concert hall of Madison Square Garden last night. Being pictures of cities and towns from which a large number of the Jews now in this country have emigrated, their strongest appeal will, of course, be to those Jews, who, though thousands of miles away from their native country can, by means of the screen, again look upon the streets in which they lived, the market places and little shops in which they perhaps entered and made purchases years ago, and, above all, can again clearly see their former townspeople.

It is because of this that the picture is most likely to attract large audiences. Very plainly can be seen the old Jewish men with their long coats and flowing beards; women wrinkled and bent, upon whose faces thetrials of the long years of battle can be clearly discerned, and the little children attempting to smile as they stand in long lines awaiting a cup of soup or a morsel of bread, which relief organizations distribute.

The ruined buildings in Brest-Litovsk, the citadel in Pinsk, at whose walls thirty-seven Jews were killed in a recent pogrom; a gathering of thousands in Warsaw celebrating America's Independence Day, areo nly some of the scenes in the picture. The Jewish Pictures Corporation, which shows the picture, does not attempt to weave a story around te settings, but just shows every-day life in the Polish towns shortly before the advance of the Bolsheviki.

Many tears were shed last night as persons in the audience saw again a cemetery in which perhaps their own parents lie buried, and there were many laughs when the antics of children were shown or when a pretty infant would look at her mother and smile. "The Jews in Poland" will be opened for the public beginning tomorrow night.

ONE OF THE GREATEST BOX-OFFICE ATTRACTIONS EVER PRODUCED—ESPECIALLY FOR THEATRES WITH JEWISH PATRONAGE

THE WORLD:
MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 1920.

MOTHER LOST IN WAR FOUND IN FILM HERE

New York Woman Recognizes Parent, 104, in Picture of Russian Life.

Among the hundreds of persons who attended Friday night an exhibition of a news film called "Jews in Poland To-Day," which is showing at Madison Square Garden, was Mrs. Molie Kestenbaum, aged seventy-five, of No. 521 East 12th Street, who forty years ago came from that dstressed country with her husband, Moses.

Varjous scenes of the war-torn land were screened, portraying the distress of the Jews, the destruction of their property and the conditions under which they are living as the result of the great war and the subsequent strife between the Poles and the Bolsheviki.

When pictures of Przemyzl and its inhabitants were flashed upon the screen, old Mrs. Kestenbaum and her daughter, who was with her, were particularly interested, for that was where she was born and some of the localities were still recognizable.

Finally a scene showing a home for old people came into view, and then a "close-up" of the two oldest women in the home.

Every reel is full of "heart" interest—human touches and types that must arouse the emotion of any audience. They vividly depict life in the ghettos of Eastern Europe, in a manner never seen before.

The entire population of each city is shown on the screen; scores of people at the Madison Square Garden performances recognized relatives and friends; many of your patrons will. Titles in Jewish and English.

These pictures will bring to your theatres new patrons—persons who have never attended the "movies."

WARNING—We wish to warn all exhibitors against an attempt being made to sell very inferior films taken years ago under the pretense of being the films shown at Madison Square Garden—SEE "JEWISH POLAND TODAY" before booking any of these films and you will know just why it was good for a three weeks run. It is the only authentic and complete picture of its kind ever made.

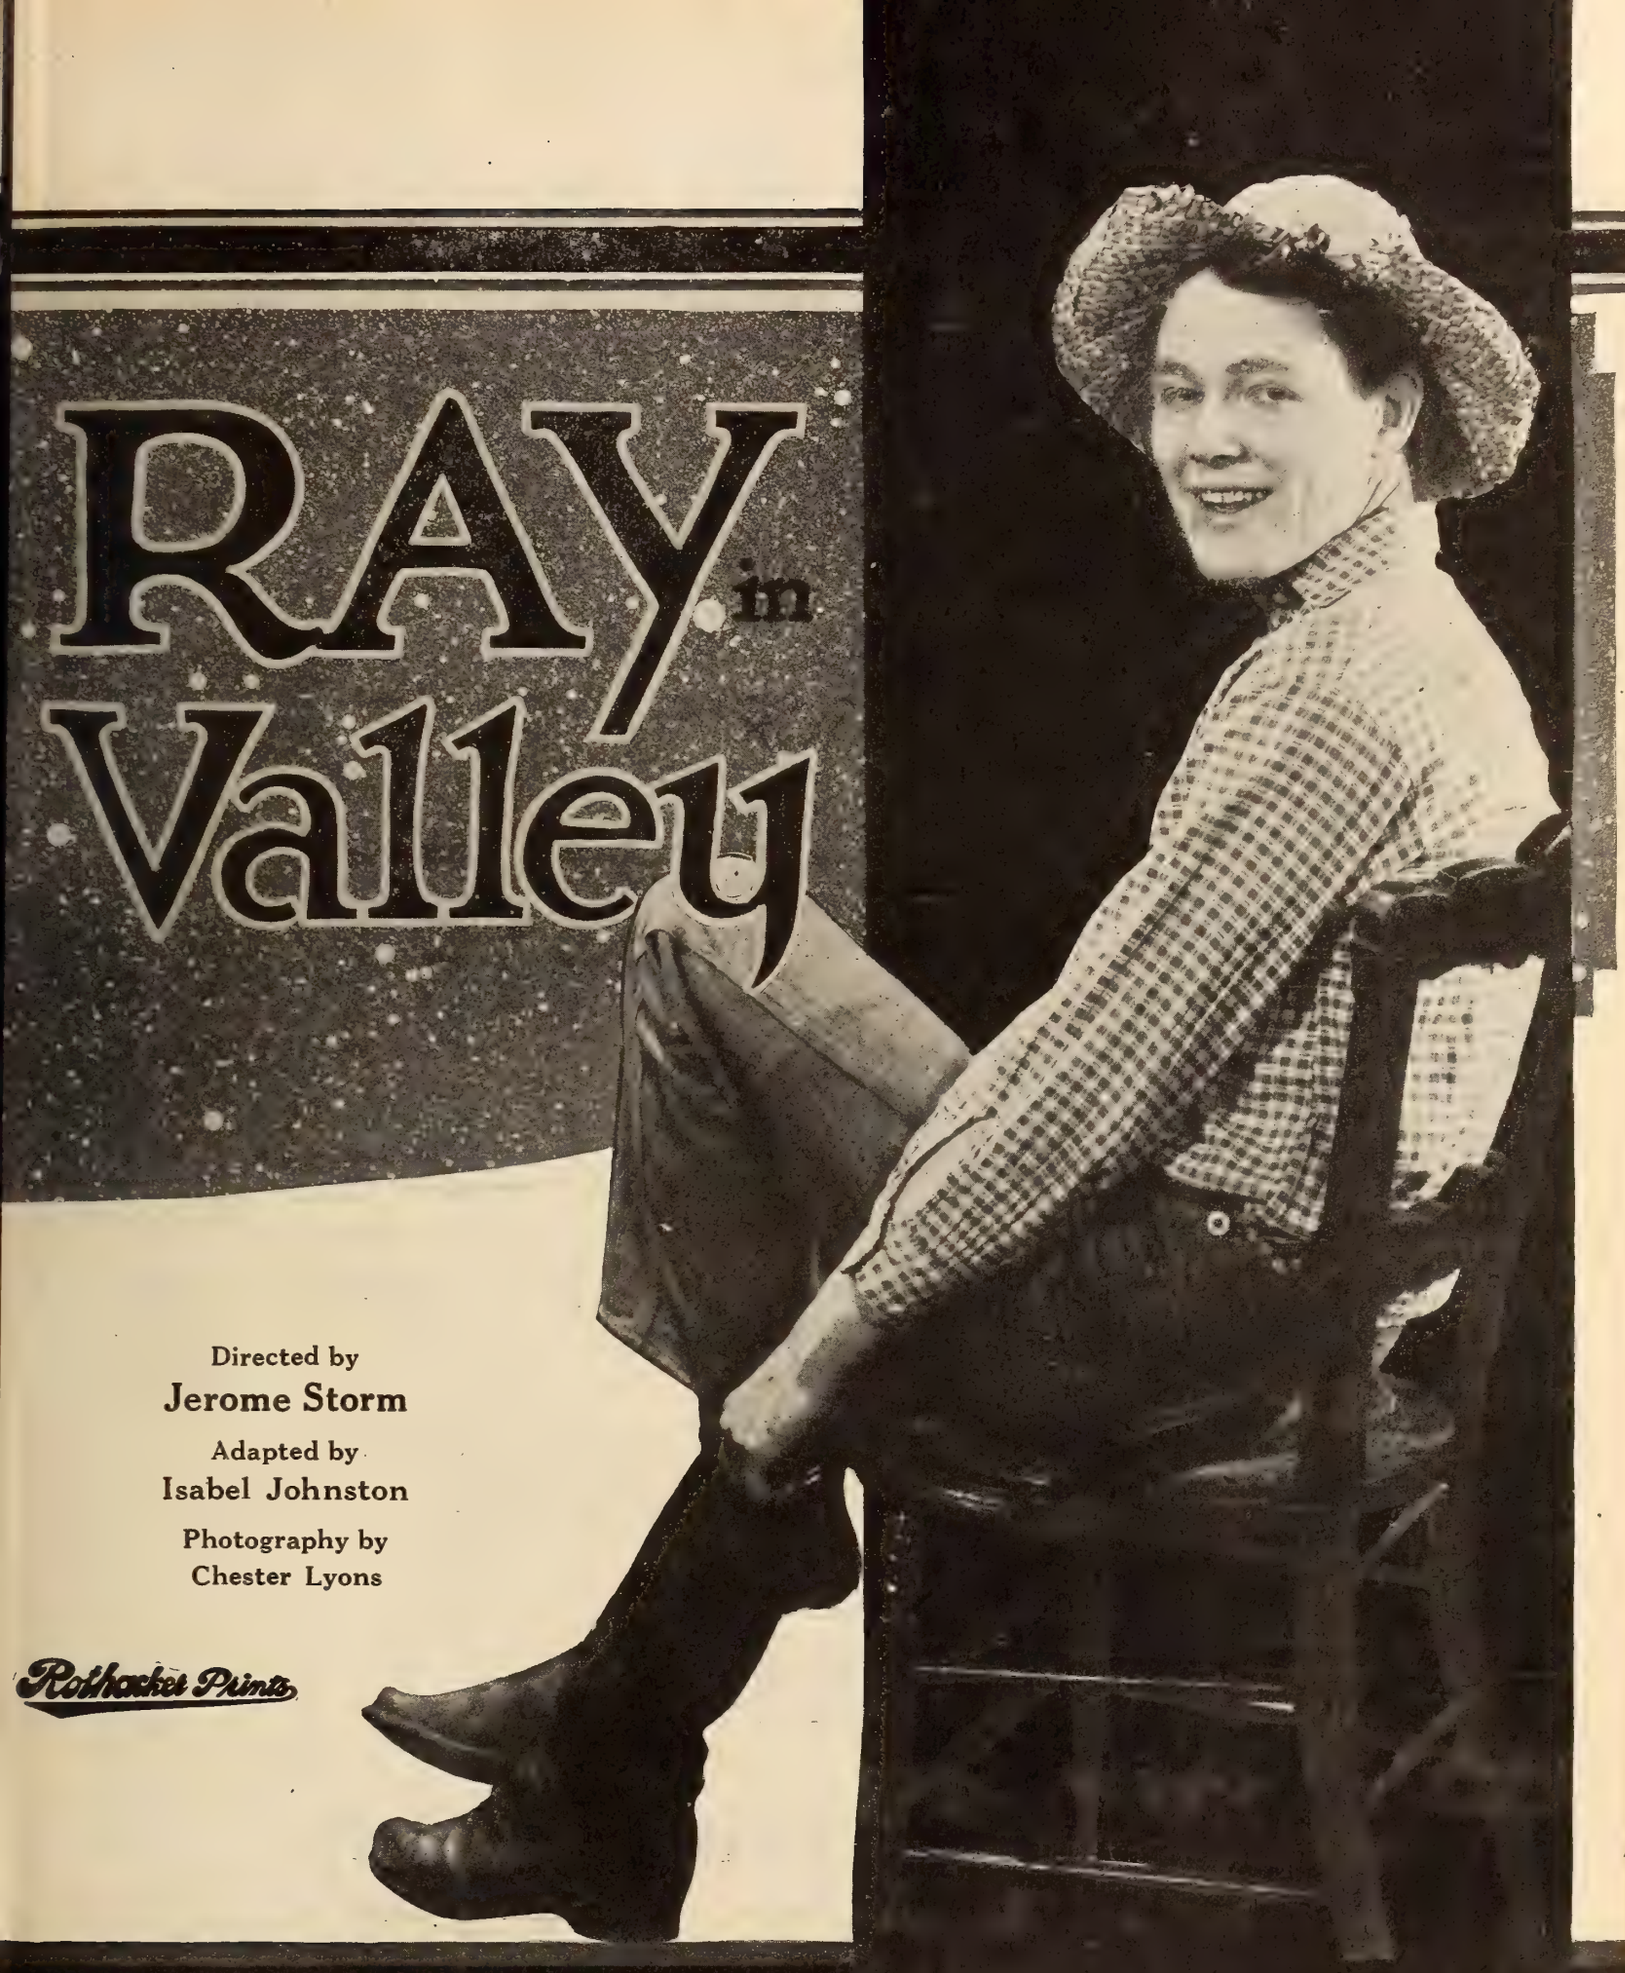
Charles Peaceful



COMES Charles Ray as the country boy in Sol Smith Russell's perennial stage success, a play that every one knows—and loves; a play that has been road showed throughout the country for thirty years; a play that no one ever tires of, and now given immortality on the screen. Even more than the stage success, they will love this comedy drama in its silver dress. Its genuine humor, its whimsies, its pathos, its tragedies, its sunshine, its tears, its humanness are emphasized as never before. Says the Photoplay Magazine, quoting the author, Edward E. Kidder: "When Charles Ray's company bought 'Peaceful Valley,' I said, 'Hooray! Here's the real Hosiah Howe come to life. To my mind Charles Ray is the natural heir to this role.' After thirty years of successful stage performance the character finds its truest interpretation with him."

The Link

A chain is no stronger than is its weakest link. The poster is the link between the public and the box-office. No matter how strong the photo-play may be,—no matter how numerous the public,—if the posters are weak the box-office receipts are disappointing.

Only RITCHEY posters make a connection between the public and the box-office that is sufficiently strong! In their conception, design and execution, not only the photo-play is taken into account. The public psychology is likewise given due consideration. As a result the RITCHEY poster appeals to,—and is understood by the masses. So much so that the maximum number of them are always impelled to buy tickets. Briefly put, the RITCHEY poster transmits an idea and consummates a sale!

It is the one sure,—safe,—strong,—connecting link between the public and the box-office!

VOL. XXII OCTOBER 2, 1920 No. XV

Signs of the Year

THIS issue carries a remarkable and significant announcement from one of the prominent producer-distributors.

Upon asking for further details we are informed that the whole proposition is given in the brief and simple contract tendered the exhibitor.

A series of pictures are offered, without advance deposit or other guarantee, to be paid for solely as the box-office returns and the exhibitor's own honor dictate.

We are also told that this move was made in response to editorials which have appeared recently in this publication—(1) those in which an urgent appeal was made for such a readjustment of the present rental system—revolutionary if necessary—as would lighten the rental burden of the smaller theatre and (2) an appeal for a new code of ethics between the exhibitor and distributor so that a basis of solid confidence could be laid under one of the big, modern industries, and one that needs sadly this sort of business foundation.

We are viewing this new trade offer only in its large aspects. There we stop. Concretely it is a business matter that does not concern us and only the business judgment of the two parties involved. But we are glad to go out of our way and raise our voice in behalf of what seems not only a wise and practical move in itself but one that also seems bound to reflect a very large good upon the entire industry. Our columns are wide open to the discussion of any similar move from any other quarter of the business.

This new trade proposition places a picture upon its actual earning value—and upon nothing else.

We have advocated some kind of a percentage arrangement so that a similar end could be achieved—and we have done so in the face of considerable exhibitor opposition and misunderstanding. This opposition arose largely from the simple fact that the exhibitor refused to show his books to the producer because he feared the latter wanted to swallow his business or coerce him in some way.

And this brings us to the second large issue involved: the exhibitors' utter lack of confidence in, his belief even in the hostility toward him of, the producing and distributing branches of the business.

This has got to cease. We welcome whole heartedly any such move as this, which apparently says to the exhibitor: You and we are partners. Our interests are identical. Let's take the goods and sell them as best they can be sold and divide the gross upon a just and fair basis.

There may be those in this business who will smirk at such a proposition. If so we wish to say that they don't know the business they're connected with—its size, dignity and future. There may be those who will say that the exhibitor isn't honest enough to do his part in such a partnership. We don't believe it. He wants honesty and he wants frankness; and as the seller of the goods to the public he deserves and needs both. Furthermore he is going, eventually, to get them; because there are and will be enough men in this industry, big enough and far-sighted enough to know that business faith and honor are the inevitable basis of all commercial credit and industrial strength and progress.

Demonstrating the Screen's Power

BY the end of this week—September 25th—over 4,000,000 Presidential straw ballots will have been distributed throughout its national theatre organization by Associated First National Pictures; and in the following weeks the returns will be announced to the public, locally, by states and territories, via the screen and press. The ballots also carry votes on the League of Nations, Prohibition and Woman's Suffrage issues.

We have often talked of the power of the screen over the press, of its singular ability to make a quick and wide appeal and secure a public response.

Now, for the first time this important fact has been demonstrated.

The results as already reported to us are interesting.

As against the Literary Digest count—considered a remarkable showing of about 400,000 votes—the screen will return several millions. A New York newspaper gives ninety-three votes as the result of one day's canvass; the Strand Theatre, Brooklyn, delivered several thousand as a result of its first matinee and evening vote. The New York and Eastern newspapers are giving front page stories to the voting results already turned in by the theatres. The National Campaign Committee are already wiring in for the returns.

The future seems to hold very large possibilities in this connection. As exhibitors become more used to the idea and the practical working of it, it will be possible, apparently, almost to decide an election or a referendum, in advance through the picture theatre.

DEALING IN PERSONALITIES

QUITE a bit of class was added to the picture business this week. Monday saw us entertaining no less a personage than Lord Beaverbrook. Considerable class, eh, what?

Adolph Zukor was host at the luncheon and he had all the cream of the industry on hand to meet his lordship. Of course, the affair was staged at the Ritz-Carlton. Where do the lowly Claridge and Astor fit in when the picture industry goes nobility hunting?

Now the rumor boys can get busy with the material offered by Lord Beaverbrook's name. The man who made considerable of an international name himself as a war figure is more than interested in motion pictures. And if all we hear is true these interests are in for still more expansion.

Last week we even went so far along the Rumor Road ourselves as to slightly hint at a coupling of the names of Pathe and Lord Beaverbrook. And we are the most conservative of film news chasers. Most.

A few reasons why increased railroad rates are unpopular:

Watterson Rothacker blew into town this week from Chicago. Returns in a few days to start for Los Angeles. Then returns after a week to Chicago, thence to New York, and off to Europe.

J. C. Jessen hangs his hat at 729 Seventh Avenue on Wednesday of this week. Purely a vacation trip so we don't mention the fact that J. C. is the fast moving Los Angeles representative of Motion Picture News.

First National's big moguls streaked the rails towards New York this week. We noted the faces of Harry Nolan, Robert Liebler, and Nathan Gordon around the Forty-eighth Street neighborhood.

WE are suffering from a recurrence of the epidemic of trying pictures on the dog. A few weeks ago the next big DeMille, "Something to Think About," was handed to Buffalo in order that the capable Harold Franklin might coach its debut.

Then Joe Lee donned the green whiskers and slipped out to Toledo, Ohio, with a print of Maurice Tourneur's "The County Fair" under his arm. S. Barrett McCormick had been chosen to preside at the natal event.

Much mystery surrounded the whole affair. No one would confess to the ownership of the picture, and at this date no person can be found to admit having bought it. It is logical to assume that someone owned the picture when it left for Toledo, and following its successful premiere under the combined tutelage of McCormick and Lee, it is safe to figure that someone has bought it.

Dark mystery!

Guess we'll have to wait for Joe to take off the "erin go brogans." 'Tis said that the great exposure act will be staged this week. Joe will probably appear at the office with a page of ad copy announcing that Whoozis has purchased the sensationally successful "County Fair." Backed up with the war tax figures. They say they're great.

Joe might even make it two pages for the NEWS when he realizes all the idle space we've given his picture here.

Another picture goes out of town this week. Someone tells us that Bill Rudolph has been engaged to take "The Woman in His House" down to see the sights of Baltimore. We'll guarantee that Bill treats her right.

Notice: Advertisers preparing inserts are requested to note on their schedules that the requirements of Motion Picture News are now 11,800. Put the figure down now—11,800.

There was a meeting of the Hearst Boosters Band and Torch Light Paraders in the Astor lobby on Monday of this week. Edward McManus presided, and Theodore Dietrich took up the credentials. George Gould passed the hat.

Eddie is now acting as escort on the occasion of Collier's debut in motion pictures. A capable chaperon, we say.

Harry Lucas kindly drops Fred Beecroft a line to say that his Atlanta office recently received an order for a motor drive from far-off Canada—and the writer said, "I saw your ad in Motion Picture News." Thus are Fred's dark days made cheerful.

Archie McArthur is in town renewing Astor acquaintances. Added to his own cheerful personality, Archie now has all the air of a magnate. We bet we'll be interviewing him one of these days. Just think of the heights a trade paper can rise to. Good luck to you, Mac! And then some!

WE don't suppose we should inflict our personal joys on the readers of this page but nevertheless we are going to steal a few lines of ten point to say that no event of the week gave us more joy than the smashing hit of "Over the Hill to the Poorhouse."

For two reasons. First, because Bill Fox has added another bull's-eye to his fall string, thus bearing out an advance tip we have been slipping to all who would listen ever since Arthur James whispered it to us and Vivian Moses confirmed it. Some of them wouldn't believe us when we told them that Fox, working quietly, thinking more of story and picture than of star, had stowed enough stuff up his sleeves during the summer months to make 'em all sit up this season. Now he's proving it.

Our second reason for cheer is the personal triumph of Harry Millarde, director of the feature. Like every other animal in and near the festive films, we have our privately touted list of "comers." And Millarde has been one of ours since the Kalem days when Marshall Neilan, Bob Vignola and many others of the select drew their checks from Frank Marion.

We know another list Harry Millarde has been on all this time. It's that of Bill Kalem Vitagraph Wright. How about it, Bill?

Sam Zierler, the Commonwealth head, has the sympathy of the industry on the loss of his infant son on September 15.

Cleveland must have made a hit with the exhibitor organization. Delegates are now being chosen at the various state conventions for a national convention scheduled for November. And Cleveland is announced as the place.

Wots this? From the table of contents for Kinograms release No. 74A we read this introductory title: "Neysa McMein and James Quirk try to decide the winner of the Mayflower beauty contest." Now, Jimmy!

Arvid Gillstrom introduced us this week to a regular fellow in the person of R. S. Mitchell, of Westart Pictures, Tulsa, Oklahoma. Bre'er Mitchell is in town casting and making other arrangements for a series of two-reel Westerns.

W. G. Hartford, of the Imperial theatre, Pawtucket, R. I., was a visitor to the News office this week.

P. B. Dana, sales manager of the Arrow Film Corporation, left on the Twentieth Century Friday, September 24, for Chicago and Kansas City on important business for the Arrow.

Three of Grauman's Staff on Coast Resign

Arthur Day, conductor of Grauman's symphony orchestra; Jesse Crawford, organist, and Ted Leberthon, director of publicity, have resigned from the Grauman staff, a special dispatch from Los Angeles announces. Day's resignation came about because of differences arising between him and Sid Grauman relative to certain numbers of the Sunday musical program, while Leberthon and Crawford are leaving the staff out of sympathy for Day.

Arthur Wenzel, former manager and publicity director of the Superba theatre, will succeed Leberthon and Henry B. Murtagh will take Crawford's place at the organ. It is reported that a well known musical director from Portland will succeed Day.

MacAlarney Sails to Take Post in England

Robert E. MacAlarney, formerly scenario editor of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, left Saturday on the Cunard liner Caronia for London, where he will take up the duties of his new position, that of production manager for Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd. On the same ship sailed Roswell Dague, formerly eastern production editor of Famous Players-Lasky, who recently was granted an extended leave of absence.

Sam Atkinson Visiting in Eastern Cities

Sam Atkinson, business manager of the Allied Amusements Association, is visiting eastern cities, including New York, Philadelphia, Washington, and others, investigating the work of exhibitor organizations with the view to finding features which may be utilized to the advantage of the Chicago association.

Lois Weber with Famous

LOIS WEBER, woman screen director and the author and producer of the biggest features emerges from a several months' silence this week with the announcement of a contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to produce four super-specials which will surpass anything she has ever attempted.

Miss Weber has two of her contracted productions practically completed and is expecting to start work immediately on the third. The two specials which will be ready for the market soon will be entitled "What Do Men Want?" and "To Please One Woman," both original stories from Miss Weber's pen and both constructed on themes which will have universal appeal. Just which of these productions will be released first has not yet been decided, but an announcement from the Paramount offices is expected shortly.

Lazarus Presides for First Time at A.M.P.A. Lunch

The well known face of Paul Gulick, publicity director for the Big-U, was missing in the picture at last Thursday's regular meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, and in his place at the head of the table sat Paul Lazarus, recently made sales promotion manager for the United Artists, and also recently elected president of the A. M. P. A.

President Lazarus announced the following committees, who will wear the yoke of bondage for the ensuing year: Entertainment Committee: Tom Wiley, chairman; Paul Serazan, George Landy, J. Irving Greene, H. Phyfe. Publicity Committee: Mark Larkin, chairman; Ben Grimm, Al Feinman. Ball Committee: Jerry Beatty, chairman; Tom Wiley, Harry Reichenbach, George Landy, Burton Rice. Speakers' Committee: Bert Adler, chairman; Harry Poppe, M. Ryskind. Finance and Auditing: E. O. Brooks, chairman; Hopp Hadley, P. B. Dana. Bulletin Editor, September, Vic Shapiro.

Round Up of Exhibitors for Cincinnati Convention

Special delivery letters will be sent out at once to all exhibitors in the Southern Ohio, Indiana, and Northern Kentucky territory, urging them to attend the exhibitors' convention to be held in Cincinnati, at the Hotel Gibson, October 7 and 8, according to a wire just received from Sidney Cohen, president of the Theatre Owners of America, by I. W. McMahan, president of the Greater Cincinnati Exhibitors' League. Several hundred exhibitors are expected to attend the meeting, which was called for the purpose of considering a number of problems now affecting the industry. At a meeting of the committee handling the convention it was decided to arrange an entertainment program which will probably include a boat ride on the Ohio, a visit to the Latonia Races, and a theatre party. Arrangements have been made to secure a speaker from the East, well posted on conditions, to address the convention.

Trade's Attention Called to Labor's Attitude

At the annual meeting of the Board of Directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry held in New York, September 15, 1920, a resolution was unanimously adopted providing that the attention of the entire trade should be directed to certain resolutions expressing the sentiment that prevails among the laboring men regarding pictures which they claim are detrimental to the interests of their organizations and that it should be the policy of the motion picture industry to stand neutral.

The American Federation of Labor adopted at Montreal a resolution which branded the screen as "an instrument of misrepresentation in the campaign against labor and labor organizations." A similar resolution was adopted at New York by the Central Federated Union.

United Artists President Abroad on Business

Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists Corporation, sailed for Europe during the past week. His trip is primarily concerned with the foreign distribution of the "Big Four" pictures and he plans a rather extensive personal survey of European distributing methods. It is expected that Mr. Abrams will be abroad two to three months.

Gubernatorial Candidate Opposes Censorship

Thomas H. Hardwick, candidate for Governor in a run-over race in Georgia, came before the Film Exchange Managers' Association, and the Exhibitors of the Southeast, last week, and expressed himself as unalterably opposed to the suppression of free speech, and free expression as implied in the screen.

Strike Makes Omaha Theatres Musicless

Union Musicians' Lockout Follows Their Demands for 60 Per Cent Increase

OMAHA motion picture theatres have been without orchestral and organ music since September 1 due to a lockout of union musicians following their demands for a flat increase of 60 per cent in wages. All efforts of mediators to effect a compromise have been without avail. Electric piano players have been installed in the Strand, Rialto, Sun and Moon theatres with no marked change in receipts.

Theatre managers have offered the musicians an increase of 43 per cent in wages over their last scale of $35 a week for side men and $60 for leaders of orchestras. This offer has been rejected with the Musicians' Union staunchly declining to return to the pits unless their demands are met with. Speaking for the Theatre Managers' Association, Harry Goldberg, manager of the Sun theatre; John Leveridge, manager of the Rialto theatre; Harry Watts of the Strand, and S. R. Ballantyne of the Moone, based their offer of a 43 per cent increase upon the scale now being paid union musicians at Des Moines, Ia.; Kansas City, Mo.; Denver, Colo., and Minneapolis, Minn.

Another point in a compromise offered the musicians was a flat salary of $50 a week to side men and $75 a week to orchestra leaders and organists, with Monday afternoon of each week free from duty. This a committee from the Musicians' Union rejected. Ralph Kovesey, secretary of the Musicians' Union in Omaha, said: "We are only asking a just wage. We find we cannot live on $35 a week and our demands are only justified."

Theatre managers hold that inasmuch as the musicians play but three and one-half hours a day and have incomes from other sources, their demands are out of the question. The theatre men also realize the importance of music with pictures, but hesitate to "allow the public to be the goat," as they explained in a space-ad in Omaha newspapers. Incidentally, the Musicians' Union made their plea before the public through the means of a space-ad also. Many of the musicians now on strike have taken up other positions.

Under the direction of A. H. Blank the Rialto and the Strand theatres have presented vocal numbers to their patrons. A calliope in the lobby of the theatre was also put in use as a ballyhoo. An idea was also worked out to parade an automobile through the downtown streets bearing the calliope in the tonneau. At the same time a banner displaying the title of the picture at the Rialto theatre was used as an advertising medium.

A singing quartette is also on the program at the Rialto theatre.

Until either the Musicians' Union or the theatre managers give in to one another it is vouched by good authority that motion picture theatres in Omaha will be without orchestral or organ music.

"Cohen Must Answer Questions"—Rembusch

Letter to Head of Exhibitor Organization Arises from Indiana Convention

IN a letter to Sydney Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, written by Frank Rembusch, it is openly declared that Mr. Cohen will not be welcome at the coming Indiana State Exhibitors' convention. Mr. Rembusch's letter also contains some accusations against President Cohen which date back to the Cleveland convention in June. The letter follows:

"Dear Sydney:—

"You are taking quite a chance in inviting yourself to attend the Indiana State Exhibitors' convention next week, because you would have some things to answer.

"For example: Why did your machine publicly order Charles Olsen to get out of the Cleveland convention?

"Mr. Olsen is our foremost exhibitor, has a million dollars or more invested in theatres, a first run competitor of mine, but a very good friend and a prince of a good fellow all around. Why should not he be seated? Your infallible self-appointed credential committee allowed a fellow who signed a card, Myth theatre, to be seated when he really had a myth theatre.

"There were others who paid five dollars and remained. You stated that Mr. Olsen was a member of Associated Exhibitors, therefore should be investigated as to his connection with the film business. Where do you draw the line? According to your rule, almost every exhibitor would be ineligible, because of their affiliation with United Pictures, First National, National Pictures, etc., etc., etc.

"Mr. Olsen, Mr. Black and other exhibitors came to Cleveland because they were assured on my invitation that the three national organizations in existence would be amalgamated into one.

"You must remember that I caused you to sign an agreement at the meeting of the Committee of Seventeen, in New York, one week before the Cleveland convention, 'that all three organizations would receive the same consideration on committees, etc.' On this written agreement we went into your convention.

"On the strength of your signed agreement, I insisted that Mr. Black come to Cleveland, and you took the first opportunity to publicly insult him by ordering him out of his seat. The press does not seem to know these facts, together with many other things that should be aired for the sake of harmony. Why don't you tell all of these things to clarify matters? You repudiated your written agreement and who would care to listen to your conversations?

"Another thing. Last spring, when I was trying to straighten out the fight between yourself and Mr. Black, Mr. Linton invited me to the meeting of New York State Exhibitors of Utica, and as national secretary I felt it my duty to accept. You then sent word that I was not welcome; that I would not fit into your New York convention. Let me take occasion to return the compliment. I am sure you will not fit into the Indiana convention, so please remain away. There would be just as much effort to prevent your speaking as your machine put forth in trying to keep me from speaking at Cleveland.

"Some of these days I am going to make my report of the Committee of Seventeen. There are a lot of things that should be aired for the sake of harmony. A certain part of the story as to panhandling will be interesting and I will want you to read it, as it will be a surprise how I know about your alleged attempt to profiteer through the presidency. Just as soon as I get a little time from directing my eleven theatres I will shoot.

"As ever,

"FRANK REMBUSCH."

Black's Detailed Reply Next Week

In response to an inquiry from Motion Picture News, Alfred S. Black on September 23, wired that he would make full reply to the charges made at the recent meeting of exhibitors, during the next week. "Procuring affidavits. Detailed reply made next week," was the text of Black's wire.

First National's Straw Vote Starts with Interest Running High

Public Attention Centered on Balloting; Newspapers Co-operate

THE Presidential Straw Vote being conducted this week in motion picture theatres throughout the country under the auspices of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., is attracting even wider public attention than even the interest displayed during the allocation of ballots portended. The National organizations of both parties have been interested in the results through the personal secretaries of the presidential candidates of the Republican and Democratic parties. Reports from those theatres which arranged to have representatives of the two parties preside over the balloting and the counting of the votes are to the effect that the event is establishing itself as the greatest educational factor that has ever been injected into a national campaign.

The balloting started on Sunday in those theatres which are open on that day. Those which are affected by blue laws or other reasons for not running seven days a week opened their ballot boxes on Monday. With the exception of a few theatres in the larger cities, the ballot boxes will remain sealed until the close of the voting on Saturday night. For the purpose of meeting requests of newspapers, arrangements were made so that a few theatres in the key cities of the country, including the Strand in New York and the Strand in Brooklyn, would count their ballots twice daily and announce the results immediately.

The many uncertainties entering into the present campaign, which have made the task of estimating sentiment in the country more puzzling than in perhaps any preceding election, turned the attention of politicians everywhere to the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., straw vote as being a non-partisan means of getting a line upon the trend of the voters' sentiment a month before election.

A special force of supervisors and clerical help at First National offices has had charge of the vast bulk of work entailed in the distribution of ballots and the publicity branch which supplied information and helps to the exhibitors in directing their local conduct of the undertaking was necessarily augmented during the sending out of the ballot material. The tally sheets, immediately upon the close of the week's vote, will be mailed to the New York office by the theatres throughout the country, and following that all used ballot forms will be forwarded to the head office to be held against any recount that may be desired. The attention of all participating exhibitors is specially requested to this sending in of the ballot bundles after the local count, and particularly the prompt return of the tally sheet immediately following the close of the count and the filling in of the figures.

INITIAL reports from the Ballot Headquarters of Associated First National show that Harding has apparently got the edge on his opponent, and that Woman's Suffrage is strong in popular favor. New York City, the count at the Strand theatres in Manhattan and Brooklyn shows, belongs to Harding. The count showed 8,267 for the Republican and 3,500 for Cox. New York also wants Woman's Suffrage, and is only mildly in favor of light wines and beer. Entrance into the League of Nations was beaten badly. In Vincennes, Ind., and Columbus, O., the returns showed a substantial lead for Harding.

The eagerness displayed by some of the really big newspapers to co-operate with First National in their straw vote is taken as a strong indorsement of the project. Papers like the Cincinnati Enquirer, at Cincinnati, and the Ohio State Journal of Columbus, two of the leading publications in the middle west, are co-operating, arrangements having been made by Will A. Clark, First National publicity man at Cincinnati for tie-ups, with each newspaper for the handling of the result from Ohio cities every day during the week of the poll.

Edward Hyman, manager of the Strand theatre in Brooklyn, got the jump on other exhibitors in getting publicity for his theatre through the opportunity offered by the straw vote. The final count for the afternoon showed that 1,824 people had registered opinions. Brooklyn is in Kings County, New York State, which was recently torn by a hotly contested Republican primary fight for the gubernatorial nomination, which may have had something to do with the following results: Harding, 1,312; Cox, 512. Against the League of Nations, 1,422; for, 402. For light wines and beer, 1,019; for absolute prohibition, 805. For woman suffrage, 1,701; against, 99.

Fourth day of nationwide straw vote shows returns from Indiana favor Harding.

The result of the first day of balloting at the Moon theatre in Vincennes, Ind., gave Harding 113, Cox 91. Entry of the United States into the League of Nations was favored by 61 and 96 were against it, and 140 favored permitting the sale of light wines and beer with 39 against it, and 102 voted for woman suffrage, while 81 were against it. Three days of balloting at the Colonial theatre, Columbus, Ohio, gives Harding 1,491 and Cox 903.

The night's balloting at the Olympia theatre in New Haven of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., brought the totals to Harding 1,422, Cox 481; for the League of Nations 484, against 1,090; for light wines and beer 1,330, against 399; for woman suffrage 1,105, against 501.

New York City's vote polled at the Strand theatre in Manhattan and at the Strand theatre in Brooklyn totals Harding 8,267, Cox 3,533; for the League of Nations 3,816, against 7,190; for light wines and beers 6,848, against 4,352; for woman suffrage 8,941, against 2,138.

AN APPRECIATION:

¶ William Fox has scored a triumph in "Over the Hill to the Poor House."

For realism, for deep sincerity, for true emotional appeal, for fine characterization and casting, for careful handling throughout, and for its utter lack of strain and artificiality, this picture has never been exceeded by any other; and in some respects it stands alone.

¶ Here, at last, is a picture which does not lean upon any other art nor upon a star's name. It is a motion picture. Just an old-fashioned, household poem has been taken and through motion photography has been evolved a gripping drama of real folks and faces, real scenes and doings, real heart-throbs centering about the finest, deepest, universal love—that of a mother for her children.

¶ It is a great pleasure to give this spontaneous praise. The picture is reviewed in this issue.

Smith Returns from Coast

Albert E. Smith

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, has returned to New York City after a quick trip to his Los Angeles studios, where he spent a busy two weeks. Wilfrid North, for some years director general of Vitagraph's eastern studio, went west with Mr. Smith and was established in a like position under General Manager W. S. Smith at the Hollywood plant.

While on the Coast Mr. Smith signed a new contract with Chester Bennett, by the terms of which Mr. Bennett confines himself exclusively to the direction of Earle Williams.

W. S. Smith, general manager, will continue as before to maintain general supervision over the plant and its business administration, together with passing on each foot of film that goes out of the studio.

Albert E. Smith arranged for the fall and winter production, inspected the new improvements and completed a general production schedule of serials. While there he also made the formal announcement that Antonio Moreno would be seen in feature productions at the conclusion of his current serial, "The Veiled Mystery."

Enter the Special Agency for Music Features

This week there is an important article telling about the newest kind of distributing agency—an exchange to send out musical features. See Page 2693

Tom McNamara New Editor of Paramount Magazine

Tom McNamara, newspaper cartoonist and originator of "Skinny Shaner" and other popular characters, has been engaged by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as editor of the Paramount Magazine.

In addition to his newspaper cartoon work, Mr. McNamara is a veteran of the film business and has been largely responsible for the success of several well known feature productions.

Producing Corporations May Locate in Atlanta

There are rumors afloat in Georgia that a two million dollar producing corporation is on the look-out for an acceptable studio site in Georgia. The information emanated from the "Advertise Georgia" enterprise, which is to raise a fund of $300,000 to exploit Georgia.

The company, which, it is said, is headed by Healey Brothers, the capitalists who are financing the company, has looked most favorably on Atlanta as a site, and it is believed that within the next six weeks actual work on the studio will begin. There is a possibility that Savannah will win out, owing to her many artistic homes, historic ruins, and access to the water.

Atlanta Film Men Will Honor Newspaperman

The Film Exchange Managers' Association, of Atlanta, Ga., representing practically the entire film industry of the southeast, will give a banquet on October 11th, in honor of James B. Nevin, of the Atlanta Georgian and Hearst's Sunday American. The committee of five, who are in charge of the affair, is a comprehensive representation of the largest film exchanges and theatres in the territory. George Allison, of Fox, is chairman, while the others in the committee are J. R. Simpson, of Paramount-Artcraft; John Ezzell, of E. & H.; Frank Hammond, of the Lynch Enterprises, and Willard C. Patterson, of the Criterion theatre.

Special Showing Demands Two Theatres

A precedent is being established with the special pre-release showing of the Harry Levey Productions feature release, "Uncle Sam of Freedom Ridge," on Sunday evening, by reason of the fact that it has been found necessary to secure two theatres for the same evening to take care of the number of persons who have made requisitions for tickets for the occasion.

It was found impossible to accommodate all in the Selwyn theatre alone, and Mr. Levey therefore secured the Cohan and Harris theatre for the same evening.

How to Present the Opera "Carmen"

Charles D. Isaacson, the NEWS music editor, presents this week his own plan of giving the famous opera, either in overture, selection of medley, or in the way of the Capitol theatre plan.

Alliance Film Corporation Denies False Rumors

W. Walter Grotch, vice-president of the Alliance Film Corporation of Great Britain, who recently arrived in America, characterized as ridiculous the report that appeared in a theatrical trade paper to the effect that a committee of stockholders of his company had demanded an accounting. There was, it is said, a meeting of a few stockholders caused by a false rumor that the company had stopped production.

The report recently published in a newspaper article that the corporation had bought the British Actors' Film Company for £170,000 is also said to be false.

"Gentlemen:

"Will say I could not get along without the NEWS. Your reviews are worth the price many times over. I have a small house in a small town and have been in the business off and on for about four years, and I suppose I am getting on about as well as most of them are. As to service I give the best I can afford.

"I use Fox, Paramount and Consolidated service for regular features. Will say all have given very fair treatment. I think a lot of trouble with the small fellows is they don't keep informed as well as they might; that is one reason they get skinned so much. WATCH YOUR BOOKINGS—DON'T LET THEM PULL IT OVER YOU. Know as much about the pictures as the salesmen know. Know what your patrons want and let them know you have it. PUSH YOUR BUSINESS—GIVE GOOD SERVICE and nine times out of ten you win. "Little Fellow Pays"

Motion Picture News,
New York, N. Y.
Gentlemen:

Enclosed please find my check for subscription to the News. I have been reading with much interest your recent editorials dealing with the rentals of the small town exhibitor compared with the first run city houses. I believe you hit the nail on the head when you state that the little fellow is carrying the lion's share of the load when it comes to rentals. I have been and always will be willing to pay every cent a picture is worth, for I realize that the producer must make a good margin of profit in order to make the kind of pictures that we want, but when they come to us little fellows and talk big figures they are slowly but surely digging their own graves.

I will bet a dollar to a doughnut that I am paying ten to twenty times more for some of my pictures than is being paid by the big houses, taking the gross receipts as a basis of figuring. I say "some" of my pictures, for I have found a few of the exchange managers who are human.

Before this industry can grow and become a full-grown business built upon the stones of sound business principles there must be some changes, as to which one of these must be a better regard; a more real sympathetic feeling, for the little exhibitor. I think as a rule you will find the little fellow is game to the core (far more than many of the big ones) and is willing to go as far as the next one when it comes to paying fair and square rentals.

Yours very truly,
EARL M. FORSYTHE,

Kansas Exhibitors Ready for Convention

Three Hundred Expected at Opening Session on Sept. 27; to Attack "Blue Sunday"

FULLY three hundred Kansas exhibitors are expected to attend the convention which will open at Kansas City on September 27 and 28, in the Chamber of Commerce Building. One of the goals of the exhibitors will be the revocation of the Kansas Sunday closing law. They will, it is reported, draw up proper resolutions which would rescind the law and present them to the State Legislature in January. Besides this question, which will probably be the paramount issue, the exhibitors of the Kansas Association are expected to subscribe $3,000 as their quota to the national fund of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

The program of the two-day convention is as follows: Meeting at the Chamber of Commerce Building at nine o'clock, to be followed by registration and caucus. A theatre party will be held in the evening at the Gayety theatre, Kansas City, Mo. On September 28 a regular business meeting will be held at nine o'clock. Choosing of delegates to attend the national convention to be held at Cleveland, Ohio, on November 4th, will follow. Subscriptions to the national association will then be made. There will be addresses by Sam Bergman, Fred J. Harrington, of Pittsburgh, Kan., and Morton Van Praag, secretary of the Kansas organization. Following the passing of resolutions there will be talks by Governor Henry Allen of Kansas, Senator Charles Ridgeway and Richard Hopkins, attorney general of Kansas. Election of offices will conclude the convention.

Casting a periscopic eye over the political situation of Kansas and discounting some of the minor issues and local conflicts in the field, an observer would find among the leading questions, the settlement of which will tend to control the election of representatives to the Legislature this fall, the question of the Sunday closing law as it effects motion picture theatres.

Although there is to be no special election to decide whether the closing law for Sunday will be repealed, the question will really be put to a test in the fall election.

For many years Kansas, as a result of a blue sky law enacted long ago, has not had Sunday motion picture theatres. The law is the object of attack of exhibitors in Kansas because the exhibitors hold that it is a detriment to their industry. The development of the motion picture industry in the Sunflower state has been impeded by the Sunday closing law and therefore should be abolished, exhibitors at previous conventions declared.

In the whole of Kansas there are but three of the largest cities which do not observe the Sunday closing law. They are Kansas City, Kan., regarded as part of Kansas City, Mo., and of "Greater Kansas City"; Atchison and Leavenworth.

R. G. Liggett, president of the Kansas State Exhibitors' Association, declared recently that the Sunday closing law of Kansas is a "mossback law, and should be repealed."

Michigan Exhibitors Will Hold Convention

Enthusiastic Meeting Expected at Lansing on October 5 and 6

IMPORTANT matters pertaining to exhibitors' defense and general organization of the Association are to be effected by the Michigan Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association convention, which is scheduled to take place October 5 and 6 at Lansing, Michigan, and every effort is being made to bring out a full attendance.

Enthusiasm is at its height in so far as organization is concerned. Never before in the history of Michigan has there been the feeling so favorable for organization as that which exists today.

In the past every effort on the part of the State Association leaders to bring Michigan exhibitors together on a common basis has met with only indifferent success because, it is believed, no important matters having a direct bearing on the exhibitors' general welfare had come to the surface so forcibly as they have at the present time.

For that reason, the meeting at Lansing, October 5 and 6, is being confidently looked forward to as the biggest and most effective gathering a state body ever participated in. Every exhibitor in the state has received personal letters from the home office of the Association, urging him to lay aside his duties at home for the time being and to take an active part in the questions that are to be threshed out on the floor at the state capitol.

Among the many vital matters that are to be taken up during the convention are the continuance of plans to defeat censorship, legalize Sunday opening, the deposit system, equitable contracts, reduction in taxation, fair film rentals and elimination of the music tax. Besides these points, efforts will be made to so solidify the Association already formed that the exhibitors of the state really will be a single unit in every Association action.

The Michigan organization has already accomplished many big results of extreme importance to the exhibitors and it is believed that these will form the biggest and best membership boom possible when the showmen gather in Lansing. Executive heads of the Michigan Association are out after 100 per cent membership, and with rapid strides being made every day, there is little question, they say, but that the Lansing meeting will put the Association over the top on the required number of members.

Unlike other conventions in the past, it is planned to make the Lansing gathering a straight out-and-out business session from beginning to end, so that no valuable time will be lost to the exhibitor. The questions before the meeting will be put up as rapidly as possible, committees appointed and immediate action demanded.

The Michigan Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association has just completed a victorious fight at the polls by proving of material assistance in nominating Thomas Read on the Republican ticket for Lieutenant-Governor. Read, who in past public positions has been friendly to the picture industry, was attacked for his stand during the campaign and the Michigan exhibitors, through the Association, jumped to his defense. They poured a barrage of propaganda on their screens in behalf of their candidate and made his victory a veritable landslide.

By virtue of the co-operation extended in this campaign, the executives of the Association pin their faith, because of the confidence shown in the Association by having taken concerted action.

Invitations have been extended to Sidney S. Cohen, J. Groesbeck, Republican nominee for Governor; Thomas Read, Republican nominee for Lieutenant-Governor, and others, all of whom have accepted the invitations to be in attendance.

Educational Not To Drop "Babe" Ruth Suit

Hammons Intends to Continue Action Against Home Run King and Producers

FOLLOWING the decision of Justice Guy in the New York Supreme Court last week, denying the application of the Yankee Photoplay Company, Kessel and Bauman and "Babe" Ruth for an injunction to prevent the advertising and distribution of it's picture, "Babe Ruth—How He Knocks His Home Runs," Educational Films Corporation announced this week that the case was by no means at an end and that it intended to press the suit that it has brought against Ruth, Kessel and Bauman, and the Yankee Company.

President E. W. Hammons says in his statement: "In the course of the conduct of our business of distributing what we regard as the best of one and two reel subjects we acquired from the Science Film Company a single reel picture which had as it's main feature the portrayal of "Babe" Ruth in the act of batting, in hitting, striking out and knocking home runs. It was the product of both the ordinary motion picture photography and the slow motion camera. This camera actually showed, and in detail, what we advertised it to show: 'Babe Ruth—How He Knocks His Home Runs.'

"We did not take over this picture without understanding fully the circumstances under which it was made—in an actual game between the New York and Cleveland teams, and that it was made with the expressly written permission of Colonel Jacob Ruppert, president of the New York American Baseball Company, employer of Mr. Ruth, who was paying him to do actually what we showed in the picture.

"Just how much Mr. Ruth interested himself in this picture is a matter that will come up in the trial of the case, but the main point is that we did not need the permission of Mr. Ruth as the New York Supreme Court has just held.

"After five years of successful business and unquestioned integrity Educational Films Corporation would not be expected to announce a picture under any name than an exact and proper description of it's content and with full appreciation of it's rights.

"During these five years we have observed on the part of some others in the same industry a tendency to make statements without fully realizing their import —and often without stopping to consider their truth,—sometimes with deliberate intent to falsify.

"In the course of the application for an injunction against us the Yankee Photoplay Company, Kessel and Bauman and Babe Ruth brought suit against us for $1,000,000. We have wanted to be very sure that this element would not be lost sight of with the decision of the injunction proceedings in our favor and therefore we have ourselves begun action against these parties for $250,000 for questioning the integrity of this organization.

"Whatever may become of the action instituted against us we want to assure exhibitors that we will bring to an issue the statement made in advertising in trade papers that this particular picture released through us is "fraudulent," and that we are determined to protect the confidence that exhibitors have always had in every announcement we have made.

"Educational Films Corporation and its distributing organization, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., prefer to leave exaggeration and misrepresentation to others. But at the same time it does not mean to be content to allow these others to make such statements concerning our pictures and allow the legal responsibilities to be forgotten because some measure of unfortunate, and so far as we are concerned, improper publicity matures.

"The New York Supreme Court has refused to stop this picture. It has decided that it is not "fraudulent." We will now permit the gentlemen who so stated to prove this to the country's exhibitors on our own action."

Collier's to Have Motion Picture Section

Edward MacManus Placed in Charge of New Department in Well-Known Magazine

WITH its issue of September 25th Collier's Magazine announces the establishment of a motion picture department in conjunction with its editorial department as an extension of its publishing activities. The publication is one of the units of the Crowell Publishing Company, which also controls the American Magazine and the Woman's Home Companion.

Collier's prints an edition of over one million, one hundred thousand copies every seven days, or a circulation of about five million copies every month. The American Magazine has a circulation of over one million, five hundred thousand copies, and the Woman's Home Companion about one million, four hundred thousand. The circulation resources, therefore, of the Crowell Publishing Company are around eight million copies monthly.

There is no suggestion of pictures to be produced by Collier's or the other Crowell publications. The importance of this, and the possible benefits to the motion picture industry cannot be over-estimated, and it indicates an alliance with the industry as a whole, rather than an effort for profits exclusively.

As a publishing house Collier's is one of the largest of its kind in the world. It has thirty-one branches and fifty subbranches, in which they have over four hundred salesmen. In this respect, they closely resemble the exchange system of the Famous Players, First National, Goldwyn, Pathe, and other leading film distributors.

An important part of Collier's announcement is that Edward A. MacManus has been engaged as director of the motion picture department, and will have the supervision of its activities. Mr. MacManus has had a wide range of experience in the motion picture field, dating back to 1912, when he originated and developed the motion picture serial plan, and was responsible for the creation of "What Happened to Mary," "The Perils of Pauline," "The Exploits of Elaine," "The Goddess," "Patria," and many other pictures.

He was responsible for the big campaigns introducing Pearl White, Irene Castle, Arnold Daly, Anita Stewart, Ralph Ince, Burr McIntosh, Lionel Barrymore, Warner Oland and Sheldon Lewis, and for a number of years was in charge of the motion picture interests of William Randolph Hearst, and of the serial department of Famous Players-Lasky.

As manager of Hearst's International News Service and syndicate he had the acquaintance and friendship of every important newspaper and magazine publisher in the United States. When the Motion Picture Board of Trade was formed in 1915 Mr. MacManus was selected unanimously as its first secretary. The present national association is the outgrowth of that organization.

In 1917, at the request of President Wilson, George W. Perkins and John R. Mott, he became chairman of the Motion Picture Committee for the United War Work Campaign, working with William A. Johnston and S. L. Rothapfel. He gave this service without compensation to himself, and was highly commended at its conclusion.

Mr. MacManus has always been in the front rank in opposition to unfair motion picture censorship, and his position in that respect is well defined. He has consistently maintained that the publishing business and motion pictures are fundamentally the same, and for many years has advanced his ideas along these lines.

Adolph Zukor Tenders Luncheon to British Theatre Owner

ONE of the most notable gatherings of motion picture men this season was at a luncheon which Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, gave Monday afternoon at the Ritz-Carlton, New York, in honor of Lord Beaverbrook of London, proprietor of the London Daily Express, owner of a large number of motion picture theatres throughout Great Britain, and Great Britain's Minister of Information during the war.

Elek John Ludvigh, general counsel of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was toastmaster, and after a few happy remarks complimentary to Lord Beaverbrook, introduced the host, Mr. Zukor.

Lord Beaverbrook, declared Mr. Zukor, was the staunchest friend that American motion picture men had in England. "He knows," said Mr. Zukor, "what American producers have tried to do. He knows that we do not aim to conquer the world. He realizes the efforts of American producers to put motion pictures on that high and dignified plane where they will command the respect of everybody in the world."

E. F. Albee, head of the B. F. Keith vaudeville enterprises, who was the next speaker, talked in a reminiscent vein of the days when he and the late B. F. Keith introduced the first motion pictures to American theatre audiences at the old Union Square theatre in New York. He said that one of his earliest pictures, "The Charge of the Light Brigade," made more money for the Keith company than any of the high-priced vaudeville artists who were on his circuit.

Following Mr. Albee, Bayard Dominick, of the banking house of Dominick & Dominick, told of Wall street's participation in the entertainment business of this country.

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, after relating his pleasure in meeting Lord Beaverbrook in London this summer, sketched briefly his impressions of the contrasts between European and American producing ideals.

"American producers," said Mr. Lasky, "are the champions of the modern story. We are more interested in today than yesterday. I recall that at a conference with Lord Beaverbrook and German, French and Italian motion picture men in London one day last summer, the Italian film man told me that the future of the motion picture lay in the production of great historical films, because the events of history appealed more to the people. I disagreed with him; but I want to assure you, gentlemen, that America has no monopoly and can have no monopoly of motion picture production.

"I firmly believe that in the future the great historical pictures will be coming from Italy, Germany, France and Great Britain. The production of such pictures in countries on the other side will cut a great figure in the future. But America will continue to rule supreme in the production of pictures showing modern life."

William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, was the next speaker and paid a stirring tribute to the films as a force in modern life.

"The advance of motion pictures has been tremendous during the last four years," said Mr. Brady, "but no milepost of its progress can be called more prominent than this greeting today to Lord Beaverbrook. Although Lord Beaverbrook is one of the biggest men in England, I prefer to speak of him as a representative of a country which has existed side by side with us, without a gunboat, a fort, or a squad of soldiers between us. For Lord Beaverbrook is a Canadian, and he went to England when England needed new blood. Beaverbrook represents in England what the dollar-a-year men were in this country during the war—a man of sacrifice, vision and vast capabilities."

After a warm tribute to the guest of honor, Mr. Brady introduced Lord Beaverbrook to the assembled diners.

Lord Beaverbrook said in part: "I have known Mr. Zukor for some time. During the war before the United States entered it, I asked Mr. Zukor to give us the assistance which he alone could give. And he gave it. Then when Mr. Zukor came to London last spring I met him and formed for him a liking which has grown into a warm and lasting friendship.

"The motion picture in England has never received its proper credit. Indeed, in many circles over there it is still looked upon as a sort of sideshow at a circus. It is my chief determination to overcome this prejudice, for during the war I became a sworn friend of the film industry. And I want to say that I am a friend of the industry in this country, too.

"I recognize that you have a long lead over us. We're tottering along behind you; we're struggling through the path which you have cut through the jungle. We're not your competitors; we're only friendly imitators.

"I've rather relinquished active interest in business affairs since the war, but of all the enterprises there are I'd rather be in your business than any other. It offers to you an occupation more interesting than any other."

The guests at the luncheon included the following: F. F. Killam, N. M. Schenck, LeRoy W. Baldwin, Felix E. Kahn, Martin Beck, Richard A. Rowland, Hugo Riesenfeld, Walter F. Wanger, Mort H. Singer, F. Douglas Williams, J. W. T. Mason, William A. Johnston, Col. Herbert A. Bruce, R. A. M. C.; Arthur James, John F. Chalmers, James R. Quirk, Joseph Dannenberg, Al. Lichtman, Gabriel L. Hess, Lesley Mason, R. W. Saunders, Paul Brunet, P. L. Waters, Lee Shubert, H. D. H. Connick, William H. English, Arthur S. Friend, Frederick G. Lee, Gayer G. Dominick, Jules E. Brulatour, Messmore Kendall, E. Kendall Gillett, William E. Smith, Ralph A. Kohn, Sydney R. Kent, Charles E. McCarthy, F. V. Chamberlin, Julian Johnson, John C. Flinn, L. W. Boynton, Charles H. Bell, Arthur N. Loew, Eugene J. Zukor, Morris Kohn, N. L. Nathanson.

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will shortly open at its home office a school of salesmanship for the intensive training of film salesmen. This innovation has been contemplated by Famous Players-Lasky executives for some time and many weeks have been devoted to the perfecting of the plans for the school.

The first class will open on Monday, October 11, and will be in charge of Fred C. Creswell, who was called to the home office from his duties as Field Sales Supervisor to organize the school. Mr. Creswell first spent several weeks in some of the largest industrial establishments in the country, making a careful study of the methods employed by those companies in conducting their sales schools. With the information and data there obtained, he has been working out the details of the proposed Famous Players-Lasky school. In this work he has had the active cooperation of General Sales Manager S. R. Kent.

That men from other lines of business shall enter the school—especially those to whom the motion picture business holds an attraction—is particularly desired. It is not to be inferred from this, however, that men now in the organization are to be barred from the benefits of the school.

The course of the school is to be of four weeks' duration, at the end of which period a new class will be started. The school will be held in a room on the fourth floor of the building at 485 Fifth Avenue, New York.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

Manager Aschmann, of Chicago's Pathe exchange, announces that the new Stratford, the three thousand seat house recently opened on the south-side and the Woodlawn, are the two latest additions to the big theatres which have signed up for the Harold Lloyd series of comedies.

Pictures will again be shown at the South Shore theatre, 6851 Stony Island Avenue this winter, according to an announcement by L. B. Salkin, manager of the Jackson Park theatre, who also controls the South Shore house. The South Shore at one time was a picture house, but some time ago was changed into a dance hall, and now has been rebuilt and redecorated and made into a first-class movie house. Mr. Salkin expects to open its doors to the public about October 15th.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer last week voluntarily increased the wages of all non-union help in their service, from doorman and ushers up to managers and executives. The salary boosts vary from 15 to 35 per cent. This popular firm felt that as operators, musicians and other employees who were union men had received substantial wage increases, that it was only just that the other help should be given a boost. It has been the custom of Jones, Linick & Schaefer to make a general advance in wages the first of each year, but under existing conditions they decided to raise the pay at once. Needless to say their action was a most delightful surprise to the beneficiaries.

Plans for the projection room of Robertson-Cole's new Chicago exchange have been completed and Manager Lucas declares it will be the finest private theatre in Chicago. It will occupy the space of 25 x 70 feet, and have a seating capacity of one hundred. Luxuriously upholstered chairs, handsome decorations and the latest thing in projection and screen will make it a model show room. District Manager Hansen, who has been in Chicago for the past ten days completing details of the new exchange, left Saturday for a trip which will include visits to St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha and other western points.

E. L. Merkley, formerly traveling auditor for Robertson-Cole, has accepted a position with Manager Lucas, of its Chicago exchange, as service manager and will have entire charge of the service department of that exchange.

B. Herbert Milligan, who severed his connection with the Capital Film Company the latter part of July, is now engaged in the leasing of "For the Freedom of Ireland," a Creation Film Co. production.

The formal opening of Pathe's new Chicago exchange, 418 S. Wabash avenue, has been announced for the week of September 20-26th, and handsomely engraved cards inviting exhibitors and others connected with the trade, to call during that time have been sent out. The exchange is one of the handsomest and most commodious in the country and well worth seeing for itself, but in addition, Manager Aschmann promises a cordial welcome with plenty of cigars and entertainment for all callers during the week.

Edmund A. Bertram, president of the Chicago laboratory workers' union and assistant technical secretary at the Rothacker Laboratories, has returned to Chicago after visiting the Eastman Kodak Company plant and New York film laboratories.

W. R. Rutledge, who has been confined to the hospital for some time, suffering from severe stomach trouble, is improving and his friends will be glad to know that he now is able to spend a few hours each day at his desk.

Eddy Eckels, president and general manager of the Independent Films Association, Chicago, distributors of Pinnacle Productions, left for the Pacific coast September 23, with initial intent, it is reported, to sign up a feminine star of international repute for a series of productions to be released by Independent.

Before leaving for the Pinnacle studios at Glendale, Calif., Eddy passed about the busiest three days in his meteoric career arranging for the handling of all affairs at the Chicago end during his absence. He expects to return to Chicago about the tenth of October.

Eddy maintained the strictest silence when interviewed relative to the name, or names, of the feminine stars he had in mind.

One of the leading correspondence schools has commissioned S. J. Stoughton, production manager of the Rothacker Industrial division, to write a course in film advertising. Before going into the motion picture section of the advertising field Mr. Stoughton was an executive for one of the largest national advertisers.

"Big Happiness," Robertson-Cole's fine production, featuring Dustin Farnum, was the feature chosen by Ascher Brothers for the opening of their new two thousand seat Commercial theatre in South Chicago this week. Manager Lucas, of Robertson-Cole, also reports that Aschers have booked this feature and "Occasionally Yours" for their entire circuit.

The Calumet theatre, South Chicago, was reopened last week by Manager Rehfield, who had expended $5,000 in redecorating and beautifying this cozy theatre.

A. W. Friemal, formerly connected with Paramount's Chicago exchange, has joined the sales staff of Pathe and will travel northern Illinois territory.

"Once to Every Woman," the last of the big feature pictures to be made for Universal by Dorothy Phillips, was shown to the trade at the Universal projection room Thursday and was very favorably received. It is understood that Universal is planning one of the biggest exploitation campaigns ever put on in Chicago for this feature and will spend a large amount on advertising the picture in the territory.

Jack Meredith, for the past two years connected with the Chicago exchange of Universal as a salesman, is on his way to Dallas, Texas. Jack is making the trip by automobile, accompanied by his wife and child, and is carrying a complete camping equipment, so that when the weather is favorable they can enjoy the out-door life. The hundreds of friends Jack has made in Chicago are sorry to see him go.

The latest pictures Joe Friedman has added to the growing list of short subjects and features released by Celebrated in this territory include "Globe Trots," a series of one-reelers which will appear once a week; "The Illiterate Digest," also a once a week reel; twelve Gaumont features for release once a month, and four Gaumont serials which are to be made during the year. The Navy Department has just completed arrangements with Mr. Friedman to put the Gump series of animated cartoons aboard all battleships of the fleet, where these fun-makers will help the gobs forget the monotony of sea service.

H. O. Larson, formerly with American Film Company, has joined the staff of Capital Film Company, Chicago, as assistant sales manager.

W. D. Russell, who recently returned from the west coast, where he made a trip in the interest of Capital Film Company, reports that while in Los Angeles, acting as exclusive representative for Myrtle Reid, he sold the film rights for all her novels to H. J. Reynolds, of the Renco Film Company, and that work on the filming of the first novel, "Lavender and Old Lace," is well under way and the picture promises to be as popular as the book, which has a wonderful sales record.

While in London, Watterson R. Rothacker appointed J. C. Wainwright United Kingdom representative for the Rothacker Industrial Division. Mr. Wainwright has offices at 6 Piccadilly Mansions, Shaftsbury avenue, W. I., London. He plans to come to America early next year to visit the Rothacker Industrial branches here.

D. H. Hatfield, who, for some years conducted the Royal theatre, Green Bay, Wisconsin, which was recently destroyed by fire, has purchased a half interest in the Home, Montrose and Albany theatres, Chicago, which will be operated under the joint management of Mr. Hatfield and George F. Bromley.

Walter Hylans, chief booker at Universal's Chicago office, is mourning the death of his father, who recently passed away at Madison, Wisconsin.

Maurice Choynski is a great believer in making the patrons of his theatres thoroughly at home and adding to their comfort wherever possible. To this end he recently installed match boxes in the lobbies of all his theatres so that smokers who leave their matches at home can light up on the way out.

W. K. Hollender, who requires no introduction to Chicago moving picture men, having been head of the Chicago Daily News' movie department ever since it was started six and one half years ago, and before that connected with the Morning Telegraph, has left the editorial chair at the Daily News to become press and advertising representative for Balaban & Katz. Bill declares he is enjoying hammering out copy instead of wielding the blue pencil on the other fellow's publicity stories and that his old friends among the newspaper editors of Chicago are treating him kindly even if he has deserted their ranks.

Ike Cohan has taken over the State-Congress theatre in the Chicago loop and has inaugurated a new policy. He now offers the public a very elaborate program, having engaged a stock musical comedy company of thirty people, putting on short musical shows and also playing four acts of vaudeville in addition to showing moving pictures.

District Manager Baum has resigned his position with Universal and left Chicago last Monday to make his headquarters in New York where he will become associated with Equity. Mr. Baum has for sometime been desirous of entering the states rights field in a big way and his numerous friends are predicting a successful career with his new connection.

"Eliminate Waste—Consider Exhibitor," Lefcourt

"YES, there is still room for a great deal of constructive work in the motion picture industry and any man who thinks for one moment that the field is closed, is laboring under an illusion. There are just as many opportunities presenting themselves today as in any period in the past."

The foregoing statement was but one of many of an interesting nature made by A. E. Lefcourt, president of Pioneer Film Corporation, in the course of an exclusive interview with the Motion Picture News. Mr. Lefcourt made it clear and minced no words in declaring that the industry must give more consideration to the exhibitor and that only when the latter prospers can the trade as a whole thrive.

"In the first place," he asserted, "there must be an absolute elimination of all waste in every branch of the industry, in order to accomplish more, and with the avenues of lost motion closed as tight as a drum, the result will show a decided improvement and a marked growth will be sustained by those who are part of the great industry and who are striving for greater development.

The exhibitor has a greater responsibility on his hands than many in the industry actually appreciate. He has the burden on his shoulders by virtue of his contact with the jury—the public, and this one outstanding fact is sufficient to clinch for him all arguments in his favor.

"So far as the Pioneer Film Corporation is concerned, it is placed in the fortunate position of a leader in its particular field, and this is not said in a boastful spirit. The records of the trade press show just what the Pioneer has done in its own way to encourage the ambitious and independent American producer, author or star. The files of the Motion Picture News tell the story, so I think I can be excused for referring to these matters which are so important and might I add, dear to the hearts of those of us who have built up the Pioneer from a handful of workers to an organization of over three hundred loyal and faithful men and women.

"Up to the time that the Pioneer Film Corporation took the stand in favor of the independent factor in any branch of the industry, the producer, director, author or star who was not under contract with a company, had little or no opportunity to exercise his or her talents. We, at Pioneer headquarters, saw this and the machinery was soon set in motion for a campaign of education to the independent factor, outlining the stand of the Pioneer and offering every possible encouragement.

"What was the result? The independent producer came to us with his product. The independent star came to us and we financed the picture. The independent author came along and satisfactory arrangements were made and so it went on until today, the first thought of the independent producer who has a worth-while product, is to come to the Pioneer headquarters with it."

Mr. Lefcourt went on to tell of some of the big productions on the Pioneer program for the new season. He enumerated the various features and the stars, emphasising the attractiveness of the list and laying claim to list of pictures of unusual merit.

"We have exercised great care in the preparation of the program," he said, "because we realize that the exhibitor must have features which will appeal to the patrons of his theatre. Speaking for the Pioneer, I can safely say that we are proud of our product and the exhibitor will feel well satisfied with the pictures provided for him."

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATRES

FAMOUS PLAYERS

The Cradle of Courage—

Well up to the average of Wm. S. Hart's pictures and should be a good drawing card at all theatres where he is popular. We did excellent business with this picture for one week. (Middle West.)

The combination of a popular star and a good picture and the result is good business. (East.)

Little Miss Rebellion—

Capacity audiences all week. Fine picture. (Middle West.)

The Round Up—

Fatty Arbuckle does good work in "The Round Up" and the reputation of the stage play helped advertise this picture and brought in more than average crowds at every matinee and evening.

Civilian Clothes—

"The public here is mad on the subject of Thomas Meighan, and have been eagerly awaiting his first starring picture. It's an excellent picture, and played to capacity business." (South.)

Star, picture and box office returns all ditto, the word "good." (East.)

Humoresque—

Second week excellent. Increased prices caused no dimunution in patronage. Picture booked for third week. (Middle West.)

Picture well liked. Second week broke all records.

Wonderful value as entertainer Third week and still going big.

What's Your Hurry?—

One of the best Reid pictures and a better puller than "Sick Abed." Fans remarked on better appearance of star without feminine make-up and mannerisms revealed in "Sick Abed." (South.)

Something to Think About—

Excellent production in every way. Picked up so well at end of two week run that we came near to holding it for third week and only abandoned this plan because of advertising and photos being placed on "Humoresque." (East.)

The Fourteenth Man—

Robert Warwick is a star who does not draw big here. Featured Bebe Daniels with him in advertising and it helped some. Personally think Warwick is fine, but can't sell him to my audiences. Picture did only fair business. (South).

Crooked Streets—

A great picture. Exciting from start to finish. Had the house spellbound on opening night and did tremendous business all the following performances. Seldom is a picture so universally liked. (Middle West).

Lady Rose's Daughter—

Elsie Ferguson draws certain class, but class is limited. Each of her pictures does just about the same. (South).

The Fighting Chance—

This picture was very well liked and had a successful run. (Middle West).

What Happened to Jones—

Average picture with usual audiences. (West).

The Jailbird—

Good picture with average business. (West).

A City Sparrow—

The picture is wonderful and drew more than usual business. (West).

Go and Get It—

Splendid, snappy picture and a first-class box office attraction. Packed house and lobby every night it was shown. (Middle West).

Strong melodrama. Its sensationalism draws big crowds. (East).

What Women Love—

Annette Kellerman great favorite here. Picture drew well. (Middle West).

Forty-five Minutes From Broadway—

Corking picture. They like it. Title a good one, even without association of Cohan's name. A change for Charles Ray and a good one. (South).

Just fair picture. Good box office returns. (West).

FIRST NATIONAL

The Perfect Woman—

This is a good picture and well liked. Drew more than average crowds. (West).

The Notorious Miss Lisle—

This picture was not up to the usual standard of the Katherine MacDonald pictures, although it appeared to draw well. (Middle West).

Yes or No—

Very entertaining picture. Went big here, drawing large audiences. (West).

Married Life—

This picture is good, but drew usual business. (West).

GOLDWYN

The Penalty—

An excellent picture with Lon Chaney as particular drawing attraction. Did big business for a week. (Middle West).

The Return of Tarzan—

Very ordinary picture. Poor box office attraction. (East).

HODKINSON

Love Madness—

Drew good-sized audiences for seven-day run. More sex stuff which appeals to some, but is "passed by" by most patrons. (East).

METRO

Held in Trust—

May Allison getting more popular here. Picture pleased all classes. (South.)

Love, Honor and Obey—

Fair picture. Better houses last two days than when picture opened. (East.)

Chorus Girl's Romance—

Good picture. Lots of interesting situations well done by star and capable company. Opened to nice business and held public interest all week. (Middle West.)

The Great Redeemer—

A fine picture but not the kind the public will pay money to see. It's too religious. Screen is for entertainment, not for preachment. Fair business, but not enough to justify longer than one week run. (Middle West.)

UNIVERSAL

Shipwrecked Among Cannibals—

Only average business. Cannibals do not appeal to women. (West.)

The Devil's Pass-Key—

Booked for a week and am playit for two. It's great. As to box-office angle—it has made more money than any special I've played this season. (South.)

Splendid business all week. Patrons agree it is best hit of season. (East.)

PATHE

Man and His Woman—

While this seems to be a big picture, its drawing power was very poor. (Middle West.)

A Broadway Cowboy—

They didn't quite "get" this one. My audience like Westerns, but they were not quite sure that they were not being "kidded" in this. The comedy went over, however, and was well received. Think Desmond very interesting and promising star if he sticks with one company long enough to become well known. (South.)

One Hour Before Dawn—

Fine mystery story. Well acted. Business good. (East.)

REALART

39 East—

Fine picture. Brought good business. (West.)

Sweet Lavender—

Mary Miles Minter gets better with each picture. Building up a big following and this went over better than any of her pictures despite saccharine title. (South.)

Drew well all week. Audiences like the plot. (East.)

The Dark Lantern—

Fair picture. The star is the drawing card. (East.)

ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS

Homespun Folks—

Good audience picture. Broke no records but did good average business for three days. (Mid. West.)

Ordinary photoplay. Not a bit exciting at any point. Much too tame for the general run of picture patrons. (Mid. West.)

Entertaining picture which drew more than usual patronage. (West).

In the Heart of a Fool—

Show very good. Drew large crowds and brought good returns. (Mid. West.)

This picture took well and brought good box office returns. West.)

SELZNICK

The Man Who Lost Himself—

This picture, with William Faversham in leading role, drew unusually large crowds all week. (Mid. West.)

The Poor Simp—

Average picture. Did average business. (Mid. West.)

FOX

The Joyous Troublemakers—

Fair picture with Farnum in a misplaced role. Fair box office attraction. (East.)

The Untamed—

Drew well during week, but picture replaced Saturday by Pearl White in "The White Moll." (Mid. West.)

EQUITY

Mid-Channel—

Big picture which drew more than usual business. (West.)

Albany Awakens to the Benefits of Exploitation

Elliott of Clinton Square Theatre Cuts Loose on "Up in Mary's Attic"

Albany, N. Y., has awakened to the benefits of exploitation. Yep, wide awake. And what is more, the Motion Picture News turned the trick with its article of a few weeks ago, as to the "whys and wherefores" of so little exploitation in a city of 115,000 inhabitants where the proprietors of houses were too inclined to sit back and let things take their own course.

Fred Elliott, manager of the Clinton Square theatre, has put across one of the most pretentious exploitation stunts ever attempted in the city, and as a result he is packing his house to the doors. Incidentally, it might be remarked that Elliott has fought his place to the top, overcoming handicaps that would have resulted in more than one manager throwing up the sponge long ago, for Elliott's theatre can not boast either location, a handsome exterior or interior, and yet the house through cleverly placed advertising and exploitation, well directed, is one of the best paying ventures in this city.

Everything from motor cycles to aeroplanes is being used this week to exploit "Up in Mary's Attic," playing this week at the Clinton Square.

Every street car in the city carried advertising, dozens of automobiles carried signs reading "Follow me Up In Mary's Attic, at the Clinton Square Theatre," a huge scenery truck with an attic on top, calling attention to the showing, was paraded through the streets, every door knob on the main streets carried a sign, and last, but not least, aeroplanes dropped propaganda over the heart of the city every day of the showing.

By tieing up with the army recruiting station and cooperating with them in their drive for recruits arrangements were made for an aeroplane to be sent up from Mineola Field, near New York City, to Albany to help the campaign.

The arrangement for the use of the plane was made through Lieut. Sullivan, who is in charge of the publicity and of the recruiting station in Albany. Inasmuch as there is no provision for newspaper advertising in the army service, Lieut. Sullivan immediately saw the possibilities of the cooperative campaign and made the necessary arrangements for securing the services of flyers.

In addition to the other mediums of exploitation a number of attractive window displays were used to boost the showing. The song, which was written by Miss Ethel Broaker, also helped pack the Clinton Square theatre.

In order to create the greatest possible interest among his regular patrons the management of the Clinton Square placed a huge attic, bearing the necessary wording over the entrance to the theatre, with signs on either side reading "This way Up In Mary's Attic." This created considerable talk, and the talk brought the desired results.

A number of motorcycles were also used to boost the opening, all of them bearing signs that should arouse interest, not only in the picture, but in the army recruiting as well.

In tieing the campaign up with the army the following slogan was used, which proved beneficial to both parties: "See the California Bathing Girls Up In Mary's Attic, and then see California via the U. S. Army."

To attract attention to the attic on the front of the theatre a huge searchlight was placed across the street from the theatre, so that the sign could be read for many blocks.

The picture was presented with a bathing girl review, with elaborate lighting effects and an attractive setting, which proved valuable in creating word-of-mouth publicity.

In addition to the numerous street stunts, thousands of miniature photographs, hand-colored post cards, and other accessories, were used to create interest in the showing of the picture.

In making the most of the appearance of the girls in person, the huge truck bearing the attic proved a most valuable exploitation medium. The girls, dressed in track suits, such as they wear in the picture, were paraded around the city on the truck, drawing crowds that threatened to block traffic on numerous occasions.

When the girls arrived in the city they were met by an automobile bearing a sign reading "We are going Up In Mary's Attic." Behind the automobile came the truck' with the sign "Follow me Up In Mary's Attic," and the crowd came too.

With the aeroplane, dropping the propaganda to follow up the other stunts it is a sure thing that Albany knows "Up In Mary's Attic" is in town. The use of the aeroplane proved an excellent publicity getter in the local newspapers, as well as a good exploitation stunt for bringing the attention of the public to the showing of the picture.

The newspaper advertising, with silhouettes of bathing girls, and very little type matter, giving room for plenty of white space, also proved valuable at the box office, particularly in view of the publicity given the showing by the local newspapers.

Other exhibitors, taking the message of the Motion Picture News to heart, and seeing with their own eyes the success that has attended Mr. Elliott's efforts, have fallen into line, and Albany can no longer be regarded as a suburb to Sleepy Hollow, the accredited home of Rip Van Winkle.

Asks Public to Write Movie Ending Suggestions

An exploitation stunt which brought excellent results was recently put over for the engagement of "Out of the Storm" at the Parkway theatre, Baltimore.

Along with two thousand passes for "The Silver Horde," then playing at the New theatre, another Baltimore house under the same management, invitations to write a scenario for a cash prize of ten dollars were dropped from an aeroplane flying over Liberty Heights Amusement Park, a Baltimore resort.

The herald used to announce the stunt specified that the author of "Out of the Storm" had written two endings to the story and desired the opinion of the public as the best one to use for the picture.

The prize was to be awarded for the three best 150 words' stories as to how the picture should be ended.

Strand Introduces Musical Novelty

AN elaboration of the "talking picture," which will be remembered as one of the rather unsuccessful innovations of the past, is proving a decided hit this week at the Strand theatre, when a film presentation of the duet from "Cavalleria Rusticana" is given with Raoul Romita, tenor and Margaret Marlboro, soprano, singing the roles from back of the picture screen.

The film is synchronized with the singers' voices and produces an illusion that is perfect.

The Strand "opera-scope" is the title given the number. The film was made especially for the Strand and shows two players going through the tragic roles of the selection from the opera with a stage setting provided identical with that used when the opera is sung at the Metropolitan.

The securing of two very good voices for the off stage duet, together with the perfect enactment of the roles for the picture make the number more than a novelty, one which will bring added patronage to the Strand during its showing

McLaren Spreads Himself for "Down on the Farm"

W. S. McLaren, managing director of the Majestic theatre of Jackson, Mich., was not only highly complimented by his regular patrons on the exploitation he did for "Down on the Farm," but the people demonstrated their feelings by applauding his seven-minute prologue, which proved a huge success and which determined Mr. McLaren in extending his run from five days to seven days.

Here is what Mr. McLaren says himself about the exploitation: "We used a Rube Jazz Band on the stage, with a special Prologue—a couple of pigs, a couple of dozen chickens and some little puppies. The stage opened up dark; gradually the lights began to come up, with a sunrise effect, and one of my fellows appeared from the house, yawning, as the roosters began to crow and the cow to moo—crossed over to the barn with a milk pail. Another came out shortly afterward, went to the barn, picked up a fork and started in to feed the stock back of the picket fence, incidentally uncovering another who was planted in the hay stack. Had a big jug also planted in the stack, marked 'water,' from which they had a drink. About that time the small-town constable made his appearance and gradually one by one the fellows came out of the house or barn and the leader of the band finally got them together. After three or four attempts and some terrible "blue" notes they struck into the first Jazz number and the lights gradually went down, the screen was lowered and the picture started. This all worked out very smoothly, and of course was all in pantomime, no words being spoken." The engagement was a huge success from every standpoint.

How Kofeldt Advertised Lloyd at 'Frisco

Walter W. Kofeldt, branch manager of the Pathe Exchange at San Francisco, recently turned the annual Mission District Merchants Annual Carnival into a full fledged ballyhoo for Harold Lloyd and other Pathe stars. With the assistance of Manager Citron of the New Mission theatre and Louis Greenfield of the Kahn and Greenfield circuit, Mr. Kofeldt was able to persuade the merchants to make the event a Pathe Day.

The largest picture of Harold Lloyd in existence, 20 by 15 feet, was shipped from Culver City, for the occasion, and hauled through the main streets of San Francisco on a motor truck being then exhibited to 30,000 persons assembled at the carnival grounds.

Motion picture comedies were taken by the Pathe camera man and directed by Del Lawrence, manager-actor of the Majestic Stock Co. All merchants in the Mission district participated.

The entire district was plastered with 1 and 3 sheets. Half sheet posters, black on yellow, read: "Can you impersonate Harold Lloyd? The Mission Merchants want you, if you can make good. Apply manager of the New Mission theatre at once." More than 50 entrants engaged in the impersonation contest, which in itself has added thousands of people to the neighborhood's growing number of picture fans.

Transparency Used to Advantage at the Rivoli

HUGO REISENFELD introduces the transparent drop to New York picture houses this week with a vocal selection of "Roses of Picardy."

The stage is disclosed with a quartette of girls attired in French peasant costumes sitting before a drop depicting an old world forest, with a rough road leading from the floor line to a vanishing point in perspective.

The quartet, headed by Hallie Stiles, soprano, sings the number and then the center of the drop is lighted, eliminating the forest from view of the audience and disclosing George Du Franne, tenor, also attired in Picardy costume, seated on a second stage a few feet higher than the regular platform. Mr. Du Franne sings another verse of the song and then performs in a duet with Miss Stiles.

The dissolving process is perfect both in exposing the artists behind the transparency and in coming back to the first scene, which is done before closing the number.

California, 'Frisco, Installs Wireless Telephone

Wireless telephone will convey music from the California theatre, San Francisco, to the Children's hospital in the city, beginning next week. Installation of the necessary apparatus is being made by the De Forrest Company entirely free and the theatre is also to furnish the music without a cent of cost to the Children's hospital. When the organ in the large California theatre is playing afternoons, the children will hear it just as if they were at the theatre, by wireless with a magnavox amplifier at the hospital. The instruments of sending and receiving will be so tuned that no disturbing influences can obtrude.

The public has not yet been apprised of this notable event through the columns of the daily press.

C. M. Pincus, manager of the California, states that it is being done entirely in a spirit of service to the unfortunate children, to brighten their lives through the medium of the latest of modern inventions, and not for exploitation purposes.

New Del Monte Theatre, St. Louis, Opens

Novelty Exploitation Gets Big F-P House Away To Fine Start

To have the Mayor of St. Louis address your audience—

To have Fannie Hurst, America's foremost fictionist, appear—

To put on a real publicity-getting exploitation stunt—

To have the leading rabbis of the city praise your picture—

To have the newspapers devote 21 columns of free space—

That's the way to open a new motion picture theatre in the thinking way of William Goldman, manager of Famous-Players Lasky Missouri Corporation, who took personal charge of the grand opening September 4, of the Del Monte Theater, St. Louis' latest cinema house, which is reputed to be the largest one-floor auditorium in America.

For weeks it had been announced that an entirely original feature would characterize the opening exploitation. As a result Goldman obtained the services of 2,000 homing pigeons. It was then widely advertised that the first 2,000 children who sent in their names would receive a number, a similar one of which would be attached to a pigeon, and the first three pigeons to arrive at the finishing line during a race would win for the number holders a cash prize. In response to the newspaper advertising 11,000 names were sent in to the office of the Missouri Corporation. The first 2,000 were given consideration, and on the afternoon of the opening day a band concert was held in the lobby of the pretentious theatre.

Outside the hundreds of pigeons awaited their release. The prizes were $25, $15, and $10 for the first three to arrive at the other terminus of the 10 mile course. Of course when the traps were opened the birds took to wing and a disintegrating cloud sped for the tape-line.

So original was this stunt to St. Louisans that the newspapers not only published announcements of the plans but printed a complete list of names of the contestants. In St. Louis' four newspapers, twenty-one columns of free space appeared. It took the city by storm.

The feature for the opening presentation was Fannie Hurst's "Humoresque." The appropriateness of this arrangement can easily be seen when it is understood that Miss Hurst (or Mrs. Danieldson) is a local product. Her parents at present live a distance of but one block from the Del Monte. Her name in the electric lights attracted throngs. More than 6,000 tickets were sold the first night. The seating capacity of the new Famous Players theatre is a bit over 3,000.

Henry W. Kiel, Mayor of St. Louis, consented to address the audience on the opening night. It was the first time in the history of the city that the mayor undertook to assist in the opening of a local theatre, and his efforts were appreciated to such an extent that he reported later having received letters of congratulation from 24 citizens. This, too, was Goldman's idea. It took some persuasion to induce the city's chief executive to "do the work," but with the able assistance of J. Reeves Espy, publicity man for the Famous Players, Goldman feels he can put anything over.

Then came Fannie Hurst. Miss Hurst was visiting her parents at the time the picture was shown. Because of the fact that she was the author of the story much pressure was exerted in the direction of having her at least appear in a box seat during the premiere presentation. She did. That was Goldman's and Espy's work again.

As an additional bit of advertising which gained the goodwill of hundreds of patrons, Goldman held a special show for the leading rabbis and editors of Jewish papers a week before the house was formally dedicated. Their favor and commendation as was expressed from the pulpit and the press brought the Jewish people from all sections of the city to see the portrayal of life in the Jewish orthodox home.

Another feature of the opening night program was a male quartet of Hebrew cantors who chanted the Jewish song "Eli, Eli."

The Del Monte is a 44 cent house with box seats selling at $1.10, including war tax. The latter price is the highest ever charged at any St. Louis theatre devoted exclusively to the presentation of motion pictures. The "Birth of a Nation" and "Hearts of the World" did not bring more than 75 cents for the best seats.

Ballantyne's Campaign for "The Law of the Yukon"

Sky High Exploitation by Moon Management

When R. S. Ballantyne, managing director of the Moon theatre, Omaha, booked "The Law of the Yukon" for a week's run at the Moon he decided to give the public something to think about. He hit on exploitation ideas that were so refreshingly new that the public responded by packing his house all week.

First he arranged with the Omaha Daily News for a tie-up on a Robert W. Service poem contest. All poems entered were to be titled "The Law of the Yukon," and based on the photoplay. A local fur company donated a beautiful $225 fur coat as the first prize. Twenty-three other prizes were awarded. A dozen big front page stories were given the contest by the Daily News and as a result hundreds of Omaha women waxed fiercely poetic in the effort to win the grand prize. The fur store displayed the coat in their window along with a photo display on "The Law of the Yukon."

Then Mr. Ballantyne conceived something entirely new in the way of a lobby. He went to a local wall-paper store and bought several rolls of wall-paper with a black and white stripe design. All of his photos and descriptive were set against this unique background. Every foot of display space in the lobby bore out the black and white stripe color design. Three-sheet cut-outs even were mounted against this black and white wall-paper.

Women were terribly inquisitive about the $225 fur coat, so Mr. Ballantyne had a living model display the coat on the Moon stage at 3 P. M. and 9 P. M. daily.

Realizing that automobile advertising was something to cash in on, he had 5,000 tags printed with the words: "Are you violating the law? No need to see a lawyer about it, but—Better see "The Law of the Yukon." In each car he also had placed a small herald describing the $225 fur coat contest, knowing that nine out of ten of the motorists would take the heralds home to their wives—and they did judging from the crowds of women that packed the Moon afternoon and night.

As an added attraction, Mr. Ballantyne secured moving pictures of Miss Ophelia Adair, local winner in the national contest for the most beautiful salesgirls in America. Since one of the local newspapers promoted the local contest they gave a liberal amount of publicity to the Moon on this added feature.

Describing Two of the Capitol Specialties

THE Capitol theatre's ballet number, "Voices of Spring," by Mlle. Gambarelli is presented before a black velvet drop with flood lightings and a spot.

The dancer strews roses about the stage throughout the number.

The usual opera selection for this theatre, this week is "Ave Maria," with a newcomer to New York picture theatre circles, Helen Wallace as the artist.

Miss Wallace sings in front of a stage setting by John Wanger, in which a black drop with a stained glass church window center produce a very artistic effect.

Miss Wallace is a soprano who has achieved a notable success in Europe.

Playing Benefits Pays, Says Roberts

Invitation matinees at which the members of organizations or school classes are admitted free of charge as guests of the management are being used with success in boosting attendance at evening performances by Fred Roberts, manager of the Hudson theatre, Albany, N. Y. He declares that the word-of-mouth advertising that can be started in this way is extremely effective in bringing paid admissions to the theatre and that the invitation matinees are given only on the days where experience has shown that attendance would be very light, so that practically they are of no expense to the theatres. The idea came to him after the American Legion in Albany had given a matinee party to the Boy Scouts of that city in appreciation of the work done by the Scouts in connection with an American Legion convention.

The matinee was held on a Monday, and for the remainder of the run Mr. Roberts noticed that a great many of the patrons who attended the theatre were new ones and in many cases they were accompanied by boys wearing scout hats. He concluded that the word-of-mouth advertising which was started by the matinee had a great deal to do with the high record established by the attraction he was then showing, "A Daughter of Two Worlds," and then made his plans for using invitation matinees as a regular exploitation method at the theatre.

Mrs. Grace Cummings, Jill of All Trades

How a Gowanda, N. Y., Woman Rose From Scrub Woman to Theatre Manager

A JILL of all trades is Mrs. Grace Cummings of the Gowanda Opera House, Gowanda, N. Y. She has not reached 30 as yet, manages an opera house, a dance hall, a gymnasium, does all her own sign painting, lobby decorating and stage setting, plays the piano when necessary and occasionally goes into the booth and runs off the show.

Sometime ago, Mrs. Cummings was left a widow with two children to look after. She went to work at the Opera House at $1 a day as a cleaning woman, but she had not been at this job long when she decided she could paint signs. From that time on the Gowanda Opera House began to have some of the finest lobby displays in the country. When the war started, Judge Schott, owner of the theatre, was suddenly left without an operator. Mrs. Cummings had quietly learned to operate the machines and at the psychological moment she jumped into the breach and took charge of the projection booth, with the result that the house did not miss a show. Soon after this Mrs. Cummings was appointed manager.

For more than a year she has been putting over exploitation stunts in Gowanda that would do credit to any big city theatre. She puts on stage settings that are real works of art. She uses natural flowers, shrubbery and small trees, all of which are abundant in the neighborhood. She arranged colored lighting effects to harmonize with her stage settings, often taking out the some 500 or more lights herself, dipping them in acid baths and coloring them to obtain the effect she desires. Mrs. Cummings is a natural born landscape painter and she makes some splendid back drops for her settings and lobby displays. In her lobby displays she uses cutouts from the sheets which she places on heavy cardboards. The writer was driving through Gowanda recently and he was struck with the attention-compelling display in front of the opera house. Everyone that passes stops and eventually gets to the box office. Still some managers say that exploitation for the smaller towns doesn't pay. Mrs. Cummings doesn't say so.

"Whether you have a town of 5,000 or a city of 500,000," she said to the Motion Picture News representative, "you have a sales problem to meet. The success of your theatre depends upon how you meet that problem. Through advertising that you have a certain well known attraction you are sure to get a certain amount of business, but why stop there? Why not inspire in the rest of the people a desire to see it, too? Curiosity is distributed in Gowanda pro rata in about the same proportion that it is in New York city or anywhere else.

Mrs. Cummings deserves a lot of credit for her excellent work at the Gowanda Opera House, where she has literally "jumped in," taking a big man's job and made good. Today when Gowanda folk want to see a good picture show put on in an unusual manner they go to see how Mrs. Cummings is putting on the pictures for the day. They usually find several surprises in the bill that would be a credit to the largest houses in the country. From cleaning woman to manager is a jump seldom met with in present day screen doings, but the present instance only goes to prove that where there's a will, there's a way whether it is the will of the weaker or the stronger sex.

International News Strip Deserves Exploitation

A NEWS weekly strip being used in the various current events numbers at the Broadway houses this week which is worth exploitation is an International release under the title of "A Visit to the Pope with the Knights of Columbus."

This strip, several hundred feet in length, shows the Holy Father, celebrating Mass, offering a prayer and also a closeup pose surrounded by several hundreds of the visiting Knights.

The photography is excellent and the views obtained are such that His Holiness is caught for a number of intimate views.

Brooklyn Exhibitor Adopts Los Angeles Publicity Idea

When Keith's Fifth Avenue theatre, Brooklyn, booked "The House of the Tolling Bell," and looked about for exploitation mediums, the nearness of the Blackton studio, where the picture was made, suggested to Manager F. Schaefer the possibility of getting something novel from the Blackton lot.

The result of his idea was that in one corner of the theatre lobbies, made slightly darker than the other part of the entrance ways, stood a dilapidated old belfry, and hanging therein an old battered bell. From the inner top of the belfry a weird, greenish light was cast, showing uncannily an owl perched on the rim of the belfry, its lighted eyes glaring eerily at the passers by.

The effect was one of spooky interest and whetted the public desire to see the mystery feature being shown. The belfry, bell and owl were properties that had been used in the making of the Blackton photo-melodrama.

Describing Pierce's Prologue for "For the Soul of Rafael"

On the opposite page is shown and following is a description of the prologue number staged by Manager Howard O. Pierce of the Madison theatre, Detroit, for "For the Soul of Rafael."

After an orchestral overture rendition of "Carmen" the house lights were dimmed to almost negative, to prepare the audience for a proper reception of the prologue number.

Then chimes in distance pealed (three distinct bells) while the echo organ carried the far-off strains of a priest chant. The velour curtain slowly rose upon a scene of calm charm, showing the face of an old Californian monastery and garden.

The stage was lighted in a sunset glow with a pure white spot on a cross of the church. Floods of old rose and night blues were artistically blended, and in the distance monks were heard singing a chant. The voices were gradually increased in volume until they came to full tones as a trio of male voices walked slowly on the stage clad in the robes of the Church.

As if on the way to devotions, the monks paused, singing the rest of their musical selection, and then turned slowly again towards the church to the peal of the Angelus. At this cue, Cæsar Nesi, tenor and brought from New York for the engagement, entered through a gateway in the center of the stage. He was lighted by a brilliant white spot, and clad as a toreador, came down stage, laughing as he walked. He speaks to the priests who told him a well prepared story suitable for the picture in song. The priests leave after the conclusion of the song, nodding in approval as they go, and making their exit into the church.

Kedusah Being Sung This Week at the Capitol

WITH the same stage setting used last week for the rendition of "Kol Nidre" the Capitol overture number, "Festival Choral," is divided with the vocal rendition of "Kedushah," a choral extracted from the Hebrew religious services by a double male quartette dressed in church robes, a part of it.

The overture is presented in recognition of Yom Kipper, or Jewish Day of Atonement, and is so stated on the Capitol program.

To the Gentile the number will be interesting from its musical excellence.

MacDonald Hits on a New Exploitation Idea

Manager Harry MacDonald, of the William Fox Washington theatre, Detroit, employed an effective exploitation idea during the past week by booking "Babe Ruth—How He Makes His Home Runs," and then inviting members of the Detroit and New York baseball teams, which were playing in Detroit on Monday, to see the picture in a body. Most of the players came, and drew a large number of fans. MacDonald repeated the stunt when the Red Sox came to Detroit later in the week.

Gleichman Gives Special Show to Prominent Citizens

Managing Director Phil Gleichman, of the Broadway Strand theatre, Detroit, was able to put over an extremely effective publicity feat in connection with the showing of "Humoresque," this week, by obtaining a series of comments on the production from a number of the most prominent leaders in the political, business, educational, and religious life of Detroit.

Some New Ideas in Exploitation Illustrated by Pictures

Decorates Lobby with Flowers for "Love Without Question"

That there is a fitness of things in the exploitation of pictures was more than evident last week at the Grand Opera House, Cincinnati, where Olive Tell in "Love Without Question," had its premier showing in Ohio. The Grand Opera House lobby was turned into a bower of flowers for the occasion. Sentiment and flowers always go hand in hand and anybody gazing into the entrance of the theatre knew at a glance that the picture showing had a strong love theme. Festoons of flowers were draped from the centre fixtures to the side walls. All of the display frames were flanked with flowers. Aside from the cool, inviting appearance of the theatre, the display was artistic in the extreme, and had undoubtedly, according to McMahon and Jackson, managers of the house, a direct bearing upon the business that held up during the week of the picture's engagement.

'Frisco Theatre Figures in Wireless Telephony Test

Much publicity was achieved by the California theatre of San Francisco recently when a demonstration of wireless telephony was given in which the usual Sunday concert by the California orchestra was transmitted to several hundred convalescent soldiers at the Leterman hospital at Presidio.

In addition to the musical program given, Managing Director Eugene H. Roth made a speech into the wireless telephone and his words were distinctly heard by the distant audience.

The experiment was a great success from all angles and the amount of publicity the California secured in being selected for a part in the demonstration can not be measured in dollars and cents. A carefully prepared program that included several classical selections and the vocal rendition of "The Aria from Robin Hood," sung by Anne Ruzene Sprotte, was given.

Grauman Stages Another Novelty

In connection with the showing of the three reel film, "A Trip Through the Thomas H. Ince Studio," Sid Grauman introduced an interesting prologue at Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles. The setting represented a parlor set on a studio stage with all lighting effects used for the taking of motion pictures. An announcer took a position down stage at the left when the drapes parted and introduced the characters as they came on. First came the cameraman, the assistant director, electricians and then one by one leading man, leading woman, heavy, ingenue, comedian, child actress, musicians, and last the director. The scene was rehearsed, then the actual making of the scene was performed with all lights, making the set as bright as though in the sunlight.

A cut of the Grauman act is shown on the opposite page.

New Way to Analyze Your Advertising

How Bert Deardoff, Small Town Showman Gives His Display Copy An Acid Test

EXHIBITORS, especially those in small towns, who always have trouble in arranging their newspaper advertising space may be interested in the experience of another exhibitor who was shown a system which removes most of the trouble and results in clean, snappy, spicy, up-to-the minute copy. It is a simple plan and one that I learned through a fortunate circumstance.

It consists merely of writing telegrams to yourself about the production for which you want to prepare copy. Get the idea that someone has invested a million dollars in your theatre and that he has made a kick on the fact that you have booked this particular attraction, and it is up to you to justify your action in a telegram that is going to cost you $10 a word out of your own pocket. Take it for granted that you are dependent upon this backer for your livelihood and that he doesn't know as much about motion pictures as the average fifteen-year-old boy or girl and then go to the writing of the $10-a-word telegram. Here is an article by Bert Deardoff, manager of the Strand and Princess theatres of Kendallville, Ind.:

"Probably the average exhibitor will figure that it is a whole lot easier to write advertising than it is to write a telegram. I am free to admit that it is easier to fill up a certain amount of space in a newspaper than it is to write such a message, but the result may or may not be advertising of value, and more than probably not. Your advertisement, however, to be effective, has to have the punch a telegram carries, and the simile of writing $10 a word telegrams to your backer isn't so farfetched. The public is the backer of any motion picture house. To get them to put up their money you have to justify your production to every person you hope to get into the theatre. They don't allot a certain portion of the day to reading motion picture advertising so snap into them with nothing but the essential words, the phrases that appealed to you when you booked the picture and the easiest way of selecting these words and phrases is the composition of a $10 a word telegram which will contain all of them.

"The press sheets furnished with your productions will give you the subject matter that will be the basis of your telegram copy. Start in cutting out the words, ideas or phrases which don't appeal to you as being worth $10 a word. What you have left is the only stuff that is necessary for your advertising copy. For an example of the way such a system simplifies matters perhaps 'Yes or No?' will furnish as good an example as any. This production provides two distinctive exploitation points which hinge right on its title the story of the 'Yes' girl and the story of the 'No' girl.

"Naturally if you intend to play up both angles the copy will not be as brief, as the picture contained only the one angle, but two efforts on my part to write telegram copy on the picture resulted in one advertisement of twenty-six words and another of nineteen, both of which were effective in gaining interest.

"'No Woman Has a Future, No Woman Has a Past, Until She Has Answered the Question, "Yes or No."'

"The twenty-six word copy was as follows:

"'Yes or No'

"'is the answer to the question every woman knows. Her answer is her bid for happiness and love, or jewels, silks and disappointments.'

"These are two of the advertisements I used in connection with the showing of this feature at the Strand theatre. Kendallville has a population of 5,200, counting babies in arms. The Strand has a seating capacity of 800 and when a house that size is filled twice to capacity, with an actual count of 152 standing in one evening, it is safe to say that the advertising of the picture has made a strong appeal. When two packed houses greet it on the second night the proof becomes conclusive that the advertising was effective. That is what happened on the two days' showing of 'Yes or No' at the Strand.

"My copy was just as I have given it. The rest of the ads consisted of a regular theatre name top followed by a stock cut of the star and the title of the picture. Then my copy, and at the bottom the dates and the scale of prices. On the second day of the showing I combined the two ads which I have given with a third on both the 'Yes' and the 'No' angles of the pictures prepared by the same formula and ran that.

'A great many productions have advertisements already prepared that are effective, but in every exhibitor territory, and especially in the small town, it will be found that home-made ads make a greater appeal especially if the exhibitor is of the same general type as the patrons he wishes to bring into his theatre."

Attractive Prologue Used by the Circle, Indianapolis

How Remond Dressed Up for "Ladder of Lies"

The three-day run of "A Ladder of Lies" received an added bit of interest in the exploitation given it by the management of the Forsyth theatre, Atlanta.

This house is difficult to "dress up" for pictures, for it was originally built for a legitimate theatre, with a small lobby, flanked on one side by the manager's office, and box-office, the rest of the lobby being taken up with a drink-stand.

But Mr. Remond, house-manager, got around this difficulty very well with the Clayton picture, and, incidentally, added a nice little amount to his box-office receipts thereby.

A number of ladders about three and a half feet high were made of light, thin laths painted white. The rungs of the ladders were lettered, the bottom rung being "Love," the next "Faith," the third "Sacrifice," and so on. On one side of the entrance lobby the "ladder of lies" had been made, the bottom rung being "Love," the one above it "Deceit," then "Dishonor," and the last "Misery." At the base of the ladder, just below the first rung was a tiny, broken place—"Lies." A cut-out of the star was poised perilously between the rungs of "Deceit" and "Dishonor," her head bowed, as if surveying "Lies" apprehensively.

Opposite this, a ladder whose rungs were labelled "Love," "Faith," "Sacrifice" and "Happiness," also bore a cut-out of the star, but her entire attitude, expression and position was one of hope and joy.

"Earthbound" Stands 'Em Up at the Capitol

SUNDAY evening at 7:30 every seat in the Capitol theatre, New York, was occupied, probably better than 500 people were standing and waiting lines extended four and five deep up and down Broadway and around the corners of 50th and 51st street, all intent on seeing "Earthbound."

Waiting lines are not new to Broadway, especially on Sunday night, but when a theatre seats 5400 people, has standing room for enough more to fill an ordinary picture house, and still impatient New Yorkers stand first on one foot and then on the other for two hours in the hope of getting inside to stand for another two hours, just to see a motion picture, then it is safe to assume that said picture is something of a box office attraction.

And this after "Earthbound" had played a two weeks' engagement at the Astor theatre less than a month ago, all of which may look like a lot of boost for "Earthbound," but which is intended only as a reminder that this picture seems destined to be one of the box office attractions of the year.

Famous Circle Theatre Celebrates Its Fourth Birthday

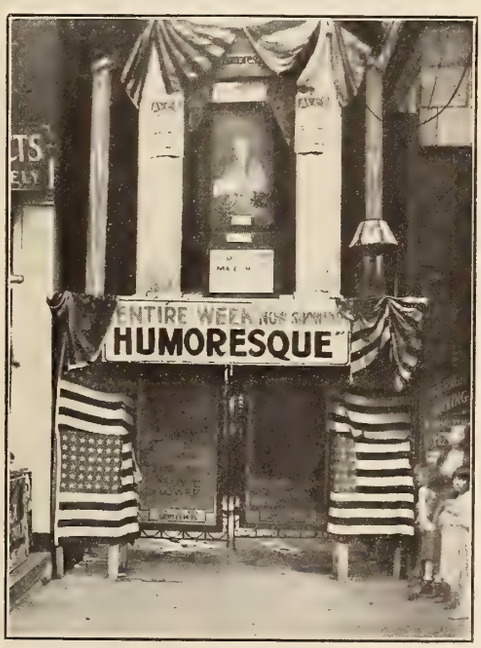
Another of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, "birthdays," this one being the fourth, has been celebrated with an elaborate program and a birthday cake a foot in thickness and three feet in diameter.

Special specialty numbers under the title of "Muses of Shadowland" were staged.

This number was a series of tableaux in seven episodes, titled "The Spirit of the Circle," "Comedy," "Drama," "Music," "Art and Color," "The Dance," and "Silhouettes."

A special musical score was written by Ernest Schmidt, the Circle musical director, and elaborate costumes were designed for the characters who took part in the various tableaux for which special stage settings had been painted.

The film numbers on the bill were "45 Minutes from Broadway," and "An Overall Hero." The Circle is now under the management of Ralph W. Lieber, who succeeded S. Barrett McCormick, now of the Rivoli, Toledo, Ohio. On the opposite page are shown cuts of two of the tableaux mentioned above.



Dolinsky Stages Prelude for "Humoresque"

New York East Side Theatre Gives Presentation Prologue Worthy of Broadway House

On the lower East Side, New York, where automobiles are an occasion, a stiff collar an event, where the gravestones are inscribed in Jewish and where the most thickly populated Jewish section exists in the New World, "Humoresque" established a record and marked an epoch when it played at Loew's Avenue B theatre, at Avenue B and Fifth Street.

Despite the fact that the universal appeal of the picture was sufficiently great to produce a new record here as elsewhere, the mark was established largely through clever exploitation put on by Herman M. Dolinsky, manager of the theatre, whose assistant is Sol. D. Potsdam. The section had been flooded with window posters in Jewish.

For the exhibition of "Humoresque" Manager Dolinsky staged a prologue that harmonized with the picture. As the opening number of the performance, while the house was still in darkness, the orchestra played "Kol Nidra." Then the curtain was slowly raised while a chorus of twelve trained voices, chosen from the choirs of Cantor Joseph Rosenblatt and Cantor Quartin sang "Eli, Eli," the Jewish song, which has an irresistible appeal and which is rapidly becoming associated with "Humoresque." At the conclusion of the chorus the stage was again darkened momentarily. Then a small inset scene was shown under a powerful spotlight, disclosing the figure of an aged Jewish woman, the type of the mother in the picture, blessing the candles according to the Jewish weekly custom. As soon as the scene had been shown long enough to arouse the intended effect the stage was again darkened, the screen lowered and the picture started.

Exploitation on the exterior of the theatre was also a material help. The front lobby was decorated with palms, trellis work, bunting, American flags and framed posters of the picture. Above the entrance to the side alley of the theatre, but facing the street, Manager Dolinsky had erected an alcove with an unusual exploitation scene—the figure of the Jewish mother standing in prayer over the candles. Electric bulbs supplied the candle light. Throughout the day a phonograph played "Eli, Eli" and "The Kol Nidra" from this alcove. Coming as it did from above the heads of passersby it had a magnetic effect.

At a general 40 cent admission the theatre crowded capacity audiences every day of the week, and while no figures were given for publication, the business for the week was a record breaker in every respect. Manager Dolinsky's enterprise in recognizing the exploitation opportunities open to him in showing "Humoresque" to his class of patronage is second only in the realization of the tremendous appeal of the picture which swamped all previous box office records in what is recognizedly one of the poorest sections of the city and where money for entertainments is the exception rather than the rule.

Renco Begins Big Picture

Director Lloyd Ingraham Starts Shooting "Lavender and Old Lace"

MONTHS of preparation finally have borne fruit in the commencement of production by the Renco Film Company of the Myrtle Reed masterpiece, "Lavender and Old Lace." In announcing the beginning of actual shooting, under Director Lloyd Ingraham at the Louis B. Mayer studies, Los Angeles, President H. J. Reynolds of Renco reveals an elaborate production program for his company that contemplates the launching of the Reed novels as one of the big features of screendom in 1920.

"Lavender and Old Lace" is Renco's first production. It will be followed in the next few months by several others of the author's works, and it is probable that another company will begin work on the Renco lot in a few weeks.

Director Ingraham comes to the new organization fresh from several screen successes, his last venture being the direction of "Twin Beds." For the part of Mary Ainslee, Mr. Ingraham cast Marguerite Snow, famous for her lead in the "Million Dollar Mystery." Seena Owen is playing "Ruth Thorne," the young newspaper woman, and opposite her is Louis Bennison, well remembered on Broadway in "Johnny Get Your Gun." A clever comedy part has been given Victor Potel, the famous "Slippery Slim," who will be the village cab driver. James Corrigan and Lillian Elliott, both of whom recently closed a long engagement with the Morosco Stock Company, and Zella Ingraham and Kittie Bradbury complete the cast.

A staff of technical experts, including George Crone and Bobby McGowan, is assisting Director Ingraham. Ross Fisher is doing the turning.

"Lavender and Old Lace" probably will be finished about Oct. 1, and immediately thereafter President Reynolds plans to start his second Reed Production.

Pre-View of Levey Film

"Uncle Sam of Freedom Ridge" Is First Feature of New Company

THE special pre-release invitation showing of "Uncle Sam of Freedom Ridge," the Harry Levey Productions first release, is scheduled to take place on September 26th, at the Selwyn theatre in New York City.

The Harry Levey Productions is the second company formed by Mr. Levey within two months, the first being the Harry Levey Service Corporation, for the making of industrial-educational motion pictures, exclusively. Having launched that well on the way to success, Mr. Levey chartered his second company, whose program is the making of eight feature dramatic photoplays a year—these photoplays to be "pictures with a purpose."

Having started this company, Mr. Levey secured as his first picture the rights to "Uncle Sam of Freedom Ridge," a story which, since it appeared in the June issue of the Atlantic Monthly, has been one of the most widely discussed stories of the year.

When Mr. Levey secured the screen rights of "Uncle Sam of Freedom Ridge," the director, George A. Beranger, known as a member of D. W. Griffith's staff, and the cast, including George MacQuarrie, William S. Corbett, Paul Kelly, Helen Flint, Leslie Hunt, Sheridan Tansey and Eugene Keith, were actually signed up the same day—and that night actual work of production was begun at the studios in New York.

The picture is an eight-reel feature, comprised of 550 scenes. Work went forward night and day—a basis of 21 actual working hours a day being established, with shifts and hours for each shift being clearly defined. Allowances was even made for weather conditions on the making of the exterior scenes.

Ed. Hemmer Picture Titled

"Birthright" First Feature of Hemmer Superior Productions

"BIRTHRIGHT" is the title selected for the initial production of Hemmer Superior Productions, Inc., according to announcement made by Edward Hemmer, president. Its selection came after careful study of the picture, which runs five reels. The meaning conveyed is suited to the action, which tells a story of a young girl who, after many hardships and much adventure, eventually falls heir to her birthright. The various scenes have been worked out so that the contrasts created make the play one of unusual appeal.

Among the cast are such stars as Flora Finch, Sidney Mason, Henry Sedley, Bessie Stinson and many others. Maud Sylvester, ingenue lead, made her debut in pictures with the Hemmer players and has interpreted skillfully the role in which she is cast. Margaret Beecher, grand-daughter of Henry Ward Beecher, is seen in an important part. Pete Raymond, veteran of the legitimate stage, fills a character role, while Milton Berlinger, eleven-year-old juvenile impersonater of Al Jolson, is featured in several big scenes.

Although the release of the picture, some time ago, had been forecast for early in September, certain changes were decided upon, and making the changes necessitated postponing the release date several weeks. Mr. Hemmer could not say definitely what the new release date would be, but he did say that it would probably be around the first of October.

Elmer McGovern, film editor, is attending personally to the work of cutting and changing situations about. This task will be completed very shortly as changes yet to be made are few in number.

Capital Film Buys Series

Acquires Cuneo in Five Reelers; Production Will Start at Once

W. D. RUSSELL, general manager of the Capital Film Company, has just returned to Chicago from the coast, and announces that he has purchased from Russell, Greiver & Russell a series of five-reel productions starring Lester Cuneo. Work will begin immediately on the first picture.

Mr. Cuneo has had a varied experience on the legitimate stage and also in pictures that is said to fit him for a stellar position. He had eight years' stage experience in New York productions, and three years in Col. Selig's productions, including Western features with Kathlyn Williams.

After completing his three years with Selig, he joined Marshall Farnum, brother of Dustin and William, on the "101 Ranch" at Bliss, Oklahoma. From "101" he went with Essanay, leaving that company to go with Francis X. Bushman to Metro, later leaving Metro to join the Lockwood Company.

Francelia Billington, who played the doctor's wife in "Blind Husbands," will play opposite Mr. Cuneo for Capital. Mr. Russell states that stories have been purchased that will give Mr. Cuneo the opportunity to produce pictures which Capital will guarantee to rank second to none.

Arrow Serial a Sensation

"Thunderbolt Jack" a Thriller of High Order; to Be Released Soon

REPORTS from the Arrow Film Corporation indicate that their latest serial, "Thunderbolt Jack," will prove a most sensational serial.

This serial, which stars Jack Hoxie who is supported by Marin Sais, is said by Arrow to contain more sensational incidents and situations for terrific suspense than have ever been incorporated in a cinematographic production.

"Thunderbolt Jack" is a western serial and as both Jack Hoxie and Marin Sais are expert riders it was possible for the director, Francis Ford, to secure some of the most sensational scenes possible to execute. For genuine daring and absolute nerve it is claimed that "Thunderbolt Jack" exceeds the wildest hope of the serial fan.

"Thunderbolt Jack" is in fifteen episodes and it is stated that each one carries the spectator in breathless suspense from one thrilling incident to another with scarcely a breathing space.

An attractive attribute to Pinnacle Comedies

Independent Films' Success

Five Producers Seek to Place Pictures with New Concern

WITHIN the past two weeks, five different producers are reported to have visited the offices of the Independent Films Association in the Consumers Building, Chicago, to negotiate for distribution of their output through the Association. During the same period, Eddy Eckels, general manager of the Association, has been offered two female stars and three male stars, all of first magnitude, in series releases.

In the very near future it is certain that Independent will announce a new series of releases for the state right market—and indications point to the acquisition of a series of big productions with a female star of big drawing power.

Early in July the Association took over the exclusive distribution of Pinnacle Productions, starring Neal Hart in a series of eight productions founded on well known and successful plays of action and human interest. Within the unbelievable period of thirty days, the entire United States had been closed on the Hart series—and in many territories competition is reported to have waxed so keen among the exchange men over the Hart franchises that it became a problem to adjust the differences that developed.

The case of Pinnacle Comedies was even more remarkable, it is said. Distribution arrangements were completed with the producers of Pinnacle Comedies the latter part of August. A very small announcement of the forthcoming releases appeared August 28 in The News. The first national advertisement of Pinnacle Comedies was not published until Septtember 11. Yet in the two weeks following August 28, when the first rumor of these two-reel releases reached the state right dealers, a flood of inquiries by mail and telegraph swamped the offices of the Association, and half of the country had been closed under option prior to the publication of the first full-page advertisement.

Starting out with the conviction that first-class attractions produced expressly for the independent exchanges were badly needed, Eddy Eckels and his associates launched an advertising and exploitation campaign that made the industry sit up and take notice. Results secured were startling and, in many instances, unexpected. Congratulations and comments of a most flattering character have been received from some of the biggest factors in the films, and the growth of the Association is right now the talk of the industry.

The same cleverness and originality which characterize the Association's own advertising are to be found in the exploitation materials supplied by it to exchange men for the use of the exhibitors. New ideas have been introduced in the making of posters, lobby photos and advertising cuts, and the exhibitors' press books are exhaustively complete. The theatre men have been supplied with ammunition of the sure-fire sort by means of which to carry out their campaign aimed at the general public.

Additional units of distribution are eagerly awaited by the exchanges throughout the country; and with the Association's policies so well known and so heartily approved, and its practice of fulfilling its promises so well established, the time is at hand when productions of merit accepted for distribution by the Independent Films Association may be contracted throughout every territory in the United States and Canada by telegraph in twenty-four hours.

Bert Lubin Heads New Firm

BERT LUBIN, well known to exhibitors, exchange men and state right buyers throughout this country and Canada, has announced that he will head a new company, which will enter the state rights field with a series of specially selected feature productions. The name of Lubin's new enterprise has not as yet been made public, but it is understood that the company will commence operations immediately. A five reel Western feature will be the first scheduled release for the state rights market. This picture has already been finished, and a complete advertising and exploitation campaign is now in preparation.

Offices of the company will be maintained on the eleventh floor of the Longacre Building at 1476 Broadway.

Mr. Lubin is not a newcomer in the state rights field. He was general sales manager for "Virtuous Men," which is said to have made an unusual success throughout this country and abroad. In addition he handled many other independent productions.

Canyon Offers Six Westerns

"The Galloping Devil" is First, Starring Franklyn Farnum

CANYON PICTURES announce for release on a state right basis a series of six Western features, the first of which is "The Galloping Devil," starring Franklyn Farnum and directed by Nate Watt, who acted in a similar capacity for Annette Kellerman's "What Women Love."

Based on a story by B. M. Bower, known for his Saturday Evening Post stories and novels of the great West, "The Galloping Devil" is said to contain every element calculated to appeal to admirers of virile, red-blooded people involved in real life problems. It is swiftly moving, intensely human and mounts to a climax of genuine power and plausibility.

Firm in the belief that by reason of the Western picture's popularity in the early days of the industry, the same character of photoplay, if produced in the modern manner, with finer photography, more intelligent direction and more human acting, would offer strong competition to the so-called society dramas now in vogue, Canyon Pictures has spared neither expense nor effort to bring back to the screen the thrills it sometimes misses.

The character of Andy Green (played by Franklyn Farnum) is claimed to be rich in human interest and appeal from the moment he makes known his pride in his fancy vest to the proof he gives of his physical prowess, and, later, his courage and splendid daring.

Not content with investing "The Galloping Devil" with brisk movement and wholesome love interest, the producers announce that they have succeeded in maintaining absolutely correct atmosphere and detail, with all the scenic beauty of the West as it really is. Cowboys by the score, fast and furious riding, moonlit mountains and blistering plains—all have been caught with intelligent understanding.

This first picture will be "The Bandit of Hell's Gap," an up-to-date western story, said to be replete with action and thrills.

Fritzi Ridgeway, who has played opposite Wm. S. Hart in many of his biggest successes, and been associated with most of the best producers releasing westerns, here makes her debut as a film star in her own right.

The Capital Film Company will release two Ridgeways every month. They have purchased twenty-four stories.

Forms New Independent

Merle Johnson Announces Organization to Make Comedy Dramas

MERLE JOHNSON, one of the youngest motion picture directors in the business, announces the formation of his own company, casting for which is now going on. Mr. Johnson, whose most recent work was the direction of the Herbert Kauffman Screen Sermons, will make five-reel feature pictures in a New York studio. The photoplays made under his direction will be comedy dramas. No yearly schedule will be followed, each picture receiving the time and attention considered requisite for its needs.

Mr. Johnson intends to follow the policy of featuring a well-known player, of grouping around the star a cast of high class players. His stories will be in the main drawn from original sources, and he is busily engaged at present creating a complete scenario and casting department. He contemplates breaking away from the present custom of adapting stage and literary successes to screen usage.

"We intend to obtain players who will fit their roles," said Mr. Johnson, "whether they are among the highest priced stars of the screen or whether they are breaking into motion picture work."

An announcement regarding the cast and the directorate of Merle Johnson Productions will be made public shortly.

Polish Travelogue Issued

"Jewish Poland To-Day" Depicts Foreign Life in Six Two Reelers

WHAT is described as one of the most attractive travelogues ever offered to the public, is now on the State Right market available for buyers. It is entitled "Jewish Poland To-Day" and is being issued as a series of six two-reel special features by Henry Rosenfelt, with offices at 15 East 40th street, New York City.

"Jewish Poland To-Day" recently enjoyed a three weeks' run at Madison Square Garden in New York City, opening August 28th. At that time it received a favorable criticism from New York reviewers, who described it as an accurate, touching, and appealing picturization of the sufferings and hardships of the Jews in the various Polish towns.

The pictures were taken in June and July, 1920, in eleven large Polish cities. In them are shown the ruined building of Brest-Litovsk, while the every-day scenes of Polish life are faithfully depicted. The pictures are expected to have an unusually strong appeal in theatres having a Jewish patronage, for many theatregoers will be able to recognize the townsfolks they will see on the screen.

The titles of the picture will be printed in both Jewish and English.

In a letter to Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., Walter A. Baier, of the Kay-Bee Company, says that the direct to the exhibitor advertising campaign, which Fine Arts has been conducting, is proving valuable in arranging for advance bookings.

In addition, he says, Fine Arts' policy of continuing the trade magazine advertising campaign even after the territory has been disposed of is bound to prove popular with state right buyers everywhere.

"Virgin of Paris" By Anthony Hope

The six-reel feature "The Virgin of Paris" which will soon be released on the territorial plan by Harry R. Raver is an adaptation of Anthony Hope's most famous book, which was printed in seventeen languages.

While Mr. Hope is considered one of the greatest authors writing in the English language and many of his works have been translated into foreign tongues, none of his books reached the high record attained by "Sophia" upon which "The Virgin of Paris" is based. It is said that more than three million copies of this book had been sold.

Those previous pictures which were made from Hope books have all proven big successes. Among them are numbered "The Prisoner of Zenda" and "Ruppert of Hentzau."

The leading part of the picture, "The Virgin," is played by Diana Kareni, the famous Polish actress whose name figured in many Associated News dispatches during the regime of Paderewski. She is Poland's greatest actress and occupies as prominent place in her country as do the Barrymores in America.

Miss Karenski was given capable support by Walter Gordon, William Creswisk, Clara Denvil, Philip Ashley, Lewis J. Mortimer, Florence Temple, Marjorie Strickland, J. R. Phelps and Marie Paton.

"Unfair Sex" Contains Varied Locale

According to advance notices from Artclass Corporation's offices, their latest production, "The Unfair Sex," will hold several distinct bids for favor in the way of variety and contrasting themes. The story is a society drama, opening at college and devoting its first two and a half reels to some elaborate background. The beautiful Loft estate at Rockville Center, Long Island, and the Glen Curtis place at Garden City, serves as setting for these episodes.

The action next moves to Turkey and to picturesque and camera-rich interiors. Following is the African jungle portion of the tale, where the eighteen lions, the chimpanzee, and other animal members of the cast come into the plot. The Messrs. Weiss of Artclass Corporation own a large collection of acting animals and the entire lot is to be used in the present story.

The cast is headed by Walter Miller, with Anne Luther, Dorothy Bernard, and Armand Cortez in the support. John Joseph Harvey is directing, and John K. Holbrook is supervising.

Seaboard Film Corp. Expanding

THE Seaboard Film Corporation, of Washington, announced a change in their policy whereby they depart from their previous policy of distributing short subjects exclusively.

Under the new arrangement, as announced by President Coleman and Secretary White of the Seaboard, a special department will be opened for the handling of features and serials. This is to be installed at once and will be supervised by Mr. H. Bobys, who until last week was connected with Pathe's Washington Exchange. He has been installed as serial and feature manager, and will devote his time exclusively to the handling of this new department.

President Coleman announced that the Seaboard has been able to conclude a contract whereby they secure the exclusive distribution rights on "Thunderbolt Jack," the new Arrow release starring Jack Hoxie and featuring Marin Sais. This serial was produced by the Berwilla Film Corporation under the supervision of Ben Wilson and Joe Brandt. Release date for "Thunderbolt Jack" has been set in the Washington territory as November 1st.

Mr. Coleman also announced a list of high-class features with which to start their new department. Among these are "The Golden Trail," starring Jane Novak, "Bachelor Apartments," starring Georgia Hopkins, and "Before the White Man Came," a picture with an all Indian cast.

In speaking of the new department, President Coleman said: "My experience as a distributor of short subjects in Washington and vicinity has shown me the necessity of supplying the exhibitor of this territory with high-class features and serials. I find that there is a strong demand among the independent exhibitors for productions of this nature.

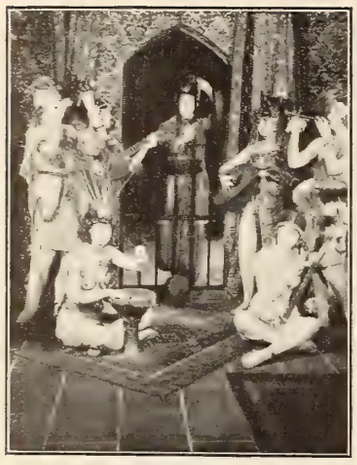
"In making careful search of the independent releasing organizations we were fortunate enough to secure a line of features and a serial, which we consider far superior to anything that is on the market. These are productions handled by the Arrow Film Corporation and include 'The Golden Trail,' a five reel dramatic production starring Jane Novak and Jack Livingston. This is a picture of the frozen north and is, in my estimation, one of the biggest productions of the year. It contains some of the most remarkable scenes I have ever seen portrayed in a motion picture, and I feel sure that it will prove a big money maker for the exhibitor.

"'Bachelor Apartments' is a five reel comedy starring Georgia Hopkins, a young woman of undoubted ability who shows much promise as a comedienne and who will undoubtedly be a big favorite with the fans. A most unusual picture entitled 'Before the White Man Came,' completes the list of features. This production is an authentic picturization of one of the most dramatic chapters in the history of the American Indians.

"To meet the serial requirements, we contracted with the Arrow for their newest and biggest serial, 'Thunderbolt Jack.' This serial stars the popular favorite, Jack Hoxie, who is supported by one of the most popular leading women in the serial business, Marin Sais."

Second Warner-Selig Serial

A SECOND Warner Brothers animal serial, produced by Col. William Selig, is assured for the independent market, according to an announcement recently issued at the Warner Brothers office in New York City. The contract, which was signed on Friday, September 17th, calls for a fifteen episode serial to be developed along the lines of latest Warner-Selig serial success, "The Lost City."



"We are going to make another success," said Mr. Warner in a recent interview, "and one that will prove just as popular with the motion picture public as was 'The Lost City.' We feel that with the experience and facilities of Col. Selig, there can be little doubt but that we will put across a winner. As the contract was only signed recently, it is impossible for me to announce at this time the name of the star and other features which will be of interest to exhibitors. However, these facts will be given to the trade as soon as possible."

"The Lost City" was the last serial made by Col. Selig and distributed by Warner Brothers. Juanita Hansen was starred in the production, which was an animal serial of the most lavish type. The action was laid in the jungle, and innumerable thrills were obtained by the master-producer, by means of many wild animals. The forthcoming serial will, it is said, fully equal its predecessor in the line of action and thrills. It will be produced in California.

"Exhibitors have come to believe in our judgment," said Mr. Warner; "there were many who made big money on 'The Lost City,' and we feel that they are looking to us to produce another just as good. But we are not going to be satisfied with 'just as good.' In our new serial we will draw on all our previous experience. It has been proved to the exhibitor that the serial is not dead, and we have proven that the animal serials are the most popular of any type."

It is expected that production of the serial will be started in the near future. It will be ready for the market by next February.

"For the state righter," concluded Mr. Warner, "who is looking for some reason to excuse himself for not buying 'The Lost City,' we can offer him our forthcoming serial. We hope that there will be others besides those who profited by 'The Lost City' who will handle our next."

"Roman Candles" Opens at Clunes

The initial production of Master Pictures, Inc. was given its premier at Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, on the evening of Monday, September 13, where it is planned the picture shall continue an attraction for several weeks. The title of the subject is "Roman Candles" starring J. Frank Glendon, most recent leading man of Clara Kimball Young. The production was made under the direction of Jack Pratt from an original photoplay by W. S. Forysth. The showing at the Auditorium is preceded by a prologue which creates the atmosphere of a South American city on a holiday.

"Roman Candles" is a tale of an American ne'er-do-well son of a fireworks manufacturer who visits an imaginary republic as a salesman. The fireworks serve in celebrations and prove to be the main feature in putting down several revolutions in as many days. Glendon does the best work of his screen career in this picture and stages a number of stunts that puts him in the near acrobatic class.

The cast does not contain many screen-known people. Leading roles were taken by Hector Sarno, Edward Kimball and Jack Pratt. The leading woman is Pholda Morgan. This is her first experience on the screen.

Urban Increases His Library

West Indies Films of University Expedition for Kineto Review

A VALUABLE addition has just been made to the Urban Popular Classics through the cooperation of the University of Iowa. An expedition which the University had in the West Indies for many months returned recently with remarkable photographic records. These have been edited by Charles Urban and made an integral part of the Kineto Reviews. They form a permanent part of Mr. Urban's library and through his cooperation they become available for theatres as well as for the distribution purposes the University of Iowa intended them for. They are said to be amazingly entertaining, despite the usual belief that anything so worth while cannot also be pleasant.

The expedition which secured the pictures was under the direction of Professor C. C. Nutting. The photography is by Maurice Ricker, widely known as a traveller and educator and welfare service worker.

The pictures take the audience into the islands of St. Croix, St. Kitts, Barbados and all the interesting places of that part of the world.

Mr. Urban has written the titles himself and they are said to be in a crisp, informative, pleasantly light style.

The Capital Film Company, Chicago, has ready for release, "Witch's Lure," a drama with an all-star cast. W. D. Russell, general manager of the Capital Film Company, says "Witch's Lure" is not acting, but a thrilling page taken bodily from life punctuated by derricks, rigs and tanks. The district where the story is placed forms the great objective for the modern Argonauts who are heading in endless procession toward the stretches of oil bearing land in Texas, Oklahoma and Louisiana."

"The subject of oil is the livest fiction topic of to-day in the United States. Popular magazines are all running fascinating stories, the locations of which are placed in the oil fields of Texas and Oklahoma."

"Witch's Lure" has an unusually noted cast. Among the prominent ones are Augustus Phillips, Gene Gauntier, Edward Coxen, Charles Mailes and Spottiswood Aitken.

Bory Osso, American representative for the Associated Authors of France, has just returned from a two months' stay in Paris, where he gathered many stories for American producers and directors.

"At last the French author confesses that he has found an equal in the American playwright. For centuries authors from all over the world have looked towards France for inspiration, and now the young French authors are studying the methods adopted by the Americans.

"The French concede without reservation that the American pictures are the best coming to France. They admire and study the technique, the beautiful settings, the interpretation of the story, and especially the wonderful photography.

Fox Premiere in New York

"Over the Hill to the Poorhouse" Takes Place in Broadway Theatre

THE William Fox production "Over the Hill to the Poor-House," which was directed by Harry Millarde, had its premiere presentation at the Astor theatre in New York on September 17th.

If smiles, tears and applause may be taken as a criterion "Over the Hill to the Poorhouse," stood the test without a jar. It did so because of several factors—not the least of these being the happy combined use of the original Will Carleton poem and its sequel, "Over the Hill from the Poor-House," Mr. Fox apparently elected to assuage the pathos of the original story with the smiles found in the sequel.

The leading role falls to the lot of Mary Carr, whose portrayal of the mother is beautiful. Others in the cast whose work stands out as particularly clever are Noel Tearle, who plays the part of Isaac, the son who quotes scripture but fails to apply it; Jerry Devine and John Walker respectively, the young and the grown-up "black-sheep" son; William Welch, who has the role of the father, and Dorothy Allen as Agulutia, Isaac's wife.

Barker Completes Picture

"Godless Men," Magazine Story, Will Feature Helen Chadwick

WITH his picturization of Katherine Newlin Burt's great novel, "The Branding Iron," in all Goldwyn branch exchanges, Reginald Barker has just completed a new picture. It is called "Godless Men" and was adapted for the screen from Ben Ames Williams' sea story of "Black Pawl," which recently appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. The entire action, with the exception of a few brief scenes on a South Sea Island, takes place aboard a two-masted schooner. What is said to be one of the greatest fights ever staged before the camera takes place on board the ship in a violent storm.

Director Barker selected Helen Chadwick for the role of Ruth Lytton, and her acting of the part was so excellent that Goldwyn, after seeing the film run off, decided to feature her in the picture Russel Simpson has the greatest screen role of his career as Black Pawl, and makes the most of it. James Mason was cast as Red Pawl, and is an able second to Mr. Simpson. John Bowers plays opposite Miss Chadwick, while Alec. B. Francis is seen as the returning missionary. Others in the cast are Robert Kortman, Irene Rich and Lionel Belmore.

The Joan Film Sales Co. announces the formation of the Joan Service Bureau, intended to assist all states-rights buyers of Joan pictures in advertising, publicity and exploitation of the Joan pictures in their respective territory. DeHaven Signs for Two More

Carter de Haven, who has closed a deal with First National for a series of multiple reel comedies to follow his initial release, "Twin Beds," in affiliation with Arthur S. Kane

JUST prior to his leaving for Los Angeles this week Carter De Haven, who came to New York immediately following the delivery to Associated First National of "Twin Beds," the first of the feature productions of the Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven Company, announced the signing of contracts for two further pictures to be made for First National. Work upon the first of the two, Mr. De Haven states will be put in hand immediately following his arrival on the Coast. "My Lady Friends," the three act farce comedy by Frank Mandel and Emil Nyitray produced at the Comedy theatre, New York, and in which the late Clifton Crawford appeared at the Princess theatre, New York, and "The Girl in the Taxi," are the pictures now contracted for.

"I am deeply gratified by the consummation of these contracts with Associated First National," stated Mr. De Haven in an interview, "proving as it does that success has attended the efforts of the Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven Producing Company in turning out as its initial production a picture which has, in the approval and acceptance of 'Twin Beds' by the selection committee of Associated First National, met what is acknowledged to be perhaps the most stringent and searching test of value it is possible to obtain.

"I recognized, when a few weeks ago I came to New York following the completion of our first picture, that upon its merits or otherwise depended the success of the production policy the Carter De Haven organization has set for itself, namely, the policy of clean treatment of farce comedy so that its entertainment value should hold good, not merely for that oft quoted individual 'the tired business man,' but should be available and acceptable to a far larger class, namely, that of women and of young people of both sexes."

Confirming the signing of the contract with the Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven Productions Company, an exhibitor-official of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., stated: "That Associated First National has signed a contract with the De Haven Company for two more productions is naturally and of itself a complete endorsement of the production of 'Twin Beds' which has not merely passed the acid test applied to it, but which by its treatment and high quality sets a new mark in productions of farce comedy. So satisfied are we that here is a field of entertainment that will prove of inestimable value to our exhibitor members, and so closely, in our opinion, do Mr. De Haven's ideas of the worth while in farce comedy entertainment coincide with the requirements of today that we did not hesitate to secure for our fellow exhibitors a lien on the immediate future output after a careful consideration of the material offered by the further stage successes to which Mr. De Haven has secured the screen rights."

Bruce Learns a Lot of Language in Air

ROBERT C. BRUCE creator of "Scenics Beautiful" which are released through Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., recently had a narrow escape from death while taking pictures of the Matterhorn from an aeroplane, according to advices that have just been received by the home company.

When Lieut. Max Cartier, one of the French aviation force, was 600 feet over the peak, which itself projects 14,700 feet into the atmosphere the picture called for the airship to turn completely over. This was not all. The pilot spoke French only and the observer only the official Swiss language of the section, which used to be called German. So this was what Bruce registered:

"Je suis near kilt. Go hime, pronte, we, we monseer, for the love of Mike."

And the air ship landed at St. Michael's in France, where the people speak only German.

"The Devil's Angel" on Market

Clark Cornelius Corp. to Handle Hiller Production

"THE Devil's Angel," described as a romance of Bohemia, vibrating with intrigue, occult influence and Oriental mystery, will be released through state right exchanges, according to an announcement from S. J. Rollo, secretary of the Clark Cornelius Corporation, who is handling the distribution of the production.

"The Devil's Angel," was produced under the direction and supervision of Lejaren a' Hiller, an artist of national reputation, whose artistic illustrations are to be found in every month's issue of the big magazines published in America.

Mr. Hiller is the originator of what is known as "photographic illustration." In "The Devil's Angel," he is said to have brought before the camera the eye and the skill of the artist, which is revealed in strikingly beautiful and picturesque lighting effects and unique photographic scenes. That Mr. Hiller is also an actor of unusual ability is proved by his work in this production in which he plays opposite the beautiful Helen Gardner in the role of a young artist.

Another artist of unusual attainments who has an important role in "The Devil's Angel," is C. D. Williams, who has achieved wide fame as a painter. Included in the brilliant cast are a half dozen beautiful young women who have been models for such famous artists as Charles Dana Gibson, Penhryn Stanlaws, Harrison Fisher, Henry Olive and others noted for their artistic talents and whose work has delighted the eye of millions throughout the world on the covers of America's most famous magazines.

Hypnotism and its mysterious phenomena provide the basis of the theme in "The Devil's Angel," resulting in a tense dramatic production, which, aided by the artistic hand of Mr. Hiller, will prove, it is claimed, a revelation in motion picture entertainment.

How the beautiful girl, who had become dominated by the hypnotic powers of a Hindu mystic, succeeds in throwing off the malevolent influence and freeing herself so that she might be free to join her artist lover, is portrayed in a drama of human interest and heart appeal.

The extraordinary psychic revelations recently made by Sir Oliver Lodge, Sir Conan Doyle, and other noted delvers into the spiritual world, has brought the occult sciences into much discussion of late, and every element along this line is given wide opportunity for unusual exploitation through the handling of the story under the guidance of Mr. Hiller.

"Its notable cast," says Mr. Rollo, of Clark Cornelius Corporation, "including such artists as Templar Saxe, Lejaren a Hiller, Helen Gardner and many others will prove a powerful appeal at the box office anywhere. The innumerable striking scenes and the beautiful lighting effects, which only an artist of the first magnitude could produce, will long be remembered as really the first of their kind.

"Its innumerable exploitation angles, striking presentation possibilities and timely subject combined with its exceptional dramatic quality, artistic effects and superlative production are bound to make it one of the most successful independent productions ever released."

Clark Cornelius Corporation is distributing the picture in America, with the Alexander Film Corporation controlling world's rights.

Concert League Offers Artists

AN announcement that will be welcomed by all large theatres comes from the offices of the New York Concert League through its Motion-Picture Department and says in substance that no stone is being left unturned to supply the first-run exhibitors with the very finest musical talent-soloists, both vocal and instrumental, ensembles, and novelties of all kinds, of a variety generous enough to meet the needs of every particular theatre.

The list of attractions offered to first-run houses as prologues for their pictures reads like the roster of Broadway's biggest concert stars—all of them, it is said, with reputations of successful engagements at the Strand, Rivoli, Rialto and the Capitol in New York and many others out of town.

Among the sopranos are listed such positive hits as Amanda Brown, a coloratura soprano of unusual merit and reputation; Athene Buckley, who has just concluded an engagement at the Capitol; Jane Adams for thirty weeks at the Madison in Detroit; Emmy Ziegeuner, who has been held over week after week at the Brooklyn Strand; Bessie McCoy, a concert soprano who is receiving a big reception at the New Stadium theatre in Brooklyn and who is booked over the Saenger Circuit in New Orleans.

The tenors include such artists as Sudworth Frasier, for twenty weeks at the Capitol and still going strong; Leon Zario, who sang the lead in opera at the Capitol and is now going over at the Broadway Strand in Detroit; Leonid Sanford, an operatic tenor who scored phenomenal success with the Boston English Opera Company; the contraltos include Ruth Watson, a contralto of prominence in the middle west; Eran Pielka, just concluding an engagement at the Broadway theatre and preparing for a tour of the southern theatres; Alice Doughty, recently returned from a New England tour.

The baritone include such names as Gordon Kay, Carlo Ferreti, baritone of the New York Strand; Jackson Kinsey and Lester Bingley, American baritones of reputation and merit. The bassos include Wilfred Glenn, basso of the Capitol; Pierre Remington, operatic basso-cantante, and Herman Price, recently arrived from the Covent Garden Opera in London.

In addition to the above, there are specialties and novelties under the management of this Concert League such as the Oumansky Ballets, staged and arranged by Alexander Oumansky, Ballet-Master at the Capitol. These ballets are made to suit the picture, and are adapted to the stage, setting and properties of any theatre. The Mendelsohn Quartet, four male singers; the Russian Imperial Ensemble, a five-piece combination that doubles on three different instruments and that has toured motion-picture theatres with Griffith productions, all are among the novelties offered.

Of special significance is the fact that the New York Concert League of 1664 Broadway advises the exhibitor as to his musical program, besides supplying him with its artists, and suggests the details of the prologue from beginning to end.

A scene from the Thomas H. Ince production, "The Jailbird," a Paramount release in which Douglas MacLean is starred Charles Urban's Movie Chats are now being shown regularly on the fast trains that run between New York and New Orleans, according to an announcement from Kineto. Major A. Harrison, of the Harcol Film Company, distributors for the Charles Urban Movie Chats in the South, originated the plan. He took it up with the railroad officials and it was put into effect with immediate success, for reports from the South say that the train passengers are delighted with this new entertainment angle.

A phonograph with specially selected records to synchronize with the subject matter of the films is used.

Gaumont Series of Six Proving Big Winners

Enthusiastic reports of the Gaumont series of six special features are reported by that company. The entire Eastern territory and a large part of the West have been sold.

Schlank, whereby Mr. Schlank is to make a series of eighteen one-reel comedies, starring Billy Fletcher and Violet Joy, both formerly members of the Christie Comedies. These comedies are to be known as Spotlight Comedies and will be released one a week. Morris R. Schlank is the producer of the Hank Mann Comedies, which are also being released by Arrow.

Simultaneous Offering of Awyon Features

According to an announcement from Nathan Hirsh, president of the Aywon Film Corporation, considerable interest is being shown in his new policy of making a number of features available for the independent exchanges all at the same time. In this way he has made it possible for the state rights men to be able to offer the exhibitors a line of good attractions and so enable both to make contracts and bookings ahead which enables the theatre men to arrange their programs and advanec campaigns.

At the present time Mr. Hirsh has ready for release, in the order named, "The Woman Above Reproach," starring Florence Chase; "The Evolution of Man," a picture based on the Darwin theory with the Man-Ape Jack playing the leading role; "The Woman of Mystery," a drama with Frances Ford and Grace Cunard as the featured players, and "Thirty Years Between."

House Peters in "The Great Redeemer"

WHEN H. H. Van Loan, undoubtedly the most prolific screen author of the year wrote "The Great Redeemer" he hit on a theme that should recommend itself to every showman.

First, there is that always to be desired "uplift" thought. Its principal characters are better men and women at the end of the picture than they were at the beginning.

Second, the theme has an element of religion with no sectarian tinge.

Third, it presents many unusual exploitation opportunities, some of which are on the novelty order.

Fourth, it is an excellent subject for the use of a prologue that would not only lend atmosphere to the screening but also be entertainment in itself and act as a box office magnet.

Fifth, it is well constructed, well directed, a highly original picture that should please any class of audience.

"The Great Redeemer" is directed by Clarence Brown under the personal direction of Maurice Tourneur from an original story by H. H. Van Loan author of "The Virgin of Stamboul," "Three Gold Coins," "Blue Streak McCoy" and many other current successes.

The adaptation is by Jack Gilbert, and Jules Furthman. Charles J. Van Enger was the cameraman.

House Peters is the star. He will be remembered for his work in "Silk Husbands and Calico Wives" and such older feature pictures as "The Great Divide."

Marjorie Daw plays opposite Mr. Peters. Miss Daw was Douglas Fairbanks' leading woman for several years, appearing with him in all of his Paramount Artcraft pictures. One of her recent successes was "The River's End." The cast of principals is small but it is exceedingly competent. Jack Macdonald is the Sheriff with a very good "heavy" role and Joseph Singleton plays the part of a condemned murderer, a character part presenting unequaled acting opportunities.

THE STORY OF "THE GREAT REDEEMER"

Dan Malloy, outlaw, bandit and holdup man finally goes to prison to pay the penalty of his crimes. To while away the dreary hours he indulges in a natural talent for painting and upon the walls of his cell, executes a wonderful portrait of the Savior on the Cross that converts a condemned and blasphemous murderer to a faith in God and brings resignation in his approaching death and also stirs into life the almost smothered impulses for good that have laid dormant in the painter's own soul.

When Malloy is pardoned and is again free he goes forth to a new life with the girl he had loved and who loved him when he was a fugitive from justice.

Advance Advertising Suggestions

THE fact that "The Great Redeemer" is founded on a theme that presents its principal character as a bandit who is reformed while in prison by a portrait he paints of the Savior, suggests that the production would be interesting to churches and clergyman.

Make arrangements with your exchange for a print of the picture about a week in advance of the regular showing. Invite all the clergymen, other church officials of prominence and well known church and charity workers to a special performance of the picture. We would suggest that you make a personal call on the ministers, explain your mission in detail with your reasons for wanting the churches to see the picture and not just send out a printed invitation which probably would be ignored by a lot of the people you want to interest. Your advertising especially from a free newspaper space angle will depend on the number and the prominence of the people you entertain. You will of course invite the newspaper men and see that they are furnished with a list of the guests.

You can use your own judgment as to the advisability of adding to the program but we would not recommend the addition of any other films especially a comedy. The matter of religious ceremonies likewise is a matter to be individually decided.

After your special show we would hold the crowd for a short time and ask their opinion of the offering giving as an excuse that you have determined to secure for your future attractions all of the pictures that have a lesson and message that works for good. Have a short hand man on the job to take down their statements on the quiet. Don't announce that you want their opinions for publication but work on the "uplift" plan.

Following your special show we would begin our newspaper campaign using readers as much as possible for the first few days. Stories about Van Loan, the author, telling about his many productions of the past year, a little history of his rapid rise from obscurity as a newspaperman to a rival of C. Gardner Sullivan with an angle of encouraging amateur scenario writers as an excuse to give news value to the editors, would be sure of getting attention. Then also reminding the fans of the numerous successful pictures from his pen this season, will give your later claims for the story value of "The Great Redeemer" greater weight.

If you go in for contests or believe in them occasionally it would appear to us that this production offers a tie-up idea of unusual merit. Suppose you offer prizes to school children of a certain age or up to a certain age for the best water color drawing, working through the schools and the drawing teachers to get your contestants. It is surprising how much natural talent Young America has for drawing pictures and this talent is being developed by the school curriculum of today.

There are two subjects that naturally suggest themselves for the drawing contest, the pictures of Christ and the star, House Peters.

Views of "The Great Redeemer," the new photoplay by H. H. Van Loan, in which House Peters is starred

Advertise Star, Title, Author, Theme and Director

The former would be a difficult proposition of anyone but a talented artist while House Peters' face presents better possibilities.

After you have the various and probably numerous sketches all in, use them for a lobby display with the names of the artists etc. underneath. You will find that it will get more attention than a circus. Newspaper cooporation should be an easy thing to get for this stunt and it perhaps would be just as well if you went into it in conjunction with one of the papers.

In the matter of the more ordinary branches of advertising, we would depend largely on the newspapers and be generous in our display space.

Avoid selling talk, heads or anything else that would create the impression that it is just an ordinary Western picture. For this reason we would lay stress on the theme giving a thumbnail synopsis of the story beginning with the statement that the hero is a bandit with no mention of the early scenes which are Western melodrama. The painting of Christ, and the regeneration of the criminal should be the subject for your selling talk. If you use stills in framing your ad avoid those which show Western action and accept those from scenes in the prison with one of several showing the portrait referred to recommended.

In the same manner we would use the stills for our lobby, rejecting those which do not refer directly to the theme.

Since the four principal characters are very nearly equal in importance we would bill this offering as a production with House Peters as one of the principal players rather than as a star. In other words try to impress your patrons with the idea that this is so big that it overshadows the players. You do this when you boost a picture above the star if he is of sufficient note to bear real featuring under ordinary circumstances.

We have stated that we considered this an ideal picture for a prologue presentation. We therefore suggest a prologue suitable for the offering.

Build a prison cell similar to the one used in the picture in which House Peters is confined. Place a window of prison dimensions and style right. Your left wall should be the usual iron bar, grating with a backing, showing other cells off stage leaving a corridor between. Your up stage wall is blank stone, dark brown in color, or possibly black if the brown does not work well for the drawing to be referred to later.

Obtain the services of a good crayon artist who is able to sketch a figure of Christ quickly. Provide the cell with the required furniture and your artist with either brushes and paint or crayons.

Place your artist in the right hand upper corner of your set with brushes or crayons before drawing the drapes. For the opening light the set from the window, with a sunset glow flood, that will cover the left side of your set and about half of the back wall. As the drapes part your artist in prison garb that will resemble that of Peters in the picture is drawing the outlines of his painting, a figure of Christ on the Cross. Gradually as he works reduce your lighting to give the effect of a sinking sun and raise it so that at the finish before getting a twilight gloom, all that will show plainly is the artist's face and the face of the Savior he is drawing. Pose your artist to suggest that his painting is inspired. Use light drapes in front of your set and screen your titles on this until your picture curtain can be lowered. If you desire to use music with the prologue, an off stage quartette would be effective. We suggest that the singers use one of the familiar old hymns, such as "Lead Kindly Light." The tolling of a bell at a distance as if a church was calling its congregation for worship could also be used. If you can get the dove that is an "actor" have it light in the prison window just as your flood is raised to catch the sill and send your artist across to stroke the bird as you fade the scene out.

"THE Great Redeemer" one of the really great motion pictures of the year is booked for the————theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning————.

The story is by H. H. Van Loan author of "The Virgin of Stamboul," "Three Gold Coins, "Blue Streak McCoy," and other of the season's successes, while the direction is by Clarence Brown, under the personal direction of Maurice Tourneur, producer of innumerable great pictures of the past.

While House Peters is ostensibly the star and a commanding figure in the production, Marjorie Daw and several other big figures in screen acting have important roles. The picture owing to its unusual story, one showing the redemption of a notorious bandit through a faith in God inspired by the portrait of Christ he paints on the wall of his cell just to fill in the dreary hours during his confinement, overshadows any star or players who appear in it.

O. HENRY wrote many of his famous stories in a prison cell. Dan Malloy bandit, drunkard and badman painted so realistically a picture of the Savior that it woke his almost smothered manhood, renewed his faith in God and sent him forth at the termination of his prison sentence a regenerated man, worthy of the girl of the hills who had loved him in spite of herself when he was the wounded fugitive from justice, running from the vengeance of the sheriff as well as the deserved punishment of the law.

An artist with the talent of a Rafael, the heart of a Jesse James, the physical courage of a fighting fool, and the inclinations of Bacchus was Dan Malloy, holdup man and bandit until when in the lonely hours of a prison sentence he painted at first just for pastime, a picture of the Savior on the black cold stone walls of his cell. Then from his own work was born a renewed faith in God, a great desire to go straight not only for the girl whom he loved but for his own sake as well.

Contemplates Company to Star Miss Hansen

Plans for the formation of a Junita Hansen Producing Corporation are said to be now under way. The main purpose of the contemplated organization will be the starring of Miss Junita Hansen in feature productions. Miss Hansen is now with Pathe, but it is understood her present contract expires the first of the year, when it is believed the new company will start operations.

It is the plan of the Junita Hansen Producing Corporation to make only a limited number of productions each year. Present arrangements call for only four pictures a year, which will possibly range in length from five to seven reels.

Work of "Penalty" Cast Notable

The acting in the Goldwyn-Rex Beach Eminent Authors' Production of "The Penalty," from Gouverneur Morris' novel, is, according to the producing company, adding new lustre to several names which already ranked high in the motion picture world and had a distinct box office pull.

Lon Chaney has another "contortionist" part in that of a legless man. Ethel Grey Terry, James Mason, Claire Adams, Kenneth Harlan and others, are also said to give excellent interpretations of difficult roles.

Dorothy Dalton Picture Released Sept. 19

Considerable interest centers in the fact that Dorothy Dalton's newest Paramount picture, "Half an Hour," is an adaptation of a play by Sir James M. Barrie. This Dalton picture is released on the Paramount schedule September 19. Clara Beranger wrote the scenario of "Half an Hour" and Harley Knoles was the director.

Pathe Plans Big Serial Expansion

A GREAT expansion of the serial business is planned by Pathe for 1921, according to announcements from that company. Confirmation of the recent observations of film men is found in the statement that the Pathe Serial Department is at present in a more flourishing state than at any time in the history of the organization. Owing to this condition, plans are under way for the launching next January of a serial program based upon a determination to improve the artistic quality of productions and to submit measures designed on lines of a high efficiency, which will bring the distributor and exhibitor mutual benefits and work for the common good of the industry.

Reports from the Robert Brunton studios, where two serial companies are producing Pathe serials and the George B. Seitz plant in New York show that the production department of Pathe is far enough ahead of the releasing schedule to permit independence of the time element, which, experience has taught is essential to the achievement of the best results in picture production. It is learned that the Pathe 1921 serial program will open up with "Velvet Fingers," which will be issued in December of this year. This serial, a fifteen episode Seitz production with Juanita Hansen and Warner Oland. Miss Roland is now filming "The Avenging Arrow" at Bruntons and Miss Hansen and Warner Oland are working on their picture under the direction of Bertram Millhauser at the New York plant. Hutchison's second picture, "The Fortieth Door" is also in production now at Bruntons.

As soon as George B. Seitz finishes his feature, "Rogues and Romance" he will start a serial in which he is to co-star with June Caprice. The present list of serial stars for next year includes Ruth Roland, Juanita Hansen, Marguerite Courtot, who will appear with Seitz in "Velvet Fingers," June Caprice, George B. Seitz, Charles Hutchison and Warner Oland.

As announced so far there will be two Ruth Roland serials in 1921, two with Hutchison, two with George B. Seitz, the first of which he will star with Marguerite Courtot and the second with June Caprice. Juanita Hansen's picture, which will be her second Pathe offering, is to be a fifteen episode play by James Shelley Hamilton, who wrote story and scenario. Bertram Millhauser is directing.

"Velvet Fingers," which will inaugurate the new program has a New York locale. Seitz appears as a crook who reforms and plays the role of detective as only a reformed crook can.

In "The Double Adventure" Charles Hutchison will be supported by Jose Sedgwick, Ruth Langston and Carl Stockdale.

Hutchison's second picture is to be a screen adaptation of a popular novel by Mary Hastings Bradley "The Fortieth Door."

Ruth Roland is another star to have a scenarioized novel for her vehicle. "The Avenging Arrow" is adapted from the novel "The Honeymoon Quest," by Arthur Preston Hankins.

Goldwyn Has Kendall Pictures

CLOSELY following the announcement of the completion of the first of the Messmore Kendall productions, starring Vivian Martin, comes the statement that the pictures of this popular star will be released through the Goldwyn corporation, of which Mr. Kendall is the acting head.

The initial release, an appealing love story and a powerful drama, "The Song of the Soul," will be followed by productions starring Miss Martin in which she will be given an opportunity to display her great ability as an emotional actress and her charm as a comedienne. Mr. Kendall plans to issue five of the Martin pictures each year.

Five Vivian Martin Pictures Per Year Are Planned

In selecting vehicles for the young star, particular care will be expended in finding material that will give full scope to her ability, which was widely recognized on the stage before she became interested in screen work.

Few actresses have received such a thorough training as Miss Martin, in both dramatic and comedy impersonations. She was a member of the first Maude Adams "Peter Pan" company and after Miss Adams had finished playing the stellar role, Miss Martin portrayed the most delightful of all Barrie's characters for two seasons on the road. Among other plays in which she scored pronounced successes are "Father and the Boys," starring William H. Crane, "Officer 666" and "Stop Thief," both comedies recently adapted to the screen by Goldwyn; also, "His Only Son," opposite Wallace Eddinger.

"The Song of the Soul," adapted by John W. Noble, also directed by him, from William J. Locke's story "An Old World Romance" requires acting of the highest type. The story is said to be totally different from anything she has hitherto done."

Ovation Given "The Stealers"

Robertson-Cole Feature Applauded at Premiere

BEFORE one of the greatest crowds which ever has beheld a motion picture trade premiere in the city of New York, Robertson-Cole, on the evening of Friday, September 17, in the grand ball room of the Hotel Astor, showed "The Stealers," written and directed by William Christy Cabanne. Even more significant than the gathering of this crowd, the company which will distribute the picture holds, is the enthusiasm and applause with which "The Stealers" was received.

The large assemblage which crowded the three floors of the big ball room was a widely composite and representative audience. It included leaders of the motion picture industry, news and trade paper representatives, ministers of the gospel and invited guests from many other walks. A large orchestra rendered an overture, after which the feature was shown.

The many expressions which were heard as to the depth of the story and the reverend way in which its delicate theme has been handled, as to the careful casting and fine acting standard of the players, and regarding the remarkable scenic effects which have been secured by Mr. Cabanne in "The Stealers," all were valued by Robertson-Cole for the especial reason that they predict a similar reaction upon the part of the public, when the exhibitor shows the production.

"The Stealers" is the third of the new series of Robertson-Cole super-specials, released under the policy of only super-product. It was made this summer in the East, Mr. Cabanne consuming upwards of four months in the actual making of a picture which he has been working on for two years. The cast includes: Wm. H. Tooker, Robert Kenyon, Myrtle Morse, Norma Shearer, Ruth Dwyer, Walter Miller, Eugene Borden, Jack Crosby, Matthew L. Betz, Jack O'Brien and Downing Clarke.

The story and direction are by Mr. Cabanne, who was assisted by Daniel B. Hogan, photography being in charge of Georges Benoit. In showing the picture a special musical setting, made by James C. Bradford, which is a part of the press book being issued on "The Stealers," was played.

"The Stealers" tells an emotional story, which has to do with the every-day problems of a group of ordinary people. But behind this there is ever playing a deeper and more spiritual theme which raises these ordinary folks, glorifying them and making their battle between self and soul a fascinating and vital one. To set off this struggle of the heart and soul, there is a physical complement of nature in calm and stormy moods, an artistic accompaniment which stamps the picture ineffably upon the mind.

While there is no star, a missioner, who goes from town to village, preaching the Gospel, may be said to be the central figure of "The Stealers." The picture impressively shows how this man, twenty years before, has been robbed of his wife by a supposed friend, and how he has blamed God for his misfortune. Thereupon he deliberately started upon a career of blasphemy. From the pulpit of his tent he "preaches," while a group of young people, whom he has encouraged in the practice of thievery, steal from those who have come to the meeting.

Now, the missioner has a daughter just about as old as the young folks who steal for him, but she thinks her father to be an upright man of God. On a momentous night she learns of his duplicity, and he tells her his story. A moment later he is struck blind by a great storm which is raging outside. What happens from this point is a consuming story that held breathless the packed house which saw it in the Astor ball room.

"The Stealers" is a picture which Robertson-Cole expects to sell sensationally in every part of the country, because it has, besides its force as a dramatic attraction, the power of universal appeal.

Original Story to Be Used

F. E. Woods, Supervising Director, Sees Return of Special Writer

ORIGINAL stories, not famous books or successful plays, will be the basis of the motion picture of the future! Such is the prediction of Frank E. Woods, supervising director at the West Coast studio of Famous Players-Lasky.

"We are coming more and more," he explains, "to the original story written especially for the screen. It is a movement that is making for better pictures: in fact, it is the result of the discrimination of the higher class producing organizations to make better pictures.

"These original stories will come from both inside and oustide the industry. At last the highest type of authors are coming to appreciate the opportunity offered them by the motion picture. They also are realizing the necessity of spending as much time in writing for the screen as in writing a novel. The result is that authors are receiving greater remuneration for their screen stories and also are enhancing their reputations.

"Another result, of course, is that quantity is giving way to quality. A great obstacle in the past has been that writing has been done too hastily both by those who write for the screen and those who write novels and plays.

"Writers for the screen are beginning to realize the danger of writing in haste. They will do better work, with the quantity automatically cut down. Their improved work will make the demand for original stories greater. This is only one of the many reasons why I say the field for the original writer will be opened up as it never has in the past and will offer far greater opportunities. The era of the original writer in motion pictures is here!"

World Motion Pictures Invades So. America

The World Motion Pictures Company, Inc., of 500 Fifth Avenue, New York, has just completed arrangements with the South American Productions, Inc., of Lima, whereby the American and European news events will be made available in picture form to Peru and other South American countries. Also the world in general will be able to enjoy a pictorial record of news events and traditional picture lore of the South American countries. Under the auspices of the Peruvian and other governments in the southern continent the World Motion Pictures Company, Inc., will be able to offer a wide variety of news, historical, scientific subjects.

"It's a Great Life" is Three-City Hit

A hit was scored by Goldwyn's production of Mary Roberts Rinehart's story of boys "prep" school life, "It's a Great Life," based upon her popular novel called "The Empire Builders" in all of the three cities where it had its simultaneous first showings—at the Capitol theatre in New York, the American theatre in Denver, and the California theatre in Los Angeles. The story is said by several of the reviewers to have the same understanding of youth and the same flavor of its humor that pervades Booth Tarkington's Penrod stories on the printed page and his Edgar stories on the screen.

New Pathe Serial Star's Debut

Juanita Hansen is to make her debut as a Pathe serial star October 17, the release date of "The Phantom Foe," a fifteen episode serial produced by George B. Seitz, under the direction of Bertram Millhauser. The picture is added to a collection of especially notable Pathe productions for release in October, and is presented as one of that organization's biggest serial offerings of the year.

Miss Hansen has been at work without interruption on the serial since joining the Pathe Company in January, 1919.

"World Aflame" Again in Demand

Pathe branch offices report a renewed interest in the Frank Keenan feature, "The World Aflame," a drama dealing with the subject of industrial democracy, which Mr. Keenan produced and starred in for Pathe. Owing to the number of strikes throughout the country at the time of its release, "The World Aflame" made a great impression which is reflected again now when the dominant issues of the Presidential campaign have again focused attention on such questions as collective bargaining and the other contentions between capital and labor.

S. R. O. Sign Rules on Lloyd Showing

Harold Lloyd in his latest comedy, "Get Out and Get Under," has again smashed some New York City records, according to a Pathe report. He was shown in two of the greatest motion picture theatres in the world, the Strand and the Capitol, within a short distance of each other on Broadway recently, and across the river, in Brooklyn, at the Strand. In all three houses standing room only was the order of the day and night.

These three bookings are all pre-release.

Metro Wins Advance Bookings

"The Great Redeemer" Expected to Break All Records

BOOKING orders which officials of Metro Pictures Corporation declare to be almost unprecedented in volume are being received at the company's home offices in the Longacre Building, for "The Great Redeemer," the Maurice Tourneur super special all-star production that Metro is distributing. This deluge of business pouring in more than a fortnight before the general release of the picture, leads Metro to anticipate that "The Great Redeemer" will hang up new records everywhere.

The demand for "The Great Redeemer" that has been created among showmen in all parts of the country is taken to be one of the immediate results of the phenomenal premiere that the Tourneur super special recently enjoyed in California. The West Coast was the first section to see "The Great Redeemer," it being the purpose of the Metro executives to try it out on the Pacific slope, and let Eastern exhibitors derive the benefit of the exploitation methods employed on the other side of the Rockies, and also to give them a correct line on the production as a drawing card.

"The Great Redeemer" had its world premiere at the new California theatre in Los Angeles. Its reception there was said to have been astonishing. Greeted by press and public alike as a masterpiece, the production played to capacity business for the entire week and followed with another seven days at the Miller theatre, on the same block with the California, and continued to turn them away.

Shortly afterwards prints of the picture were shown in the nearby California towns, such as Pasadena, Long Beach and Santa Monica. There also the picture swept to triumph and Metro has been in almost daily receipt of letters and telegrams from satisfied showmen in these towns, sounding the praises of what they term one of the most powerful pictures of the year.

At the conclusion of a showing of "The Great Redeemer" at the Majestic theatre in Santa Monica, A. H. Sterns, proprietor and manager of that house, sent an unsolicited letter of thanks and appreciation to B. F. Rosenberg, manager of the Metro exchange in Los Angeles, in part as follows:

"'The Great Redeemer' is a wonderful picture. That word 'wonderful' has been rolled around under the tongues of show people for so long a time that it doesn't mean much, but I can't think of another to take its place. The picture is simply 'wonderful' from any and every angle."

H. H. Van Loan, author of "The Virgin of Stamboul" and other big cinema successes, wrote the original story from which "The Great Redeemer" was made. The dominant idea of the cumulative, absorbing narrative Mr. Van Loan took from real life—a happening so strange that it eclipses fiction. Jules Furthman and Jack Gilbert scenarioized Mr. Van Loan's original story and Clarence Brown directed the production under the personal supervision of Maurice Tourneur. Prominent in the noteworthy cast are House Peters, as Dan Malloy, the train-robber; Marjorie Daw as the girl, Joseph Singleton as the murderer, and Jack MacDonald as the sheriff.

New Semon Comedy Finished

Vitagraph Announces Latest Two-Reeler "The Suitor"

LARRY SEMON'S newest comedy, "The Suitor," is, according to Vitagraph, in all probability his most imposing one, and it gives the versatile screen comedian an entirely different and novel role. Semon is under contract for three years with the Vitagraph Company, but it is likely that he will never make anything more thrilling than "The Suitor," which has, for one of its capital thrills, a scene showing Larry speeding on a motorcycle at 75 miles an hour, grabbing hold of a rope ladder trailing from an airplane, and then being catapulted hundreds of feet in the air. Even without a comedy touch it would be unusual.

"The Suitor" is described as a broad satire on the melodramatic type of picture confection, and many of the blood-and-thunder devices are used with a comedy twist. Among other things, Larry makes a parachute descent from the airplane under unusually hazardous circumstances, and, for good measure, throws in a careless jump from a second-story window and a splintering crash through a heavy mirror.

"The Suitor" is said to differ from most present-day comedies in that it does not let its real humor interfere with a genuine plot. The enthusiastic way in which exhibitors and the public greeted Semon's previous comedies of this type—"The Grocery Clerk," "The Fly Cop," "The Headwaiter," "The Stage Hand" and others—have spurred him on to increased efforts in "The Suitor."

Lucille Carlisle plays the part of a lovely young heiress in "The Suitor," and Larry is the man she loves. The family objects, and the way of the love-lorn is made still harder by the presence in the millionaire's mansion of a band of deep-dyed villains who are the butlers and other retainers, taking their orders from a crafty "lounge lizard" gunning for the hand of the heiress.

"The Suitor" was greatly overlength when seen by the West Coast studio staff, just before shipment to the East was made. However, it was believed that any eliminating of the scenes would have to be made at the expense of the film's laugh-value. A way out was found by shortening every scene in the entire film. This, instead of penalizing the humor, is said to have proved of real advantage, for it speeds up the film and gives it a snap and dash which otherwise it would not have had. "The Suitor" will be the next release after "The Stage Hand."

JESSE L. LASKY announced in Hollywood Thursday that Gareth Hughes, brilliant young stage and screen actor who has appeared in leading roles with several of the most prominent motion picture stars, will leave in a few days for New York, where he will have the title role in "Sentimental Tommy," the J. M. Barrie play which John S. Robertson will produce shortly for Paramount at the new Long Island studio of Famous Players-Lasky.

"39 East" is Booked for Loew Circuit

"39 East," a Realart picture with Constance Binney, and most of the cast which appeared in Rachel Crothers' play of the same name, has been booked by Marcus Loew for the Loew Circuit. The picture, which follows closely the theme of the stage version, had a successful week at the Rialto theatre, New York, beginning September 12, just a few blocks from where Miss Binney first made her appearance in the play.

"The Broken Gate" Expected to Break Records

It is confidently expected by Hodkinson that a great welcome will be given "The Broken Gate" when the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation releases the picture in December. It has, it is said, in it all of the elements which make for success. It is a picturization of Emerson Hough's novel, and was produced by Hutton and Frothingham. Bessie Barriscale is the star.

"Love Madness" Meets With Success

The Home Office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation report that they expect the same success to come to "Love Madness," starring Louise Glaum, that greeted "Sex." A Des Moines theatre reports unusual heavy business with the picture despite the fact that the weather was very bad.

New Studio in Full Operation

F. P.-Lasky Moves Its Entire Staff to Long Island

ARTHUR VICTOR SMITH, general manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's Eastern studios, has established his headquarters in the new $2,500,000 studio of the corporation which has just been completed at Long Island City. The task of moving his staff from the three studios which were in operation at the time of moving, the Talmadge studio, the remodelled Amsterdam Opera House, and the former headquarters at the Fifty-sixth Street Studio, was accomplished without a hitch. The moving as planned by Mr. Smith was done on Friday, and on Saturday the entire staff was at work in the new quarters.

The first picture to be filmed on the floor was the George Fitzmaurice production, "Money Mad," from an original story by Ouida Bergere, the work on which was started Monday. The elaborate set which was constructed by the Art and Decoration Department for Mr. Fitzmaurice, which under the old conditions would require an entire studio, seemed particularly small on the enormous stage of the new building.

Moving into the new studio has been going on for some time. The properties, which have been accumulated for the past eight years, after being inventoried, catalogued and photographed were moved to the studio as fast as completed so that now the property rooms are in excellent shape. The scenery has been transferred gradually until now there is a complete file in the scene dock.

The electric installation, one of the principal innovations, which consists of a sub-station which received 7,600 volts from the main station direct and is transformed and distributed to supply the Cooper-Hewitts, Kleigs, Wohllights, Sunlight Arcs and also the general lighting in addition to running the heavy machinery used in the shops, is now in perfect working order.

The carpenter shop is divided into two parts. Adjacent to the lower stage is the shop housing the heavy machinery and directly above, with ample space and facilities for passing material to and fro, is the assembling and finishing shop. The wardrobe department, situated between the dressing rooms for the men on one side and for the women on the other and occupying an entire floor, has closet room for ten thousand gowns.

The still photograph department is gradually working into shape and within a week it will have the equipment to turn out 10,000 stills a day, using all modern up-to-date equipment.

The Art and Decoration Department, with a personnel of eight architects under the direction of Robert M. Haas, occupies a suite especially constructed for them to provide abundant light. The research department, which is a subdivision of the Art and Decoration Department, has been established in an adjacent room. In a special valuable property room are stored the sets of silver for dressing table or dining room, expensive vases, China and cut glass, tapestries and jewelry, the room providing every safeguard against theft.

The scenario department, which has recently been placed in charge of Thomas J. Geraghty, provides a private office and consultation room for the scenario writers now on the staff of the company and another room for the readers of script. The cutting room is adjacent and the title department will have a specially constructed room for the preparation and photographing of the illustrated titles, as well as for the preparation of the temporary and final titles for every production.

The purchasing department occupies a beautiful office extending over the entire front of the studio on the second floor. The casting and cashier's department are situated on the ground floor on the left entrance with a special entrance for the casting department.

Lew Cody's Latest Released

"Occasionally Yours" Treats of Philanderer in Satirical Vein

ROBERTSON-COLE is releasing this week for general distribution "Occasionally Yours," starring Lew Cody, which officials of the company declare to contain the best screen work of the man who made "The Beloved Cheater" and "The Butterfly Man."

"Occasionally Yours" treats a love theme, taking up in detail the many affairs of Bruce Sands. The lure of the Bohemian world of New York, the flavor of high society, and the narration of the escapades of a gay man who lists the telephone numbers of many feminine friends, are all found.

In "Occasionally Yours," Mr. Cody first is seen in his studio, not far from Broadway, surrounded by models of alluring and humorous nature. His aunt visits him, bearing an invitation for him to come down to a Long Island estate for a few days. While there the artist meets a very young and unsophisticated girl, the daughter of his rich host, who falls in love with him. While trying not to let the attachment become serious, the artist is forced into a declaration of love, when the girl is apparently seriously injured.

Later it is found that her hurts are trivial, and the artist finds himself the possessor of a heart that he does not want, much afraid to tell the girl the truth, and also dangerously pursued by a voluptuous widow who has followed him to the country. How Bruce Sands gets himself out of this complex tangle and back to Broadway where he may call up a girl from his list "just for a change," is told in the climax.

Betty Blythe plays the leading feminine role. Elinor Faire, the winsome, dark-eyed Southern lass, who scored a success as the invalid girl in "The Miracle Man," plays an ingenue lead. Other members of the cast are Lillian Rambeau, mother of Marjorie Rambeau; William Quinn, Barney Sherry, Lloyd Hamilton, Dorothy Wallace, Cleo Ridgely and Yvonne Gardelle.

Mildred Chaplin Special for Broadway

Louis B. Mayer has advised his studio executives by wire from New York City that the latest Mildred Chaplin production "The Woman in His House" will have a Broadway showing within a few weeks at $2 prices.

Mr. Mayer states that announcement of the date and theatre will be given out by the First National Exhibitors Circuit within a few days. He also adds that Mildred will stay in New York so as to be present at the premiere of the production. There is a plan now underfoot, according to the producer, for First National to present the fair Mildred in a speaking playlet in conjunction with her photoplay. It will only remain for them to meet the figure offered Mrs. Chaplin by Al Woods for this to become a reality.

Pearl White's Feature Does Big Business

Exhibitors in all parts of the country are reporting heavy business, the Fox Film Corporation officials announce, on "The White Moll," a special in which Pearl White makes her first appearance both as a Fox star and as the star of a feature length drama. The fact that "The White Moll" is by Frank L. Packard, author of "The Miracle Man," added materially to the interest in this production, it is claimed.

The publicity department of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that it is giving to the preparation of the campaign book, which will accompany Willett's "Down Home" an infinite amount of careful work.

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

Christie Makes Prediction

"Homespun Hero" Expected to Be a "Comedy Better Than Feature"

AT the recent meeting of Educational's Eastern exchange managers, Charles Christie, told the managers that he would soon promise them a comedy which they could confidently offer exhibitors as superior to any feature that they might have on their bill. Educational is now of the belief that "A Homespun Hero," print of which has just been received at the New York office, goes far towards carrying out the promise.

Bobby Vernon is the featured player in "A Homespun Hero" while Vera Steadman and Helen Darling have prominent parts under the direction of William Beaudine. The story is laid around a musical comedy company which visits a small town. The star is reminded that she has a country cousin who she has never seen and the players suggest that it would be good sport to invite the "rube" around to see the show. Just what the "rube" does supplies the greater portion of the fun.

Unusual exploitation suggestions are being made in its press book, according to Educational.

"A Homespun Hero" is the eighth of the Christies to be released through Educational. "Kiss Me Caroline," featuring Vernon, was the first and this was followed by "A Seaside Siren," with Fay Tincher; "Out for the Night," with Eddie Barry in the star part; "Seven Bald Pates," with Bobby Vernon; Harry Gribbon in "Don't Blame the Stork" and Fay Tincher in "Striking Models."

According to Educational, exhibitors are giving a considerable portion of their newspaper space over to advertising these pictures, and several hundred of them are using special lobby displays on each comedy including the collection of Follies Girls that are being sent out through Educational Exchanges.

"In three months," says a statement from Educational, there will not be a theatre in the nation playing Christie comedies that does not realize they have a wonderful pulling power. We are not advising them to advertise them for any other reason than that we want to establish to the exhibitor's satisfaction that the two-reel comedy, if it is good and recognized, actually brings increased attention to the theatre."

Squabbles Hinder Progress

M. H. Hoffman Says Time is Not Ripe for United Organization

"A NOTE being sounded for a united motion picture industry through a medium of one representative organization which will comprise all factors, cannot strike a responsive chord until the various branches of the industry eliminate their internal troubles and get down to business on a real constructive basis."

The foregoing statement was made by general manager M. H. Hoffman of the Pioneer Film Corporation. Mr. Hoffman deprecates the inauguration of any move at this time for the purpose of forming a national council of all the branches of the motion picture industry, contending that the time is not ripe for such a movement and will not be ripe until petty squabbles have ceased and until the important factors in the producing, distributing and exhibiting fields are convinced that the biggest piece of constructive work can only be accomplished when the doctrine of all for one, and one for all means more than mere words.

"This idea of one gigantic organization," says Mr. Hoffman, "which will function for all interests and which can do more good to the motion picture industry than many realize at this time, is so splendid that it would fall to pieces if the project were attempted at the wrong time." The experiment would be too costly and consequently, ? ? ?

"Sonny Series" a Short Pioneer Release

Ten comedies based on the exploits of a Modern Peck's Bad Boy and known as the "Sonny Series" represent a feature now being released by the Pioneer Film Corporation.

The series comprise: "Sonny Has the Mumps," "Sonny's Uncle Visits Ma," "When Sonny's Pa Was a Boy," "Sonny Goes With Pa," "Sonny and the Gypsies," "Sonny's Appetite," "The Caveman," "Sonny and the Burglar," "Sonny Down on the Farm," "Sonny, Polly and the Old Jack Tar."

In commenting on these comedies, Vice-President and General Manager M. H. Hoffman of the Pioneer said that the "Sonny Series" was made in answer to the demand for laugh producers, which could be shown without apology to the highest class of audiences.

Noted Australian Will Produce on Coast

Snowy Baker, famous Australian boxing promoter and picture producer, arrived in Los Angeles this week and announced that he will produce a special production while in the United States. He has already started negotiations for studio space in Hollywood. Mr. Baker declined to divulge the title of the picture that he contemplates producing here.

Recently two of his completed productions arrived in the United States, in which he is star and co-director with Wilfred Lucas, one of the pioneer actors and directors in the motion picture industry. The first picture was taken over by Sam E. Rork and his associates for distribution in the United States.

The last stand of primitive white men in America; the last frontier of the land where men make and enforce their own laws; such is The Forbidden Valley in the heart of the Kentucky Mountains.

Here the passions of men swept aside for a time the power of the pure young girl who ruled with her charm and her clean heart, and here came the intense battle of the man of refinement and the mountaineer who knew no right except that of his own conception, and who knew not the limit to which his elemental passions would lead him.

A great outdoor picture, full of the great feelings of the human heart, raw and refined, has been created by Commodore Blackton. It is aglow with romance, dynamic in action, and inspiring in its understanding.

Musical Acts to Aid Pictures

Arthur Klein

Arthur Klein to Book "Peppy" Acts for Picture Houses

ARTHUR KLEIN, the well known vaudeville manager, announces that he is going to give the exhibitor just what he needs to "pep" and invigorate his program of photo-play entertainment, and administer in palatable doses a much needed box office stimulant in the way of live, popular musical acts that will through their sheer novelty please a public that is ever looking for the unusual in amusements, and re-invigorate the constantly perplexed and worn out, if not jaded moving picture theatre manager.

One of the most astute promoters and directors of the lighter forms of theatrical entertainment, with an eviable record as a manager and booker of some of the biggest vaudeville stars, acts and musical comedy specialties, Arthur Klein always has been in the forefront of amusement experts who believe in the photo-play as the one truly popular art form today.

A strong advocate of variety in theatrical amusements, he contends that the movie program as it is arranged today, consisting of short ends, such as one and two reel comedies, animated cartoons, news reels and a special of more or less length, should be garnished with a popular singing or musical act and which has been proved to be so popular in moving picture houses which made the innovation of providing programs that include symphonic concert numbers, overtures and singing specialties.

Mr. Klein does not contend that the programs provided by the majority of moving picture theatres are either dull or inadequate but he believes that the spice of variety he proposes to lend to bills of entertainment by singing and musical acts, with only high class performers as headliners, will increase box office returns and add more millions to the stream of devotees that flow into the moving picture theatres afternoon and night. With this object in view he has hit upon the plausible idea of furnishing a consistent and continued booking service to provide a variety of recognized talent, consisting of singers and musical acts to lend further zest and animation to the daily program and in an original style put a new move in the movies.

Mr. Klein intends to book or extend the privilege of booking to only one theatre in each city, and he emphatically announces that only a reliable and responsible house will be granted the privilege of this service. His organization will be known as the Manhattan Booking Exchange.

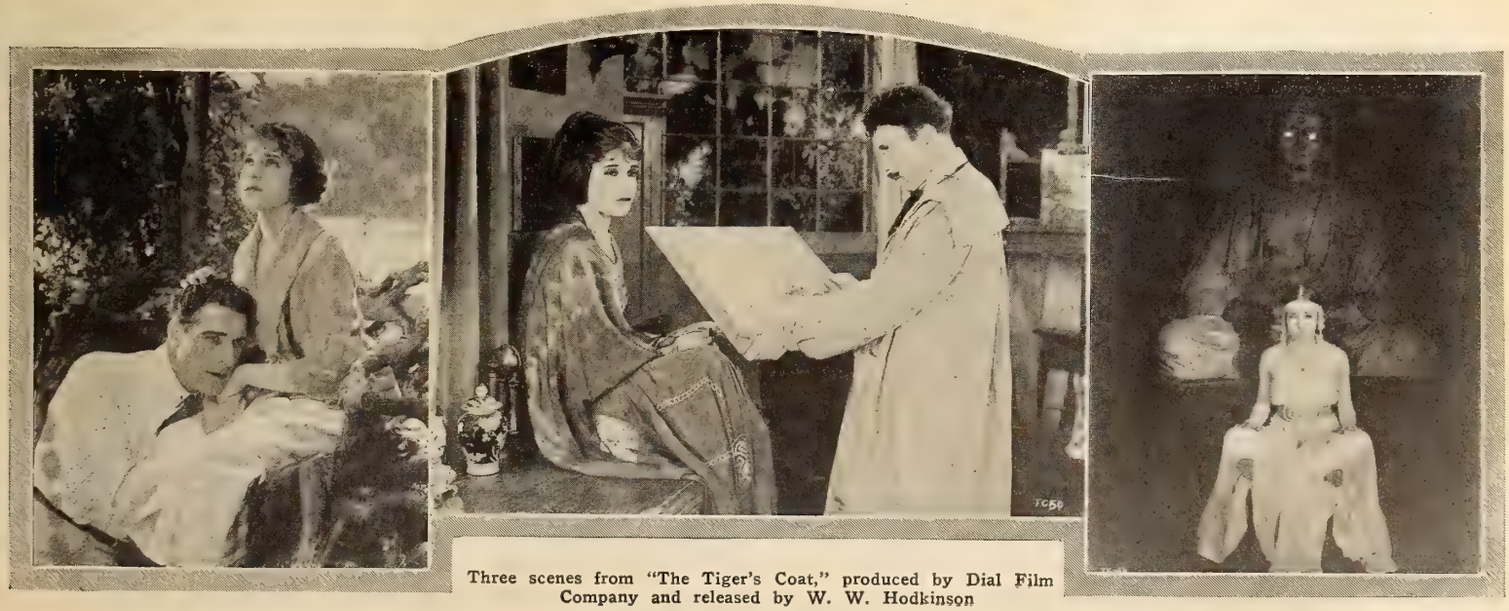
Hodkinson Has Ballin Picture

AN announcement of interest to the motion picture industry comes from the Home Office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, to the effect that they are to release in December the first independent production of Hugo Ballin, who for a long time past has been associated with the Goldwyn Company both in the capacity of art director and as a director of pictures.

The first Ballin independent production is called "The Honorable Gentleman," and was picturized from the story by Achmed Abdullah, which was originally published in the Pictorial Review and later in book form by Putnam. The story is said to be a singularly interesting one with its locale ranging from the mysterious Orient with all its glamor and fascination to modern America.



"The acquisition by Hodkinson," reads the company's statement, "of this new production of Hugo Ballin's marks another milestone upon the path which W. W. Hodkinson, head of the corporation which bears his name, is treading with such certain steps. It was his intention, when he first formed his present company, to serve as an intermediary between the independent producer and the independent exhibitor who strove to maintain his independence, for, he knew that such an organization as that which is today functioning under his name was vitally necessary. And to build up solidly upon a firm foundation he strove to attract to himself the greatest independent producers and to aid and encourage promising talent in every possible way.

"It is through the Hodkinson organization that Benjamin B. Hampton, one of the greatest producers of the day, is releasing his product; Mr. Hodkinson, with his great knowledge of showmanship and his great distributing facilities, developed J. Parker Read, Jr.'s productions into one of the strongest box-office attractions of the day; it was solely through Mr. Hodkinson's efforts that the works of Irving Bacheller, foremost among American novelists, were made available for screen usage; Irwin V. Willat, one of the youngest, but nevertheless, one of the most powerful and cleverest of the present day directors, is releasing his first independent production 'Down Home' through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, and it is expected that many more of Mr. Willat's pictures will come to the screen via the same channels.

"And now comes Hugo Ballin to add still another feather to the cap of the man who is in the largest measure responsible for the present day motion pictures."

"Kismet" A Massive Picture

Robertson-Cole Worked Entire Summer On Production; To Be Presented Oct. 15

BEYOND the fact that its star is one of America's most representative actors, that it is the story in which he won fame upon the stage, and one of the masterpieces of one of the best known living playwrights, the Robertson-Cole production of "Kismet" with Otis Skinner, shortly to be released, will claim distinction because of the fashion in which it has been produced.

"Kismet" is to be shown to the trade at a special performance to be given on the evening of Friday, October 15, in the grand ball room of the Hotel Astor.

Few spectacles have offered the exhibitor attractions such as "Kismet" is heralded as being, from the standpoint of lavishness, color, and far-flung detail. A reproduction of the ancient city of Bagdad was only one of the tasks of Gasnier, the director, and his large staff of architects, costumers, artists, electricians, and other technicians. The making of "Kismet" was a vast undertaking, one which took the entire summer, and came to a close only last week.

In the first place the building of the sets required more than three quarters of a million feet of lumber.

In building a production of this magnitude, thousands upon thousands of people were required to portray the inhabitants of the city. Beggars, merchants, police, soldiers, retainers of the royal courts, girls of the harem and the pompous rulers of the land were required and all of these actors had to be furnished with the proper costumes to portray their station in life. To supply these many costumes another special building was built to house the designing and costuming departments.

Many costumers worked day and night fashioning the finest fabrics into gorgeous raiment to be used in the making of the photoplay.

From these details, which concern themselves only with a part of the work which was connected with the making of "Kismet," the exhibitor may get some idea of what an attraction Robertson-Cole this summer has built for its patrons.

"Riddle Woman" Released

Pathe's Big Feature Said to Be Awaited with Interest by Showmen

WITH the release of "The Riddle: Woman" on October 3rd the Associated Exhibitors, Inc., makes its initial release through the Pathe Exchange, and, after a year of preparation, the leading exhibitors, identified themselves with the development of the picture, are said to be confident that a great public reception awaits the film. They are confident that it will be immediately evident to press and public that Geraldine Farrar is appearing in the best picture of her career and that "The Riddle: Woman" will find its place as one of the really great pictures of the season.

The picture will be backed by an extensive advertising campaign, and an exceptionally large variety of posters and accessories. The campaign book is one of the most elaborate ever prepared for any picture and this is in accordance with the Associated Exhibitors plan of complete co-operation with all who book the picture. The reproduction in five colors from the 24-sheet painting of Miss Farrar is according to Harrison Fisher, "The Wizard of American beauty," one of the "most exquisite bits of designing and color printing that has been contributed to the cinema art."

A feature of the exploitation campaign is a brochure in several colors and in rotogravure on "The Riddle: Woman." It is a distinct departure in the supporting literature of motion pictures and was prepared under the skillful direction of several well known artists.

"Vanity Fair Girls" Comics

Hal Roach Sets Out to Make a New Record in Securing Beauty Types

THE first private showings to exhibitors of the new Hal Roach "Vanity Fair Girls" in the Pathe branch offices throughout the country has brought a flood of telegrams of congratulation to the producer and the distributing organization. The "Vanity Fair Girls" series alternates with the Harry Pollard comedies in the weekly release of Rolin Comedies, beginning October 3rd. It was the belief of Mr. Roach that his broadening of the sphere of Rolin Comedies would find general favor with exhibitors, but the reception of the first picture, "June Madness," exceeded his best expectations. It is earning compliments from showmen in every part of the country.

The story of this first release, "June Madness," gets right down to the heart of what George Ade called "The Girl Proposition." Six of the most bewitching of their kind are marooned at an exclusive summer resort hotel, and are bored to distinction by the total absence of masculine scalps to be gathered in. When a solitary specimen arrives, singly and collectively they bring the battery of their charms and conscienceless wiles to bear on him, with results all the more exciting and comical by reason of the fact that the worried hotel proprietor has bribed him to "fall for anything but matrimony."

Eddie Boland, formerly with "Snub" Pollard, is the featured comedian, and a most ludicrous victim.

An important essential of Producer Hal Roach's plan for comedies exploiting the "Vanity Fair Girls" was a company made up of the prettiest, most charming and most talented young actresses to be found. Norma Nichols, who had exhibited her attractions and talent to such advantage as the South Sea Island girl in "Ruth of the Rockies," was an excellent beginning.

Every effort is being made by Mr. Roach and his organization to make the new comedies far above the plane of the ordinary one-reel productions and the bathing girl type of picture. Harley Walker, the title writer of the Lloyd comedies, is personally titling the girl comedies.

FOR THE BIG STATE RIGHTS BUYER

C. B. C. FILM SALES CORP., 1600 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

One year ago the Fox News made its bow to the public, and today has pushed its way to the first rank among news reels. Entering a field which at the time was regarded by many as already crowded to capacity, Fox News has borne out the belief of its founder, William Fox, that there was still room for a news reel of quality. Today, with its first birthday anniversary close at hand, Fox News occupies a commanding position in the news reel field. Only a few weeks ago S. L. Rothapfel, director of the Capitol theatre, New York City, wrote to Mr. Fox, congratulating him on the success of Fox News.

Here is Johnny Hines in his latest Torchy comedy, "Torchy"s Millions," released through Educational Exchanges, Inc.

Capitol to Concentrate on Ince Production

A noteworthy presentation of Thomas H. Ince's first Associated Producers' special, "Homespun Folks" at the Capitol theatre, New York, has been arranged by Edward J. Bowes and Samuel L. Rothafel, executive heads of the Goldwyn theatre enterprises.

"Homespun Folks" will receive its metropolitan premiere the week of October 3 as the bill-topping attraction of one of the most elaborate programs thus far devised by Mr. Rothafel for the fall season.

Prepare Big Campaign Book for "Earthbound"

An unusually elaborate campaign book for exhibitors has been prepared by Goldwyn, under the direction of S. Spitzer, of the advertising department, for Basil King's drama of the unseen world, "Earthbound," which is this week receiving its first showing at a motion picture theatre, the Capitol, New York. The press book is claimed to be the most complete and largest one ever gotten up by Goldwyn. It is dignified in its presentation of publicity, exploitation and advertising in keeping with the spirit of the photodrama, yet designed to pique the curiosity of every one who reads any of the material which has been prepared.

"Torchy" Works Two Ways

Sale of Books and Window Displays Found Help to Educational Subjects

"TORCHY" in book form is helping greatly in the creation of advance interest in the adventures of "Torchy" in film form, according to reports received by the Educational Film Exchange, Inc. There are seven published volumes in the tales of Sewell Ford's red-headed office boy, and they are now being pushed in a selling campaign that includes window displays throughout the country.

"The Torchy pictures are in an unusual position," says Educational. "It was almost ten years ago that Sewell Ford created the celebrated character. His stories first appeared in leading newspapers through the country and since that time there have been seven volumes of them published, the sales of which run actualy into the millions.

"Therefore, in any community there must be scores who are familiar with the character. It is not strange to see, therefore, that when a follower of these stories sees an announcement in the bookstore windows that 'Torchy is now in the movies' they will inquire from the dealer when their favorite can be seen in the pictures. Where the exhibitor has made his announcement of showing the picture in connection with the dealer it is easy, but so many exhibitors have failed to make this tie-up that they are not getting the full patronage value from them.

"It may seem strange in a motion picture company to undertake to increase an exhibitor's patronage after he had signed a contract for a series of pictures, but the whole business policy of Educational is founded on the importance of the single reel picture and the two-reeler to the program and in making the exhibitor appreciate this. We are not satisfied until the box office receipts prove that the comedy itself has brought people to the house.

"The book-store tie-up has business bringing values and we are anxious for every house showing the Torchy Comedies to at least get admissions from every inquiry made at a bookstore for these pictures. This is not a single demand but one that recurs every month.

"Torchy's Millions," the fourth of the series, is an October release. "Torchy," "Torchy Comes Through" and "Torchy in High" are the earlier ones."

Ray Completes "Nineteen & Phyllis"

Production Manager Richard Willis of the Charles Ray studios, yesterday announced that Mr. Ray's third independent production for release through Associated First National Pictures has been completed.

This photoplay entitled "Nineteen & Phyllis" is an original story written by Frederick Stowers, and was adapted for the screen by Isabel Johnston and Bernard McConville. The supporting cast includes Clara Horton in the leading feminine role, Lincoln Stedman, George Nichols, Cora Drew, Frank Norcrosse and De Witte C. Jennings.

In "Nineteen & Phyllis," Mr. Ray will depart from his usual country boy role, and will appear in modern, up-to-date garb, portraying a dapper nineteen-year old city boy.

Author Praises Star of "Firebrand Trevison"

"The best performance he has given since becoming a Fox star," is the general verdict in reports received by Fox Film Corporation on "Firebrand Trevison," the latest production starring Buck Jones, which was recently released. The author of the story, Charles Alden Seltzer, recently paid a high compliment to Buck Jones after witnessing a showing of "Forbidden Trails."

HERE'S A HOUSE THAT BUSTER BUILT!
It Was Portable, and He Got the Parts Mixed!

By Davis

"ONE WEEK" is the name of a comic movie which will be shown at three theatres, starting Sunday. I rate it higher than any other I've seen for months in Cleveland.

It is about portable houses which come in sections to be set up on the lot. A young man newly marrried is presented with such a house, and starts to set it up himself.

An enemy mixes the numbers, so that when the newlywed sets the pieces in place the house is all askew. A high wind strikes the house while he is giving a house warming, and it spins about on its foundation like a top.

Wrong Lot

At the climax he learns that he made a mistake and built the house on the wrong lot. His lot is across a railroad track. He starts to haul the house to his own lot. It stalls on the track. Along comes a train. Crash!

The last scene shown the house-owner setting a sign on the wreck of his portable dwelling, after the train has run thru it. The sign is marked "For Sale."

"One Week"

Two-Reel Metro Comic Proves a Big Bonanza of Side-Splitting Knock-about Humor.

Reviewed by Robert ... Elravy.

THIS two-reel Metro comic, entitled "One Week," opens up a new vein of mirth of the rib-tickling, slapstick sort. It contains one funny situation after another, piling up the risibilities until it is likely to create "the laugh heard round the world." It follows the best traditions for this style of comic, but ventures into new fields and turns up some fresh situations that are sure to go with any audience.

"Buster" Keaton and Addie Cline play the roles of a bride and groom, just tripping away from the marriage altar as the picture starts. They are followed by a discomfited rejected suitor, known as Andy, who proceeds to turn up some treacherous dirty work of an amusing sort. But the real humor of the piece starts when the newlyweds arrive at the lot filled them by the uncle of the groom, containing the neatly boxed parts of a portable house. The house proves to be a wonderful piece of work when it is put together, the numbers of the various parts being apparently been mixed up. The walls turn in and out, parts of the floor and ceiling fall, and a violent windstorm whirls the whole structure to whirling about on a merry-go-round. Finally when they attempt to move it a passenger train dashes the building.

"Buster" Keaton proves himself a comedian to be reckoned with. He has personality and looks quite as promising as any who has lately arrived in the world of the screen. This first subject is so funny in every respect that it is hard to apportion the credit, though the comedian, of course, gets the lion's share. Intelligent direction, excellent planning and mounting of the sets and general business and skilful editing of the film count for much in a success of this kind. But "Buster" Keaton and his clever assistants will be eagerly watched for in future releases.

Carpentier Interest Grows

Plans for Battle With Levinsky and Dempsey Talk Aid "Wonder Man"

BETWEEN September 15 and October 15, the sales department of Robertson-Cole estimates that 150 prints of "The Wonder Men" are booked solid, return engagements being of wide occurrence. Robertson-Cole believes that the newspaper reports of the landing of Carpentier in New York City establish these facts:

Carpentier is more popular than ever, for he was met by a crowd of thousands, and far more entertainment was planned for him than he is able to attend. He has come on a strictly fighting errand this time. He will fight Dempsey as soon as a match between them can be arranged after Jan. 1, 1921.

Of Carpentier's popularity, the New York World, in its column account of his return to America said:

"Almost before he knew it, the Frenchman was seized by his admirers, hoisted up on their shoulders, and to the strains of "Madelon" he was paraded about so that the throng could get a good look at him. Then the French band struck up "The Star Spangled Banner" and Carpenter and his manager, Francois Descamps, who accompanied him on the trip stood at attention and removed their hats.

"Followed then the strains of the "Marseillaise" after which Carpentier again was seized and carried to a waiting automobile. A big sightseeing auto truck, decorated with banners and American and French flags, was at hand, and into this piled the band and as many of the crowd as could find hanging room."

Speaking of his intentions of making this visit to America strictly a fighting one, and referring to the unfavorable criticism which some journalists indulged in on his return from America to France, Carpentier (as reported by the New York Tribune) said:

"I have read the comments of the American press on my last visit, and they were all wrong in assuming that I came to the Land of Liberty only for the money I could get. I am a fighting man and I intend to prove the fact before I go back to France.

"I do not intend to side-step Dempsey. I shall be pleased to meet him at the earliest possible moment. I will not boast that I can defeat Dempsey, though I believe that I can. Certainly I shall welcome an opportunity for a try at his title, and I assure you I shall do my best."

Maeterlinck Script Ready

Belgian Poet Writes Original Story; to Be Goldwyn Production

MAURICE MAETERLINCK, the Belgian poet, dramatist and mystic, has completed his first original motion picture scenario for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and it is now being put into continuity form at Goldwyn's Culver City studios on the West Coast. The scenario has been given the working title of "The Power of God."

Goldwyn entered into an agreement with M. Maeterlinck on his arrival in America last year whereby the writer is to prepare one original screen story a year for that corporation. He spent several months at the Culver City studios last winter studying the technique of the motion picture scenario.

The picturization of M. Maeterlinck's play, "The Blue Bird," originally produced by Winthrop Ames at the New (now the Century) theatre, is regarded as one of the outstanding productions in pictures and Goldwyn believes that "The Power of God" will make a greater and a more unusual picture. It is to be handled by Goldwyn as a special production.

The preparation of the continuity has been entrusted to Elmer Rice, the young American dramatist, who leaped into popularity with his first play, "On Trial."

British Player in America

Bertram Burleigh Praises American Production Methods Abroad

ARRIVING in New York this week on his first trip to America, Bertram Burleigh, the English actor who played the lead in "The Great Day," the first Paramount Picture made in England, has nothing but praise for American producing methods and the new Famous Players-Lasky studio in Islington," said Mr. Burleigh, "far surpasses any other studio in Great Britain. It is marvelously well equipped; I am told that it is the equal of any studio in this country in the matter of facilities. Hugh Ford, director-general of the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, who directed 'The Great Day,' and Milton Hoffman who has been in charge of the studio, worked wonders, when one considers the difficulties which conditions in England after the war imposed on all building enterprises.

"Mr. Ford was an eye-opener to the British players and film people with whom he came in contact. His energy and efficiency were everything that we had come to expect from Americans."

Mr. Burleigh plans to visit various American studios. Among the sights which he saw during his first week in America was the new Famous Players studio at Long Island City, in which actual production was begun this week.

Lew Cody and Betty Blythe as they appear in Cody's latest starring vehicle for Robertson-Cole release, "Occasionally Yours"

"Swimming Hole" Is Next Ray Vehicle

Richard Willis, general manager of Charles Ray productions, announced that Mr. Ray's fourth production for release through Associated First National Pictures, will be an adaptation of James Whitcomb Riley's "The Old Swimming Hole."

Bernard McConville, who has been responsible for some of the most successful scenarios of the year, including Annette Kellerman's "What Women Love" and Mr. Ray's "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway," will prepare a continuity of this famed classic.

Mr. Ray states that he expects to be at least four monthts on this production, which will complete his first year's schedule with Associated First National Pictures, Inc., the former productions being "Forty-Five Minutes From Broadway," "Peaceful Valley" and "Nineteen and Phyllis."

It is Mr. Ray's intention to take his long postponed trip to New York when "The Old Swimming Hole" is completed.

First Arbuckle Feature Released in December

Tentatively it has been decided by Paramount to release Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle, a first five-reel comedy in December. This is "The Life of the Party," by Irvin Cobb, and was adapted by Walter Woods. The story first appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. It is said, that while a comedy, the picture is distinguished from the slapstick pictures of the past by the fact that it is wholly legitimate and the comedy is that of situation, dependent on character delineation.

British Author's First Screen Effort

Henry Arthur Jones, English dramatist, who is one of the group of distinguished British authors recruited by Jesse L. Lasky to write directly for the screen, has placed in the hands of Director-General Hugh Ford, of Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., his first script to be picturized by that organization.

The story is based on one of the author's early plays which was published under the title, "James, the Fogey," but never was produced.

mr. state rights buyer

the big feature of the year is "the victim"

it has an intensely interesting story, soul-stirring action, beautiful settings and perfect photography it contains every element of human interest, heart appeal and thrilling suspense that a motion picture audience loves to see it has called upon all the inventions of dramatic art to aid it in "putting over" a "punch story" that has no superior in sustained interest and suspense it has a remarkably valuable exploitation tie-up that means money not only publicity.

1600 broadway. new york city

THE sale of tickets was stopped four times last Sunday at the Capitol Theatre, New York, in order to handle the crowds which stormed the box office to see Goldwyn's production of Basil King's "Earthbound."

At the seven o'clock showing the police reserves from the West Forty-seventh street police station, were called out to clear Broadway of the crowds which blocked traffic and to get the picture fans into two lines. Between 16,000 and 18,000 persons saw "Earthbound" at the Capitol on its first day's showing.

"Snooky" a "Western" Hero in Next Chester

Snooky, the Humanzee, who is featured in Chester Comedies, released through Educational Exchanges, becomes a rival to the stars in "Westerns" in the fourth of the series, "A Tray Full of Trouble." The print has just reached New York and has been given an advance inspection by Educational officials.

There are said to be a number of thrills in the picture, including one where Snooky saves the child on a handcar from the path of an express train. "A Trail Full of Trouble" is scheduled for October release.

"Ladies Must Live" to Go via Paramount

It will be well over a year since the presentation of George Loane Tucker's masterpiece, "The Miracle Man," before his second production made under his contract with the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, is released. Distribution will be made through Paramount-Artcraft exchanges. The picture is "Ladies Must Live," adapted from a story by Alice Duerr Miller. Betty Compson will also be featured in this picture.

Universal Serial Finished

"Flaming Disk" Starring Elmo Lincoln, to Be October Release

A NEW Universal serial, in eighteen episodes and starring Elmo Lincoln, is ready for release, it is announced by Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for Universal. It is called "The Flaming Disk," and is built around the struggles of the U. S. Secret Service with a band of arch-criminals over the possession of a dangerous invention. It is to be released October 4th.

Great pains have been taken by Universal, says Mr. Berman, to make this serial a novelty among chaptered photodramas. Chief of the notable attributes of the new thriller is the dual role played by Elmo Lincoln. He not only plays the hero of the picture, a Secret Service agent, but also one of the villains, a young dissolute gangster who is a twin brother of the government agent.

In "The Flaming Disk," the dual roles of the star call often for the simultaneous appearance on the screen of Lincoln in both roles, conversing with himself and even struggling with himself. This has been accomplished, Universal reports, only by photography of the most painstaking kind.

The story is from the pen of Phillip Hubbard and A. H. Gooden, the two scenarists who also wrote "Elmo the Fearless." Robert F. Hill is the director of this latest Universal serial. He has to his credit two other Universal serials, "The Great Radium Mystery," which he directed, unaided, and "Elmo the Fearless," for which he was an associate director.

Power's Machines Used in Garden

Unusual projection conditions were encountered at Madison Square Garden, where Tex Rickard is showing "Headin' Home" with Babe Ruth as the star. The problem of putting on a satisfactory picture was placed in the hands of the technical experts of the Nicholas Power Co., and before any steps were taken a complete study of the Garden was carried out.

As finally installed the Powers 6B machine is required to throw the picture 290 feet onto a specially made screen surface 36 feet in width. Setting a screen of this size was in itself considerable of a task, but it was accomplished successfully on the day previous to the opening, all earlier work having been prohibited because of the other exhibitions being held in the Garden.

But even with all these handicaps the equipment was installed and ready for use when the doors were opened and the picture as thrown on the screen has been widely commented upon.

Seitz Uses Big Sets in "Rogues and Romance"

In a set representing a plaza and street in a Spanish city, in the building of which some forty thousand dollars is reported to have been expended, George B. Seitz is filming scenes for his forthcoming Pathe feature "Rogues and Romance," at Larchmont, New York. The director-star is said to have used upward of twelve hundred extras in the fight scenes which take place in the enclosed plaza, a setting, which, in depth, is equal to the average city block and shows a municipal palace, six stories in height, flanked by rows of houses in the old Spanish architecture.

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

Pioneer Has New Feature

"Where is My Husband?" Features Jose Collins in Six Reel Drama

PIONEER'S latest announcement lists strongly among its current features "Where is My Husband?" a six reel drama adapted from the stage success "The Whirlpool." Jos Collins and Godfrey Tearle are the featured players.

The scenes of this Pioneer production are laid in the Carribean Sea and South America, while much of the action in the story has its inspiration in the United States.

An announcement made at the headquarters of the Pioneer Film Corporation, 130 West 46th Street, by vice-president and general manager M. H. Hoffman, characterizes "Where Is My Husband?" as an appealing drama and the prediction is made that it will meet with success.

The picture tells the story of a struggling young opera singer who gives her heart and hand to a young American, only to be separated from him through the jealousy and greed of her own people.

Believing that her husband had deserted her, she fights her grief by turning again to her profession and becoming a figure in the operatic circles of world-wide fame, her little daughter being a constant reminder of the love which she had won and lost. In the meanwhile, her husband believing her dead, is forced to the threshold of a wedding with another woman.

Besides Miss Collins and Mr. Tearle, others in the cast include Bruce Winston, Frances Wetherell, Saba Raleigh, Christine Mailland and J. Fisher White.

Another Cabanne Feature Coming

ROBERTSON - COLE announces in course of preparation a super - special production, "What's A Wife Worth?" written and being directed by William Christy Cabanne, to be the second of a series inaugurated by "The Stealers." Four months will be consumed in completing "What's A Wife Worth?" which will make it a release for early in 1921.

Pauline Frederick Film Is Titled

"A Slave of Vanity" is the title under which Robertson-Cole will release the screen version of Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's spoken play, "Iris," starring Pauline Frederick. This production is of interest not only because it falls within the first few super-specials released by Robertson - Cole under its new regime of only maximum attractions, but because it is the first of the new series of Pauline Frederick pictures for which this star has contracted with Robertson-Cole.

Considering the power of Miss Frederick's name as a drawing card, which is based on her past successes, the fame of the story in which she is appearing, and the care and expense which have been lavished on this, first Robertson-Cole picture, the exhibitor in "A Slave of Vanity" will find an attraction which will be surpassed by none in drawing power.

R. A. Walsh to Start on Third Production

Foregoing the customary ten days lapse between the completion of one picture and the beginning of another, R. A. Walsh this week signalized the completion of his second independent production for Mayflower by making preparation for the filming of his third. According to present plans, actual camera work on the new offering will be well under way within the ensuing ten days.

With his story already selected, Walsh is now supervising the construction of sets and assembling his cast. Although no official word has come from the Biograph Studio where Walsh is working relative to the origin of the story, it is understood that an internationally famous French novel has been selected.

DeMille Arouses Mr. Zukor

"Something to Think About" Causes Magnate to Issue Special Statement

"SOMETHING to Think About," the latest Cecil De Mille feature affected Adolph Zukor so much that he issued a special statement asking exhibitors to take unusual care in arranging their programs during the showing of this production. The statement follows:

"Exceptional care should be taken in the selection of the program surrounding this feature during its showing. No matter what presentation is given it 'Something to Think About' will be a big success for exhibitors; but unless the subjects which precede and follow it on the program are chosen with thoughtfulness and care, it is possible exhibitors may strike a note that will jar the sensibilities of their audiences. For this picture is certain to rouse spectators to a high pitch of emotion, and it would be doing Mr. DeMille and the audience a great injustice to show pictures with it that would not be in harmony with its theme.

"In other words, I feel strongly that there should be no locked program in the showing of this production. I suggest to exhibitors that in presenting this picture they might forget the desire for a variety of subjects appealing to all classes, and so shape their programs that everything on the bill—music, short subjects, stage settings—will be in complete harmony with the big theme of the production. I shall not suggest any special program; every exhibitor will immediately think of numerous good subjects to be played with this feature.

"Personally I think 'Something to Think About' is the biggest thing Cecil B. DeMille has ever done; and I feel confident exhibitors will agree with me after they have seen it."

"Just Stories" Are Wanted

Veiller States Metro Will Pay No Attention to Author's Name

"JUST stories. Stories possessing dramatic values, comedy, action—picture possibilities, regardless of the name or fame of the writer."

Such are the simple requirements of Bayard Veiller, chief of the story producing department at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood for plots to be used in the company's forthcoming productions.

For Mr. Veiller has brought his knowledge of the stage to bear upon the making of screen plays. And, since, his experience consists of nearly twenty years in every phase of theatrical work, from press agenting to playwriting, his personality has made itself felt in every detail of the production work at Metro's California studios.

An example of Mr. Veiller's knack of story finding is to be seen in F. Scott Fitzgerald's Saturday Evening Post tale, "Head and Shoulders." Although Mr. Fitzgerald was practically unknown at the time the story was published it was immediately purchased and prepared for production by Mr. Veiller.

"The Chorus Girl's Romance," starring Viola Dana, which already has become one of the decided hits of the year, was the result. "The Offshore Pirate," another of Mr. Fitzgerald's stories, soon will be filmed by Metro.

Everyone of Mr. Veiller's theatrical bag of tricks has been used in the making of recent pictures at the Pacific Coast producing unit. Not only in the selection and writing of stories, but in the titling, casting, staging and actual cutting of the pictures, has he made his experience felt.

First National Officials Pleased With A. S. Kane's "Peaceful Valley"

IN a pre-view screening this week at the First National offices, "Peaceful Valley," the famous American stage classic starring Charles Ray, was acclaimed a dramatic victory for the actor and a photoplay of the native soil destined to take place in the first rank of photodramatic achievement, according to reports from First National. The picturization of this stage play is the second offering in which Arthur S. Kane presents Charles Ray for First National distribution. It is scheduled for release on October 11th.

It was phophecied in the official gathering at the First National projection room that Mr. Ray's screen version of "Peaceful Valley" was in a fair way to supersede in popular acclaim the historic reputation of the original stage piece. The photoplay was directed by Jerome Storm.

"Peaceful Valley" was originally written by Edward E. Kidder for Sol Smith Russell, one of the most famous personalities of the American stage. It was first produced in 1891 to an immediate triumph. Playing thirteen weeks at the Grand Opera House in Chicago to capacity houses, it jumped to Daly's theatre, New York City, for a long metropolitan run, and then began a tour of the United States and Canada which went on year after year until Mr. Russell's death.

Vitagraph announces this week that Joe Ryan is being starred in a new Western serial entitled "The Purple Riders." Joe Ryan recently completed "Hidden Dangers," the Jekyll-Hyde serial, as a co-star with Jean Paige. More Sunshine Directors

Williams, Brown and Davis Join Fox Comedy Forces in California

FOLLOWING recently announced plan of William Fox to improve upon the two-reel Sunshine Comedies comes the announcement of the engagement of three new directors. They are Harry Williams, Melville W. Brown, and James Davis, each of whom comes to the Fox organization with many years experience in the comedy directing line.

Harry Williams has almost from the beginning of his screen work, been connected with comedies. Among his most notable comedies are "Double Trouble" and "Too Many Nurses."

Melville W. Brown hails from Portland, Oregon, where he gained his first stage experience with the Baker Stock Company. After four seasons in vaudeville he entered motion pictures as a scenario writer for Triangle. Previous to being signed by Fox he was directing Montgomery and Rock. James Davis is a well-known figure in motion picture work, having for the past several years been affiliated as a director for some of the screen's foremost comedies.

"Blackbirds" Is Completed

Justine Johnstone Enters Stardom in 1913 Broadway Stage Success

JUSTINE JOHNSTONE makes her debut as a screen star in the Realart production, "Blackbirds," the filming of which has just been completed. The story of "Blackbirds" is adapted from the late Harry James Smith's successful play of the same name. Many of the scenes were laid in Florida, where the company spent several weeks last summer. The shipboard scenes, which figure so prominently in the story, were photographed on the steamer which brought Miss Johnstone and cast home from Florida.

The production was directed by Jack Dillon, who established his reputation in such films as "The Right of Way," with Bert Lytell, and Mary Pickford in "Suds." Ray Hallor assisted in the direction and Arthur Quinn is responsible for the photography. Among those who appear in "Blackbirds" with Miss Johnstone are William Boyd, Charles Gerrard, Walter Walker, Marie Shotwell, Grace Parker, Jessie Arnold, Ada Boshell and Alex Saskins.

As a stage production, Henry Miller first produced "Blackbirds" in 1913 at the Lyceum theatre, New York. It is a story of a Russian refugee, Leona Trenton, noted for her beauty, who had been intrigued into joining a band of international crooks known as "Blackbirds."

GARETH HUGHES has signed a contract in which he will appear exclusively in Metro productions for a term of years. This announcement, just made by Metro Pictures Corporation, follows closely in the wake of the reviews that resulted from the youthful Mr. Hughes's appearance with Viola Dana in her newest starring vehicle, "The Chorus Girl's Romance." The young man whose work on the speaking stage was given the unqualified approval of Mrs. Fiske, was hailed as screen success by the press critics who passed upon his work in support of Miss Dana.

New Universal Star in Circus Picture

Gladys Walton, one of the newcomers to the moving picture screen, has achieved stardom, and is the central figure of Universal's latest release, "Pink Tights," a picture of circus life, to be shown in first-run houses throughout the country during the week of October 4. "Pink Tights" is from the story, "Out of the Sky," by J. U. Giezy. It is the romance of a pretty parachute jumper, with a circus, whose parachute inadvertently lands her upon the roof of a parsonage in a staid New England village.

The role of the young minister is taken by Jack Perrin, remembered as the leading man in several recent Universal productions. Reeves Eason directed.

Long Booking for a "Mutt and Jeff"

The distinction of having been scheduled for one of the longest runs ever accorded an animated cartoon has come to "The Merry Cafe," the latest William Fox release of Bud Fisher's celebrated characters, Mutt and Jeff. This has been booked by the Criterion theatre, New York, for a four weeks' run in conjunction with "The Restless Sex."

The Criterion is the latest of the big Times Square motion picture theatres to recognize the quality of Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons, which have advanced to the foremost rank in this branch of film amusement. The Rivoli and Rialto theatres, New York, for some time past have made Mutt and Jeff a feature of their programs.

Bacheller Work to be Filmed

Otto Bollman, president of the Dial Film Company, now producing eminent authors' features at the Brunton studios, has completed final negotiations with Irving Bacheller for the purchase of his well known work, "The Light in the Clearing." Seven editions and over 900,000 copies of this popular work have been issued by Mr. Bacheller's publishers.

"Midchannel" Drive Begun

Equity Franchise Holders Will Boost Clara Kimball Young Film

WHAT is claimed to be the most extensive advertising and publicity campaign Equity has ever launched on any production, is planned and all set for next month —the drive to take place simultaneously in every big city, twenty in all, in connection with the opening of "Midchannel" in the respective territories of each Equity branch.

The first step in this country-wide campaign was to secure a first-run house in each territory. The local franchise holders found this an easy matter, once "Midchannel" was screened for the house manager. Thus far, all territories but two report that "Midchannel" has been booked for first-run opening in October. The two Equity exchanges that have not yet obtained a first-run date are San Francisco and Denver, the reason being that there are not enough prints available.

This drive marks the first time that Equity has undertaken a national drive of this kind from its own headquarters, instead of letting each exchange shift for itself. The national office of Equity in New York has arranged to supply each franchise-holder with all the advertising material, cuts, publicity, etc., for local use, and a budget of advertising expense carefully laid out. Each Equity franchise-holder will "go the limit" on newspaper and trade-paper advertising in their respective territories, the total amount to be spent aggregating close to $50,000.

Wm. Duncan Serial Titled

Vitagraph Serial to Be "Fighting Fate"; Early Episodes Finished

"FIGHTING FATE" has been selected as the title of the second of William Duncan's million dollar series serials for the Vitagraph Company. The first was "The Silent Avenger." The new serial is the creation of Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and Cleveland Moffet, the well known writer.

The picturization of the earlier episodes of "Fighting Fate" is progressing rapidly, and with highly gratifying results. A large production force is employed. Duncan is directing the serial himself. Edith Johnson will again be seen in the role opposite to Duncan.

"Fighting Fate," of course, was written to order for William Duncan, and consequently a number of real thrills were written in. Duncan will be seen as "Kern Lambert," a young business man with experience as a gold miner.

Keaton Comedy Going Big

Metro Exchanges Report Great Exhibitor Interest in Series

DISTRICT managers and the heads of Metro Pictures Corporation's twenty-five exchanges throughout the United States and Canada report a great wave of interest among exhibitors everywhere in the forthcoming Buster Keaton comedies, the first of which, "One Week," is a September release. These two reel laughmakers are to be issued eight weeks apart.

The exhibitor response to the Keaton comedies is regarded by Metro officials as all the more gratifying in view of the fact that the new series of two-reel subjects with the serious funmaker mark his debut as a star in his own right, after a long and successful career on the vaudeville stage as a member of the famous knockabout act of the Three Keatons and a period of service as a comedian in support of Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle.

Joseph M. Schenck is the producer of the Keaton Comedies which Metro will distribute exclusively. The pictures are made at the Keaton studios in Hollywood, Calif. Buster hiself writes and co-directs with Eddie Cline, the stories in which he appears.

Exhibitors all over the country are tying up with Knights of Columbus and other Catholic organizations for specially exploited showings of the two International News Reels containing moving pictures of Pope Benedict XV. The two reels, International News No. 61 and 62, were released September 14 and 17, respectively.

The pictures taken in and around the Vatican, said to be the first ever taken of the head of the Roman Catholic Church, show the visit of several hundred Americans, delegates of the Knights of Columbus, to Rome. The installment in International News No. 61 include the arrival of the Knights and the appearance of the Pope. In International News No. 62, additional pictures of the Knights are shown on the pilgrimage to the Eternal City.

"Torchy" Scores at Strand, Brooklyn

"Torchy Comes Through," second of the two-reel comedies made by Master Films, Inc., from the stories by Sewell Ford and featuring Johnny Hines, is being exhibited this week at the Strand theatre, Brooklyn. The first of these comedies, "Torchy," was shown at the Strand shortly after its production and before the distribution of the series was taken over by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

According to Edward L. H. Lyman, managing director of the Strand, "Torchy Comes Through" made one of the most pronounced hits that any comedy he has ever shown has registered and he has already announced that "Torchy in High," the third of the comedies, will be seen at his house within a very short time and that Torchy will be a regular visitor to Strand audiences.

According to a telegraphic dispatch received by Benjamin A. Prager, president of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation at the company's headquarters in New York, George Loane Tucker this week completed final editing of "Ladies Must Live," his second independent production for Mayflower and successor to "The Miracle Man." Arrangements are now being made to ship a print East, with the possibility of the producer following in a short time, to be on hand for the picture's initial public showing.

"Ladies Must Live" will be presented by Mayflower as a Paramount Artcraft special. The story is adapted from Alice Duer Miller's novel which appeared originally in serial form in the Ladies' Home Journal. The cast of "Ladies Must Live" includes Betty Compson, Mahlon Hamilton and Robert Ellis.

CABANNE'S

Document The Stealers

Special Service Section on

W. Christy Cabanne's "The Stealers"

FOUNDED on what may be justly termed the greatest of all human virtues, faith "The Stealers" is a picture which comes to you with a message so big and vital that it overshadows all other considerations and should be the foundation of your exploitation campaign.

"The Stealers" is the story of a gang of crooks who follow the country fairs, cloaking their operations through a "gospel tent" where religious meetings are held. The leader of the gang is a "back slidden" minister who preaches about God's love, while his co-workers flim flam and pick the pockets of the people who attend the fairs. Finally the preacher regains his faith in God and by so doing converts all his gang and makes them see the error of their ways.

The locale of the picture is a small country town. The principal characters are the gang of crooks, who are forced to remain in the village when misfortune overtakes them, and two local young men who enter into the story principally as the masculine part of two separate romances.

The high lights of the production are to be founded in the scenes that show a heavy summer storm breaking over the village, with the subsequent striking of a house by lightning, the bolt blinding the preacher and burning the building, a dramatic example of one of the young men's faith in the girl who was a pickpocket prior to her reformation and now the young man's wife, the fine small town atmosphere, the realism of the country fair sequences and the scenic beauty and general artistic manner in which the picture has been produced.

The exploitation angles that especially recommend are the theme, the fame of William Christy Cabanne, who is both director and author, the unique and unusual characters making up the crook portion of the cast, the melodramatic sequences having to do with the storm and the fire.

Advance Exploitation Suggestions

SINCE the theme of this production has its very foundation in a faith in God, and its message is more or less of a preachment, the picture is one that churches and church people will find especially interesting.

With the idea of gaining the cooperation of the class we have mentioned, we suggest that you arrange to show the picture to a selected audience made up of the ministers of your city, prominent church people, and others who are interested in pictures that have a message.

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared after studying the picture and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made of suggestions printed here and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture?

We would make a personal call on the people we especially desired to be present, with the idea in mind of selling them the fact that this is a picture with an "uplift" thought, rather than to let them come in, those who would come on a plain invitation, expecting just entertainment.

When you get your crowd together before the picture starts make a little speech in which you express, along with the usual "welcome stuff," your determination to secure all the pictures you can which have something to recommend them besides just entertainment and ask their co-operation in making such a policy a success. Explain that the general theatre going public has not been educated as yet to a class of pictures which carry out that which is the backbone of the lyceum bureau entertainments, that you are fearful your decision to raise the standard of your theatre programs requires considerable missionary work, and that it is only from such people as are your guests that you can expect assistance along the lines you have mentioned. In this way you will secure the working assistance of some people who could not be hired to publicise your attraction and also build a name for your house with a class of people who have a considerable influence.

It would not be an impossible thing to so enthuse your visiting ministers to such an extent that they will go into their pulpits and preach on the subject of the theme of "The Stealers," with, perhaps, some reference to the picture itself. It is worth trying.

For your special show which should be held well in advance of your regular dates, we would arrange to get testimonials concerning the production, planting, if possible, the idea you want expressed with the first of those you request for words of praise and carefully avoiding bringing into the conversation the fact that you intend to use what they say as advertising.

If you get favorable comment from the right people, those whose words will be an influence use what they say in the papers and in your lobby.

If you get a good audience out for your special show, the newspapers will give you all the space you want and some of it will reach the front page.

With your special showing and such other early advertising as you decide to do out of the way, your next step should be your display ads.

For these we would select face stills of the seven crooks as they appear before their regeneration, and have cuts made for good sized ads. Under each cut place a caption which would explain who the person is and the part he or she has in the story. As an illustration of what we mean, place below the picture of William H. Tooker, something like the following. "The Missioner, leader of a gang of pickpockets and confidence men, who cursed him he had once served."

For your selling talk, use paragraphs that bring to the fore the theme with the actual story only suggested. Next to your title, William Christy Cabanne's name as both author and director should be played up. We would mention some of the most important pictures Mr. Cabanne produced prior to "The Stealers," and also state that his latest picture is the product of years of thought and careful preparation.

Mention may be made of the meldramatic sequences having to do with the bolt of lightning and the fire, but care should be exercised that your reader does not gather that you consider these angles of more than secondary interest.

Unless some one of the rather large cast of characters is especially well known in your city we would not feature any of the players. Doing this would have a tendency to take attention from your principal exploitation angle, the theme.

We would avoid bold face type in any of our display lines and would not usee any of the stills that would suggest melodrama. This for the same reason given above.

Lobby Display Suggestions

FOR those who choose to disregard what looks to us to be the proper advertising angle as has been stated and consider "hokum" productive of better results, the opportunity for a "county fair" lobby display is very good.

It would be a very simple matter to transform the lobby of your house into the entrance of the "gospel tent" of the picture by the use of awning cloth and portions of a good sized tent.

We would carefully avoid suggesting the circus atmosphere in our display, but identify the idea of the "gospel tent" with signs, placards, etc.

Prologue Suggestions

THE most effective prologue is one which combines scenic qualities and music in which artistic lightings can be utilized. With this in mind we suggest the following.

Well up stage hang a rural landscape drop showing a sloping hill rising several hundred feet high, and with your skyline a mile or so in perspective. Trees and fences show dimly in the distance. The drop should be a panorama circling down to the tormentors. Close to your front curtain set a center pole round tent that will practically fill your proscenium opening. The part of the tent facing the audience should be the back and disclose no opening except a slit at one of the small poles holding up the eaves. Light the inside of the tent as if gasoline torches were being used. Light the rest of the stage for night with a moonlight with a flood on the audience side of the tent.

After your drapes are parted, have an actor back of the tent pronounce the "benediction" in good old-fashioned camp meeting style with the organ coming in at its finish with some hymn that is familiar to all, and that will be reminiscent of a "revival." As the organ is playing ad lib the murmur of voices as if people were going out of the tent on the opposite side also have five singers, four men and one woman, slip through the slit in the tent wall and group together on the stage. At the close of the organ solo, snuff the light inside the tent with a voice calling up center, "Come Julia."

Following this one of the men inquires in a hoarse whisper, "What luck, Mary?" The woman does not reply, but holds out her hand, whereupon the man flashes the light from a combination cane and electric flash light on it, disclosing a roll of bills, which he grasps greedily, and sings softly, "Oh, What a Pal Was Mary," with the other four persons joining in after the first line. Use as much of the song as will get over, and in the meantime raise a moon over the horizon with a gradual lighting of the set until the profile of the girl who you will select to look as near as possible like the "Mary" of the picture and who is to be costumed to represent her is discernible. Additions could be made to this prologue as outlined by the use of a congregational singing of a hymn before the benediction and the reading of lines by the five people presented to your audience.

Advance Newspaper Readers

ONE of the unusual motion pictures booked for an early showing at the ——— ——— theatre is "The Stealers," billed as "a photoplay with a message," and a play woven from a theme that has its foundation in the greatest of human virtues, faith.

William Christy Cabanne, famous director of such pictures as "The Slacker," "Draft 258," and associated with D. W. Griffith for five years in all of his best Triangle productions, is the author of "The Stealers," and also directed it.

The cast is a brilliant one with no particular player featured in as much as the story itself is of such unusual merit that the picture ranks as a production rather than a starring vehicle.

Mr. Cabanne has conceived not only a novel and entertaining plot in "The Stealers," but has invested it with technical attention that alone entitles the picture to every praise. The most realistic storm scene, culminating in the striking of a house by lightning and a subsequent fire, ever staged is one of its thrills. In sharp contrast to this thrill are the sequences having to do with a county fair where all the detail and atmosphere imaginable has been realized. However, it is the basic plot of the story, one showing what occurred when those who had lost faith, not only in God, but in all mankind including themselves again, found their way back to the light, that especially recommends.

The engagement of "The Stealers" which begins ———, and lasts ——— days, is expected to be one of the real theatrical events of the season.

The ——— theatre announces an unusual attraction for ——— in "The Stealers," an original motion picture, written and directed by William Christy Cabanne, based on a plot having its foundation in faith, not only in God, but in all mankind.

Mr. Cabanne, who is one of the best known directors the screen boasts, has been working on the story which is now called "The Stealers" for many years, and in its production he has outdone even his own great photoplay successes like "Draft 258," and "The Slacker," two of the war time hits that made him both fame and fortune.

"The Stealers" is described as "a play with a message," a story of unique character set amid unusual surroundings and enacting a strange but simple story of a faith that was betrayed and then regained of a girl who almost lost her soul through associations, of a minister of God who cursed his Maker and then repented, of young men who had never been straight, who at last saw the light, and of simple country folk whose one great day of pleasure was the annual county fair.

Its engagement is regarded as one of the great theatrical events of the season by the ——— management.

Feature Subjects of Short Length

"Movie Chats" and "Kineto Review"

CHARLES URBAN, internationally known for film issues of informative value, must have felt the call of "doing his bit" in the war of exhibitors of film for the kind of material possible to "fit" into a program. Whether it be the desire to shorten or lengthen it, and at the same time strengthen his show, the exhibitor can find what he wants either in Movie Chats or Kineto Review. It would be far easier to find a subject that would "fit in," looking over a catalogue of these short descriptive and entertaining offerings, than it would be to find one which would be amiss.

The "Movie Chats" are more or less of intimate nature, the titles written in the first person, and told with story interest. The Eighth series, for instance, starts with activities of the American Army of Occupation, before leaving the Rhine, and in 950 feet covers 20 subjects, or, to be more exact, sub-subjects. However, in less time than it takes to see it, one has absorbed a smattering of knowledge both entertaining and worth knowing. They are educational classics in plain language.

These offer an exploitation value, for they can be promised ahead each week, or each day, creating the kind of following commanded by any interesting serial entertainment, but having the happy faculty of being a closed chapter. One does not depend, in any way, upon the following for continuity or interest.

The "Kineto Review" is best described as "The Living Book of Knowledge," in the author's own words, and while there is no possibility of its conflicting, it fills the same vacancy usually supplied by a weekly review. That is why, in order to shorten or lengthen his program, the exhibitor will find the Chats and Reviews of use. And for atmosphere, to precede a feature of sectional locale, the Reviews are ideal. There was one showing the inhabitants of Dixie—the kind that are called "poor white trash," but it lays down an atmosphere foundation which should hold throughout the footage depicting a story of a like country.

The photography Mr. Urban has been fortunate in having, would be a great help to many five, six and seven-reel features, ruined by poor camera-work. His subjects require patience and persistency, but in mastering these the photographer has also remembered everything he ever knew about his art, and obviously that was considerable.—LILLIAN GALE.

"The Wampum Hunters"

(Joy Comedy—Aywon—Two Reels)

OVERDONE slapstick characterizes this comedy. It starts off with the promise of being nothing but a series of rough and tumble incidents in the city, but about in the second reel it switches to a far away island inhabited by a wild tribe. Here a number of girls dance about, and one of our pair of heroes is threatened with death at the stake unless he marries the chief's daughter. Of course, the lady in question is not made particularly attractive and our hero prefers to be burned to death. He escapes at the last minute and he and his pal decided to take all of the pretty little savages back to their home. A ship being lacking, they agree to walk back along the bottom of the ocean.

The director must have been at fault, for the unattractive costuming of most of the savages and the fact that a steamer is visible when the boys are supposed to be stranded in mid-ocean. There are few gags—the producers having been content to try for laughs by the old-fashioned slapstick—MATTHEW TAYLOR.

"The Fall of a Saint"

(Gaumont—State Rights—Five Reels)

WHILE this production does not reach any great heights in the directing, acting, or development line, it has some features that will interest in the State Rights market. One of these is the title, and another the cabaret interiors, which are fairly lavish. It also has a certain amount of mystery, which, although it does not form the chief element of the play, is good for keeping up the suspense.

Josephine Earle is featured. While not an out-and-out vampire role, she is made an adventuress seeking to bring about the fall of a charity worker known as "The Saint." In the beginning she is painted as somewhat sympathetic, and it is a shock to learn at the end that she is her husband's murderess. The picture has a happy ending, for "The Saint" marries one of his co-workers at the settlement, who has somehow found her way to a gay cafe in gay Paree, where she is a dancer. The star dies, broken hearted, for she had fallen in love with the man she sought to ruin. The continuity and cutting show faults at times. There are dramatic sub-titles thrown in where the action does not warrant them.

The production manages to keep well to the standard of the majority of independent pictures, but certainly does not rise above it. The cast and director are not credited on the screen. The story is announced as being adapted from a novel by Eric Clement Scott. The action is laid in London and Paris.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Wooly Bits and Monkey Hits"

(Educational)

A CHESTER OUTING, out of the ordinary. One that takes us out of the beaten path and carries us to the southern uplands of Peru, where llamas in droves make their own paths and parade before the camera in well behaved sequence. The sheep, with heavy coats ready for shearing, are not so camera-broke. But the discomfort while being relieved of their wool helped make an interesting and exciting subject. The photography is excellent. It renders possible the knowledge of what a llama looks like in the face. They are not an expressionless animal. On the contrary, they look as if they knew what it is all about. This picture, besides moving with considerable snap, informs us where Los Angeles obtained the original "cafeteria" idea. The inhabitants are all used to waiting upon themselves when it is meal time. They are not exactly selfish—but "every fellow for himself."—LILLIAN GALE.

"Too Much Overhead"

(Educational)

THE tired business man wants to know how to reduce the cost of production. In other words, how to operate without that irritating necessity, "Overhead." It is all explained in the Chester "Too Much Overhead"—but unfortunately for the tired business man of English-speaking countries, where office buildings and "flash" go to make up the major part of his business, how the "overhead" is eliminated in China will not go far toward solving his problem. However, it is entertaining to see how anything and everything is seemingly carried on in China, in the back yard. There is the laundry, the bakery, the barber shop. All right out in plain view. It saves the necessity of having to come up for air. The air is there, and everything which lives therein, including insect life. But there is no cost of operation. No "overhead" which makes the man in the country where high cost of living dominates wish he were in the Orient where the back yard serves as factory, office and store—LILLIAN GALE.

"Family Trees"—Chester Screenic and "They All Turned Turtle"—(Split Reel)

"JOHN, the camera-man," plays the usual important part of taking the pictures and supplying the humor for the popular titles, by Katherine Hilliker, in the Chester Outing all about Florida and turtles. Turtles appear in such numbers that the beauty of the scene is not realized until after the footage is run. Then one suddenly realizes that, while learning about turtles and how they are caught, one also learns how beautiful is Florida. On one beach we saw six turtles of enormous size. "John" became excited in catching them. While turning them over on their backs is not a difficult matter, it only proves that in order to "get on your feet" it takes cooperation, and in the case of the turtle, human hands. We saw the eggs, too, where they are hidden, buried in the sands, and how the little turtles are "hatched."

In the same reel, a Chester Screenic, we journeyed to the banks of the Skeena and wandered about in a forest of totem poles. They are what is meant by "family tree," and tell the history of those who have carved them, giving greater insight into their thought and imagination than literature could possibly supply. Talk about "types." There are some aged Indian great-great grandmothers in "Family Trees," who must have required the tallest ever grown in the Canadian forest, which is the locale, even if their lives have been most uneventful.—LILLIAN GALE.

ABOUT PLAYERS

HARRY SOTHERN a nephew of E. H. Sothern and last seen in the Fox spectacle "While New York Sleeps," has been placed under contract by William Fox, to play juvenile and character leads.

Gail Kane is to appear in another story by Willard King Bradley. Its title is "Idle Hands," and deals with the alluringly compelling theme of commercialized vice." In Miss Kane's support will appear Thurston Hall, J. Herbert Frank, Mlle. Dazie, and Ted Lewis and his jazz band.

Gladden James, whose brilliant performance with Norma Talmadge in "Yes or No" will long be remembered, and who is also being featured with Martha Mansfield in the American Cinema Production, "His Brother's Keeper" has been engaged by Selznick for "The Road of Ambition" picture which is Conway Tearle's first big starring vehicle.

Charles Clary, the well-known screen "heavy," is wearing a crown these days. He is playing King Arthur in the William Fox Production of the Mark Twain classic, "A Connecticut Yankee at King Arthur's Court," now in the making.

Having completed work in R. A. Walsh's second independent production soon to be presented by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation through First National, Anna Q. Nilsson is now applying her talents and pulchritude to a film which Edward Jose is directing for Associated Exhibitors. Upon completion of the Jose offering, Miss Nilsson will gather her belongings and depart for California, to fulfill a contract to star in a series of special features.

Armand Cortez, well known actor of both screen and stage threatens to become among scenario writers whose offerings are compensated. Two have been accepted. Mr. Cortez' last two appearances for the screen have been in support of Geraldine Farrar, in "The Riddle: Woman" and with Walter Miller in "The Unfair Sex."

Frank L. Packard's latest story to be filmed by William Fox is "The Iron Rider." It is now being made with William Russell as the hoax and Viola Vale as the leading woman.

William H. Tooker plays an important role in Christy Cabanne's special "The Stealers" and is performing a somewhat novel feat even in these days of dual roles, since he is active in the making of two different pictures in two different States with two different companies, at the same time. In Fort Lee, N. J., he is completing work in Vera Gordon's first picture following "The Humoresque," entitled "Mother Love," supervised by Harry Rapf. In New York city at the International Studio, Mr. Tooker has begun work in "Proxies," under the direction of George D. Baker, and adapted from Frank G. Adams' Cosmopolitan story of the same name.

In both "Mother Love" and in "Proxies" Tooker portrays a big character part and it is upon his actions and decisions that both stories hinge. Instead of proving too much of a strain working in two different pictures in two different States with two different companies, it seems Mr. Tooker's enthusiasm in his work has increased his already strenuous efforts to make use of the many years of experience to his credit.

A new picture of Vivian Martin, whose new photoplay for Messmore Kendall Productions, "The Song of the Soul," will be released by Goldwyn

Arthur Donaldson, well known screen actor, is to blossom out as a full-fledged Broadway star this fall. His first stellar vehicle will be "Sun Valley" which was especially written for Mr. Donaldson by Chester De Vonde, director of many notable screen successes.

There are speed breaking records and other kinds. Here is a new one: That of having controlled and acted in "The Bar Maid," the musical comedy which holds the record for the longest continuous run in England, having played there sixteen years. And this record is held by a screen actor, Alexander Loftus. What if he is not particularly well known to followers of the screen? He is of the old-time English actor realm, and is playing in the George Fitzmaurice production of "Money Mad." And besides, Mr. Loftus is also proud of the distinction of having sung with George Arliss the first time that eminent actor ever sang on the stage—twenty years ago, in a duet in Mark Melford's comedy "Black and White."

After finishing the name part in "Diane of Star Hollow," a big special for Macauley Photoplays, Evelyn Greeley took on a five weeks special engagement in stock with the Poli Players at Worcester and Bridgeport.

She has now closed her stock engagement and is back in New York in negotiation for another special picture.

Meantime, rumor has it that she is slated to open on Broadway about December 20th.

Fritz Lieber, well-known Shakespearian actor, who made his screen debut in the cinema version of Justin Huntly McCarthy's famous novel and stage success, "If I Were King," produced by William Fox and starring William Farnum, is cast for a leading part in a forthcoming Fox spectacle, in which great splendor is promised.

Alice Brady, star of the dramatic stage and of Realart pictures, is appearing in a new play, "Anna Ascends," at the Playhouse, New York. It is pointed out that this will not interfere with her work before the camera, because for a long time she has combined both. Her latest photoplay, "The New York Idea," has just been completed.

Gareth Hughes, one of the most promising young actors of the screen and the speaking stage, has been signed for a term of years by Metro Pictures Corporation with the status of a featured player. Hughes affixed his signature to a contract at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood, Calif. His exclusive services were secured by the company following the tremendous personal hit made by young Hughes as leading man to Viola Dana in that dainty star's most recent production, "The Chorus Girl's Romance."

ABOUT DIRECTORS

HENRY McRAE has completed "The Foreigner," first of a series of Ralph Connor stories to be filmed by the Dominion Film Corporation, for release via First National! And, within a week—he is to begin upon a second, "Corporal Cameron, of the Royal Mounted," exteriors to be taken in Calgary. The director's understanding of these stories of Canadian life is evident. Before he had finished "The Foreigner" most of which was filmed on location touching Winnipeg, Manitoba, he was assigned the second, now being cast. What more can be said?

Bertram Bracken has completed the production of "Kazan" at the Selig studio. "Kazan" is a wolf-dog story of the far north by James Oliver Curwood and it is said that the spectacular treatment given the story by Director Bracken will probably qualify the picture for distribution as a big special. Assisting Mr. Bracken was Jack Laver and the cast included Jane Novak, Ben Deely, Ed. Wallock, Ben Haggarty, Joe Morengo and "Duke" a magnificent big malamute, in the title role.

Leander de Cordova, director of Metro's screen production "Polly With a Past," will soon complete the finishing touches of the Ina Claire picture and will immediately start preliminary work upon his next feature for the same producing company. It will be an all-star cast screen version of a last season's Broadway offering, "The Hole in the Wall." While on way to a location recently with some of the players of his "Polly" cast, Mr. de Cordova claims to have found the coolest street in the Bronx, according to the name indicated which, in the conventional blue and white street identification reads: "Southern BVD."

George Archainbaud is casting, through Arthur H. Jacobs, the fourth feature under his direction for Selznick, and the second in which Elaine Hammerstein is the star. His first, it will be recalled was Eugene O'Brien the second, Conway Tearle. He was then assigned Miss Hammerstein, and is taking a well earned encore.

"But Yet a Woman," is the new title for the Metro production starring Doraldina, the famous dancer, under the direction of Douglas Gerrard, which has resumed production after having been changed in title and many things. It was formerly "Passion Fruit," an adaptation from Carey Wilson's story. The picture was held up for two weeks because of difficulties encountered in selecting the cast, the personnel of which is now complete.

We have among us Director Tom Forman, who, with the Paramount star Thomas Meighan, will begin work upon a new picture to be made in the east, following "Easy Street," in which both the star and director are said to have proven their worth, and then some.

Richard Stanton, in directing the Fox release "The Face at Your Window," with an all star cast has, also, the fact to point out that the screen play is the first from the pen of Max Marcin, to be portrayed in celluloid, although the author is not a newcomer to Broadway stage successes.

Through Edward Small, International have secured the envied services of George Terwilliger, who has already left for the coast and who will direct Marion Davies in her next picture.

Arthur Zellner, who for some time has been production assistant to Maxwell Karger, Director General at Metro's New York studios in West Sixty-first street, will continue as assistant to Karger when the latter begins his new work of directly supervising the five Bert Lytell pictures which Metro will produce during the year and which will bear the name of Maxwell Karger Productions. Mr. Zellner, a trained newspaper man and advertisement writer, has been in motion pictures for about six years, contributing original stories for the screen and preparing scenarios. In his new position he will supervise all literary material used for the screen at the Metro studio, Metro's eastern studios.

Waldemar Young to Work in East

According to a telegram received from Los Angeles, direct from the Lasky studio, Waldemar Young will arrive in New York and become first appointee of Tom J. Geraghty, Eastern Production Editor of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, to the scenario and editing staff of the New Long Island studio.

Mr. Young, a former newspaper man and dramatic critic, is one of the most experienced men in the scenario field. From newspaper work he drifted into theatrical business as manager on tour for Frank Fogarty. He then had a season in advance of Gertrude Hoffman, following which he entered vaudeville playing the Orpheum circuit in his own sketch, "When Caesar Ran a Paper." It was then that he took up scenario writing, becoming a member of the Universal staff, and in that capacity was credited with contributing many of that company's most successful pictures.

Gilbert, "Jack" of All Cinema Trades

"Jack" Gilbert

ALTHOUGH he was born in Logan, Utah, and was probably called "John" by his grandmother, yet to the theatrical profession since in 1895, the year of his birth—that of his first "personal appearance"—he has been "Jack Gilbert."

In order to be sure nothing regarding his career commanding special mention might be omitted, we "looked him up" in all the books which furnish data regarding actors and directors of the cinema. First, there was a bit of difficulty, because, even though everyone refers to him as "Jack," it seemed likely we would find him listed as "John." However, since it seems "Jack" is according to the rites of ceremony responsible for his name, "Jack' it shall be, to the end of the chapter. Even when, in a short time, no doubt, he ranks among leading directors of the screen, by reputation earned, he will still be known as "Jack Gilbert."

Mr. Gilbert having become a director, nevertheless, has doubtless been a source of regret to many of his followers as a leading man. He is the kind the "fans" would naturally trail and the feminine element describe as "a'int he grand?" But, at the age of twenty-three, after having played with Mary Pickford and having established a reputation for himself as an actor—there came a call.

A call at an age when most young men answer to only one, one which supplies the greatest possibility of diversion and entertainment. But we found "Jack Gilbert" in advance of the times, in general and he probably passed the critical stage referred to, when he was about sixteen—for now, he is as serious and determined in his work as directors twice his age—some who were leading men too, when they were twenty-three.

Is it any wonder, then, when we say that the first natural question put to Mr. Gilbert was how and why a young man with such evident possibilities as an actor, at so early an age, decided to shoulder the responsibilities assumed by a director? Was it an accident, was it premeditated—or just how did it happen? Mr. Gilbert's explanation will prove that he is twice his age, in experience and desires:

"Once upon a time—I went to a picture show. I don't recall whether it was one in which I had played or not—possibly not. For it had a peculiar, enviable effect upon a man sitting next to me. He was plainly moved by the portrayal of the story and when it was finished, offered the most flattering criticism a director might wish for. In a semi-embarrassed, rather impulsive confession he said to me, as we were leaving the theatre: 'There is something about that picture—I don't know exactly what it is—but something which makes me feel as if I want to go home—and be good to my wife.' "It had done," said Mr. Gilbert, "what I hope to do in my work as a director, the kind of pictures which bring out the best there is in the players and the people who see it, or unearth a smouldering good in the heart of some, who may have forgotten where they put it."

The direction of the picture, Mr. Gilbert's trained eye possibly discerned, was more responsible for the effect upon his neighbor than the acting, apart from the direction. In any event, that, so he tells us, is the reason for his being willing to forsake the art of acting for the more serious undertaking, as he sees it, of directing. His life, spent entirely in the art of acting, had rendered him eligible to make the decision.

"For ten months previous to being selected as director for Hope Hampton," said Mr. Gilbert, "I had been very closely associated with Maurice Tourneur. I had written stories for him, played his leads, been associate director and finally, co-director. In those months I was responsible, almost entirely, for the casts. At that time Mr. Tourneur was in partnership with my present chief executive and when Associated Producers closed negotiations with Mr. Tourneur, leaving a vacancy, that of a director for Miss Hampton, about whom I had learned a great deal in the meantime, I was most fortunate in having the refusal of the work. Needless to say, I did not refuse, and with the cooperation surrounding me, I have no fear for the outcome. I wanted to be a director and, secretly, I wanted to direct a young star, one who would take kindly the benefit of my experience, despite the fact that perhaps I am the youngest director in the field. My hope now is that I may always feel that same enthusiasm, that same desire to give my entire time and energy to my work, that I feel today."

Was there not a character in juvenile fiction, who built, and worked and built and finally developed a structure called "The House that Jack Built"?

Hope Hampton—"The 1920 Girl"

TO be young and beautiful and a feminine star in motion pictures—the secret desire of the 1920 girl—the one who does not openly admit it.

To see, to meet to learn to know one who personifies the above mentioned ambition, is to exchange ideas and become acquainted with Hope Hampton.

Sometimes we hear and read about "overnight stars." We are skeptical. Sometimes, we are justified. Anyway, Hope Hampton does not claim to have become a star "over night"—at least not what the word "star" means to her. For, in the opinion of Hope Hampton, there is much to be accomplished, facing years of work and effort, before she will grant that she justly earns the title. It was not her fault that it was identified with her so quickly. She was perfectly willing to gradually earn the distinction. She was more inclined, we should say, to take step by step than the average girl with the same attractiveness. She was willing to remain until, in the opinion of her instructors, she was ready to leave the school of dramatic art she had entered. Ad interim—"young and beautiful" took a hand—unexpectedly and endeavored to convince Miss Hampton, with their help, that she did not need to wait further in order to be able to attain the zenith of her desire. Leonce Perret, the noted French director was sure of it, so he induced Miss Hampton to play the leading feminine role in "A Modern Salome" and become a star in her first picture.

The director was French and spoke little English. Miss Hampton, the erstwhile student of dramatic art, was American and spoke little or no French. But she spoke English so fluently that it was finally decided to secure the services of an interpreter, who could tell the star what the director wished to obtain, and the director what the star did not gain from his instruction. But the interpreter was more or less French, too. While she could speak English, she lacked the ability to choose the words of the English language which tended to enlighten the star as to what was expected of her. Therefore, there were difficulties. And Miss Hampton felt she would rather have earned her way to stardom step by step, than to have had "Young and beautiful" make her seem "a star overnight."

But regardless of the weight of a young wife's first biscuit, and the young husband's inability to digest them, if, the next ones are light, fluffy and edible, the husband soon forgets that the first ones were "not so good" and goes bragging to his friends about "what good biscuits his wife makes—now." Besides, she, too, may be "young and beautiful."

Hope Hampton

So, in our talk with Miss Hampton we gained that she was disappointed in her own first efforts, which, were, in the vernacular more or less "rushed." She is thoroughly able to defend the results, which, to her, did not represent the dreams of the 1920 girl.

But there came a second picture "The Bait." And in it, she began to show that she had been studying, in spite of being a star, and had become informed regarding camera range and tricks of "make up."

Then, when "The Bait" was finished, and she had been "starred" for the second time—she started on another, which is about completed. "The working title" she explained, is "The Better Way. She declared the title as it stood was indicative and pointed out that it proved her contention, originally, that "young and beautiful" might be handy helpers in making one a star, but that in her opinion, one must earn the appointment. She told us how, after the experience gained in the two initial productions, she was able to find herself and solve her own problems of getting over her dramatic scenes without having to weigh her own opinion every time, on one side of the scale, with the director's on the other. "I am perfectly willing to do a scene the way a director wishes" said Miss Hampton, "but I want to have an opinion about it myself, and know whereof I speak, before I accept his version of how a girl feels when she loses a loved one, over my own. He may be the best director in the world. I think mine is—but he isn't a girl and I want to solve every problem for myself first, with the hope he sees it in the same light I do. So far, in this picture, there have been very few differences of opinion and I have been permitted to work out my own dramatic scenes, which I do much better even his way, if

Stuart Holmes Cast for Doraldina Film

Stuart Holmes, well-known screen villian, has just completed an important part in the Metro production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." Previous to that he supported Alice Lake in her latest picture "Body and Soul." In both productions Mr. Holmes played his usual role of the villain and now Metro announces his engagement to appear in support of Mme. Doraldina in "But Yet a Woman," her first starring picture under her new contract with the producing company. In this picture Mr. Holmes will enact the role of Andrea Rance, the foreman of a large Hawaiian plantation, and will have an opportunity to display his ability as an all-around bad man. With the engagement of Mr. Holmes the cast for the Doraldina picture is completed. Others taking important parts are Florence Turner, Sidney Bracy and William Bainbridge.

Lucky Seena Owen

Seena Owen, who is playing the part of Ruth in "Lavendar and Old Lace," a Renco production being filmed at the Mayer studios, has received a letter in which she was offered the use of old Irish lace that has been in a Massachusetts family for nearly 200 years. The letter stated in part: "'Lavendar and Old Lace' is my favorite book and I saw by the papers you are in it. I have some fine old lace that has been in my family for nearly 200 years and I will be glad to lend it to you for one of your dresses."

Mollie King and her husband, Kenneth King, in a domestic scene. Her last picture was "Women Men Forget," an American Cinema production. She will return to the screen shortly

To Feature Frank Lloyd Goldwyn Features

It is announced by Goldwyn that the future productions of Frank Lloyd starting with Leo Ditrichstein's comedy "The Great Lover," will be featured as are the Reginald Barker productions. Mr. Lloyd's first Goldwyn picture was "The World and Its Woman," starring Geraldine Farrar. He also directed the Goldwyn-Rex Beach production, "The Silver Horde." Besides directing Pauline Fredericks in "Madam X," he had charge of three other Goldwyn pictures, "The Loves of Letty," "The Woman in Room 13" and the forthcoming release "Roads of Destiny."

Ford Directs Jack Hoxie

Francis Ford, who has been a screen star, director and producer since the time when two-reelers were considered an experiment, has taken over the directorial reins that govern Jack Hoxie, who is being starred by the Berwilla Film Corporation in his first 1920 serial, "Thunderbolt Jack."

Mr. Ford is "between pictures" of his own serial productions.

Pioneer Manager Back from Exchange Tour

Sounding a note of optimism and expressing the utmost confidence in business for months to come, M. H. Hoffman, vice-president and general manager of the Pioneer Film Corporation returned yesterday from a visit to all the Pioneer exchanges in the most important cities in the country.

Mr. Hoffman is said to have brought back with him the most satisfactory reports from all the exchanges.

"Restless Sex" Star Absent at Opening

A great many of the "first nighters" at the opening of the film version of Robert Chambers' famous novel, "The Restless Sex," hoped that, according to custom, the star, Marion Davies, would be present. They met with disappointment, as did Miss Davies, on account of her inability to appear.

Miss Davies was obliged to remain in California where exteriors for another one of her pictures are being made, while the director of her most recent work, "Buried Treasure," and the company, returned to New York on scheduled time.

Many of the exteriors for "Buried Treasure" were taken off the coast of Mexico, and seasickness, so the players relate, got the upper hand of everyone except the star herself, who paced the decks valiantly at all times.

For modern sea scenes, John D. Speckles tendered Miss Davies the use of his palatial steel yacht, The Venetia, which won the gold star for sinking submarines during the late world war, but even this did not allay the disappointment in being unable to arrive in New York in time for the opening of "The Restless Sex."

Coast Will Never Lose Studios, says Vignola

Answering in his capacity as a director and producer the statements attributed to certain producers to the effect that Los Angeles has been "filmed out," and that the bulk of production is likely to be taken away from southern California, Robert G. Vignola, producer of special productions for Cosmopolitan-Paramount places himself on record as saying that the possibility is remote.

"There isn't another location in the world so consistently suited for producing motion pictures as Los Angeles," said Director Vignola. "Being a director, I can speak from the director's point of view. The light and the clearness of the atmosphere cannot be beaten anywhere."

De Cordova Praised for Vitagraph Continuity

Rudolph de Cordova is announced as the continuity writer of "Dead Men Tell No Tales," which is now under production by Vitagraph. According to George Randolph Chester, editor in chief of the Vitagraph forces, the first part of the picture is a knockout. "I am awaiting with impatience," said the editor, "the pleasure of reading the second half."

"You invariably give me," wrote Mr. Chester to the scenarist, "all that is in a story entrusted to you and about one hundred per cent more."

The one and only "Fatty" Arbuckle as he appears in "A Reckless Romeo," a Paramount-Artcraft comedy necessary for having studied the situation all alone."

Dramatic scenes! There we have it! These are what Miss Hampton enjoys and what, so she admitted, she was willing to sacrifice youth and beauty to attain. "And," she assured, "no matter how well I may do in one picture, my ambition is to rise, rise, rise. I want to surpass myself in every succeeding attempt I make, regardless of how good my preceding efforts register."

And here we have a petite femininity, one who is young and beautiful and aspires to be a deserving star—even though she personifies the 1920 girl.

Los Angeles Premiere for "Misfit Wife"

The premiere showing of "The Misfit Wife," the new Metro production in which Alice Lake is featured, was held at the Victory theatre in Los Angeles, recently, and pronounced a "hit" by the Los Angeles newspapers, according to Metro reports. This latest Metro production to present Alice Lake in the featured role is the story of a little laundress girl who marries out of her class, and in this part, according to one newspaper reviewer, Miss Lake touched "the hearts of her audience from the first moment."

Contracts Prove Popularity of Mix

Barker Picks Capable Cast

Barbara Castleton, James Kirkwood and Richard Tucker Head Line-up

GOLDWYN claims for "The Branding Iron," Reginald Barker's picturization of Katherine Newlin Burt's Western novel of the same title, a cast of unusual ability and "the best" that Director Barker has ever selected. The following statement has been issued by Goldwyn in connection with this production:

"The cast is headed by Barbara Castleton as the woman branded on the upper arm with the brand of her husband's ranch because he is unjustly suspicious of her. She handles the role with dramatic strength and emotional appeal. Miss Castleton has been seen in two other Goldwyn productions, "Out of the Storm" and "Dangerous Days."

"James Kirkwood, who is cast for the role of Pierre Landis, the suspicious husband, has acted on the dramatic stage with such stars as Henry Miller, Margaret Anglin, Blanche Bates, etc., and in pictures with Mary Pickford, Mack Sennett, Owen Moore and others.

"Richard Tucker has the part of Prosper Gael, the playwright, who rescued Joan Carver from her husband but in the rescuing did her a greater wrong than had her husband. His first appearance on the stage was with Nat Goodwin in a revival of 'When We Were Twenty-One.'

"Russell Simpson, cast as Joan's father, has had an extensive stage career. He has played in stock at Seattle, under Belasco in 'The Girl of the Golden West,' in 'The College Widow,' 'Quincy Adams Sawyer,' etc., and in the early days of pictures was with Biograph, Kalem and other companies.

"Sydney Ainsworth has the role of the theatrical producer. He has appeared with Robert Edeson and others on the speaking stage and with Essanay, Selig and Goldwyn in pictures.

"Albert Roscoe has the role of the 'sin-buster.' He has played in stock in Nashville, with Bertha Kalish, William Faversham, in 'Daddy-Long-Legs' and in repertoire. Others in the cast are Gertrude Astor, Marion Colvin, Joan Standing and Louie Cheung."

Neilan Gives Out Warning

Productions Are Sold on Individual Bases, Exhibitors Are Told

MARSHALL NEILAN last week issued a warning to exhibitors throughout the country and invited their co-operation in connection with the booking of his product for the protection of both parties involved.

In Mr. Neilan's announcement, the producer pointed out that his next four pictures following "Dinty," just completed, will be sold through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit on an individual basis only, each picture being booked on its own merit.

The warning by Mr. Neilan comes as a result of his attention being called to the fact that in various instances, exhibitors have been approached on the sale of his product in series of two or more productions which is strictly against his policies and the fundamental producing plans of his organization.

"I am therefore anxious," said Mr. Neilan, "to once again go on record as being absolutely opposed to blanket bookings on my pictures and to reiterate my policy of refusing to O.K. any contract that calls for more than one picture. For the protection of both the exhibitor and myself I depend upon the exhibitor to co-operate with me in this matter to the extent of advising me of any instance where a salesman attempts to contract for more than one of my pictures at a time."

ITEMS OF THE EXCHANGES AND THEATRES

DETROIT

Minter United Amusements have concluded an arrangement with Walter Niebuhr, president of the American Cinema corporation, whereby the former will distribute all super-specials released by the latter concern. This gives the Minter United organization the largest string of independent productions of any State-rights exchange in the country. Mr. Minter started the exchange with a single product about 18 months ago. He has since annexed the Equity, Pioneer, and American Cinema.

Lou Cohen, one of the owners of the Coliseum, Globe, and other Detroit theatres, was held up and robbed of $400 in cash, a diamond ring, and a diamond stickpin, one night last week just after he had left one of his theatres with the evening's receipts. An automobile containing two armed men drove up beside Mr. Cohen's machine as he was driving, within a mile of city hall.

Columns of space have been devoted to this important change of policy in the daily newspapers here. The Strand has also bought the 32 big Fox productions for the coming season, beginning with "The White Moll," October 29.

Marking an epoch in the history of California exhibitors, Marcus Loew is opening four new straight moving picture houses in this State late this month and next month. The largest is the State in Oakland, which will open September 29, on the site formerly occupied by the McDonough. It has been remodeled to increase the seating capacity to 2,200 and the policy changed to straight motion pictures. The New State in Stockton has been remodeled by Loew, it being formerly the Yosemite, a combination house. The seating capacity is 2,800. "The Great Redeemer" will be the first production at the opening of the New State in Sacramento, September 22. That house was formerly the Strand. It has been remodeled at a cost of $160,000 and is characterized by Mr. Loew's representative as "one of the finest motion picture palaces in the West." The fourth Loew theatre to open next month is the State, newly constructed, in Eureka, with a 1,600 capacity.

Construction has commenced on Loew's Metropolitan, to be a straight motion picture house, with a seating capacity of 3,000. It is located at Taylor and Market streets, San Francisco. It will be a nine-story building, with a covered glass roof garden. Three shifts of workmen laboring eight hours each will complete the Metropolitan as soon as possible.

Loew's other big projected San Francisco picture house, the Union Square, will be completed June 1, 1921. It will seat 3,500 persons.

Griffith's "Way Down East" will open at the Curran, a legitimate, October 3.

Dead Men Tell No Tales

SAN DIEGO

The Bush Theatres is the new name of the Broadway Amusement Company. G. A. Bush is president, K. G. Bush, secretary and treasurer, Erle B. Doherty, auditor and J. Weinberger, general counsel. The concern controls the Superba, the Broadway and the Silver Strand, the last named being located at Coronado, across the bay from San Diego.

Music is being featured at the four largest film houses in San Diego, and the several managers seem to be vieing with one another to see which can offer the finest program. Manager Hicks, of the Cabrillo, is exploiting his new symphony orchestra. J. Wesley Lord is the presiding genius at the Plaza's new Robert Morton organ, the installation of which was recently completed.

At the Superba, Albert Kendall, assistant organist, presides at the Wurlitzer during Paul Maiss' tour of duty at the Broadway. "Scratch My Back" was the picture of the week.

The Chain of Blue, the weekly house organ of the Broadway Amusement Compublication, and its editor, Stuart Taber, pany, has completed its second year of feels that it has fulfilled its mission, that of being a journal dedicated to the lovers of good photoplays. Editor Taber plans to extend the scope of The Chain of Blue during its third year. It is now a 16-page publication. Local business houses evidently appreciate it as an advertising medium.

The Silver Strand theatre in Coronado, one of the houses of the Broadway Amusement Company, is now running on a four-changes-a-week plan. May Yohe, who appeared at several performances each day for a week at the Superba, was held over for a short engagement at the Silver Strand, giving her society monologue, "In Silk Attire." There was special interest in one of the pictures of the tures Roy Stewart, a San Diego boy, current week, "Just a Wife," as it feaand Leatrice Joy, formerly at the Strand theatre here in stock with the Virginia Brissac Players.

The Regent, Rochester; Avon and Colonial, Utica; Palace, Schenectady; Star, Rome; Hi-Art, Lockport, and Temple, Geneva, have also signed similar contracts. Mr. Kahn also reports that Charles Sesonski has booked Metro for first run in Oswego at the new Strand. Ed. K. O'Shea, Metro salesman, is the father of a bouncing baby boy. Here's looking at you, Ed!

In order to get perfect projection in the big Elmwood Music Hall on the occasion of the Shriner motion picture party, Elmer C. Winegar, manager of the Central Park and Regent theatres, who was in charge of the program, had Al Becker install a motor generator set for one night. The result was that the finest pictures ever shown in the big city auditorium were obtained. Mr. Winegar "shot" most of the films shown and the hall was packed to the doors.

Buffalo school teachers were the guests of the Universal Film Company and Manager Howard Smith of the Palace theatre at a private screening of "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals," in the Elmwood theatre, Friday afternoon, Sept. 17. Manager Bruce Fowler of the Elmwood opened his house for the screening because the Palace has daily matinees. The Palace showed the pictures for the entire week of September 19, following a big advance exploitation campaign.

George Hanny of the South Park Amusement Company, operators of the Capitol and Maxine theatres, has just returned from a two weeks tour to New York, Philadelphia, Atlantic City, and other eastern points.

Henry Carr, manager of Shea's vaudeville theatre in Court street, has been appointed treasurer of the General Theatres Corporation, which controls the Allendale, Marlowe, Ellen Terry, Star and Circle theatres. Harry Marsey is president.

Herman Robbins, Fox general sales manager, motored from New York to Buffalo the week of September 13, stopping off in Utica to visit Nate Robbins at the Majestic and in Syracuse to greet Emmett Cornell at the Eckel. In Buffalo, Mr. Robbins visited Harold B. Franklin at Shea's Hippodrome, who has booked all the new William Farnum, Pearl White, Tom Mix productions, the Mutt and Jeff cartoons, the Sunshine comedies and the Fox News. George Cook, former city salesman here, is now covering the Hudson river territory out of the Albany office. H. C. Wallner, formerly with Paramount, is covering the Rochester territory for Fox. Clayton Sheehan, district manager, is in Cleveland this week and will be in Detroit next week.

Charlie Sesonski will open his new 1,300 seat Strand in Oswego early in October. The new house is next to the Pierce theatre and is one of the finest in the State.

Nate Robbins, of the Majestic theatre, Utica, it is reported, has taken over the three Eddie Clapp houses in Amsterdam and will take possession October 1.

M. H. Greenwald, manager of the Buffalo Fox exchange, has been promoted to the management of the Cleveland office, according to an announcement by Clayton Sheehan, district manager. W. D. Shapiro, Cleveland manager, has been called to New York for work at the home office.

A. M. Epstein, of Elmira, has acquired the Bijou theatre in Corning from Sam Clark, and following alterations will open the house with pictures.

C. A. Milligan, who has been running the Broadway theatre in Saratoga Springs, is going to give up the house November 1 and devote all his time to his theatre in Schuylerville, N. Y.

J. E. Kimberly, manager of the Pathe branch, is running a serial contest at his office, in which B. Brady, P. Shaver and H. DeVere are participating. Brady is in the lead. Mr. De Vere is in New York visiting his mother, who is ill.

Jack Kirsch, of Gardiner Films, Inc., has just returned from a trip through the territory with a big bunch of contracts and reports much interest in "Deliverance," the Helen Keller subject.

NEW ORLEANS

New Orleans is the coming "atmosphere" for playwrights, authors and scenario writers, according to Pearl Dole Bell, authoress of several scenarios, several of which have been vehicles for Miss Shirley Mason. Mrs. Bell is in New Orleans seeking "atmosphere" for another work.

James Mulhauser, special representative of Mack Sennett, was in New Orleans last week on his way to Los Angeles. He has been visiting First National Exchanges. While here he was a guest of the Saenger Amusement Company at Elmwood Manor, that organization's summer resort. Henry Ginsberg, sales manager of Educational Films, was a guest at the resort at the same time.

Charles E. Kessinch, of Atlanta, southern district manager of Metro, was in New Orleans recently calling on C. J. Briant, New Orleans Metro exchange manager.

C. W. Greenblatt, Saenger's advertising representative with headquarters in practically every town in which Saenger's have a theatre, has returned from a 2,500-mile auto trip through Colorado, Nebraska, and Wyoming.

INDIANAPOLIS

Indianapolis now has three photoplay theatres charging top prices of twenty-five cents matinee and forty cents evening. They are the Circle, Ohio and Colonial. The Circle has had this schedule for some time, but the Ohio and Colonial only recently advanced prices from fifteen and twenty-five cents. Both of these houses advanced prices to take care of bookings of nothing but the higher priced films. Attendance for the first few weeks under the advanced schedule has entirely justified the increase, managers stated.

A special showing of "Twinkle, Twinkle Little Star," one of the first productions of the Cortland Moving Picture Corporation of Indianapolis, was given Sunday morning at Mister Smith's theatre for educators, child welfare works and newspapermen. The company is specializing in children's pictures.

A clean bill was given the exhibitors of Indianapolis by the Better Business Bureau after an investigation that several houses were planning to raise their admissions during G. A. R. national encampment this week. The Bureau reported that it found that not only was the report absolutely unfounded but that the reputable showmen expressed willingness to cooperate by reporting any of their number they found guilty of the practice. G. F. Olwin, manager of the bureau, praised the attitude of the movie men.

The South Theatre Corporation of South Bend, Indiana, has been incorporated with $50.000 capital, and Vernon C. Hastings, Sam Z. Gilbert and Clifford M. Lontz as directors.

The New Fort Armstrong Theatre at Rock Island, Ill.

A Description of the Accompanying Blue Print Section

THIS fall will witness the opening of the most individual theatre from the standpoint of design in the country. The Fort Armstrong theatre at Rock Island, Illinois, representing an investment of over half a million dollars, is being built and will be operated by Rosenfield-Hopp & Co., of that city. Walter A. Rosenfield, well known in business and public circles in Rock Island, is president of the corporation; Joseph Hopp, recently elected vice-president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and prominent in motion picture circles in Chicago, is vice-president and general manager.

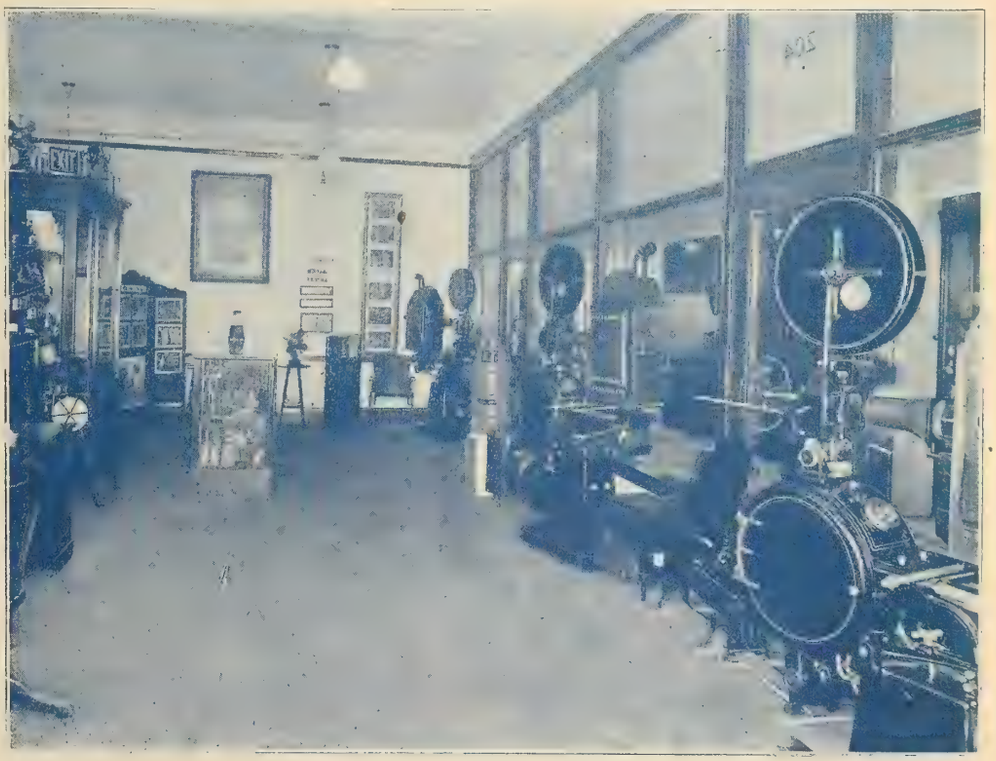
The building was designed by William T. Braun, architect, now of the firm of Braun & Nitsche, architects, of Chicago, with Cervin & Horn, local architects of Rock Island, in charge of erection. The decoration of both the exterior and interior portray the early days of that section of the country when the original Fort Armstrong played such an important part in the defense of the Mississippi valley. As this section of the country is rich in Indian traditions carrying out the design in this spirit will further enhance the popularity of the house and at the same time the design will be more fitting than if executed in some Renaissance or classic period.

The exterior is faced with a new kind of stippled brick Indian red in color and the ornamentation is in polychrome terra cotta. The character of the ornament can be seen from some of the illustrations presented. The iron balconies and marquee over the theatre entrance as well as the arc lamp brackets are designed in this same character.

The lobby is finished with beautiful marble walls of cream color with inlaid mosaic panels. Poster frames are recessed in the walls. The lighting will be brilliant and furnished by specially designed fixtures of copper and parchment carried out in Indian design. The floors of the lobby and foyers and all stairs will be made of art marble. On either side of the foyer will be wide staircases leading up to the mezzanine foyer. A beautiful dance salon where tea dances can be given in connection with the tea room is reached from the mezzanine foyer. These rooms with their wide windows command a fine view of Spencer Square, which is across the street and the Mississippi river. In these rooms recitals, receptions, and other novelties will be given both before and after the performance.

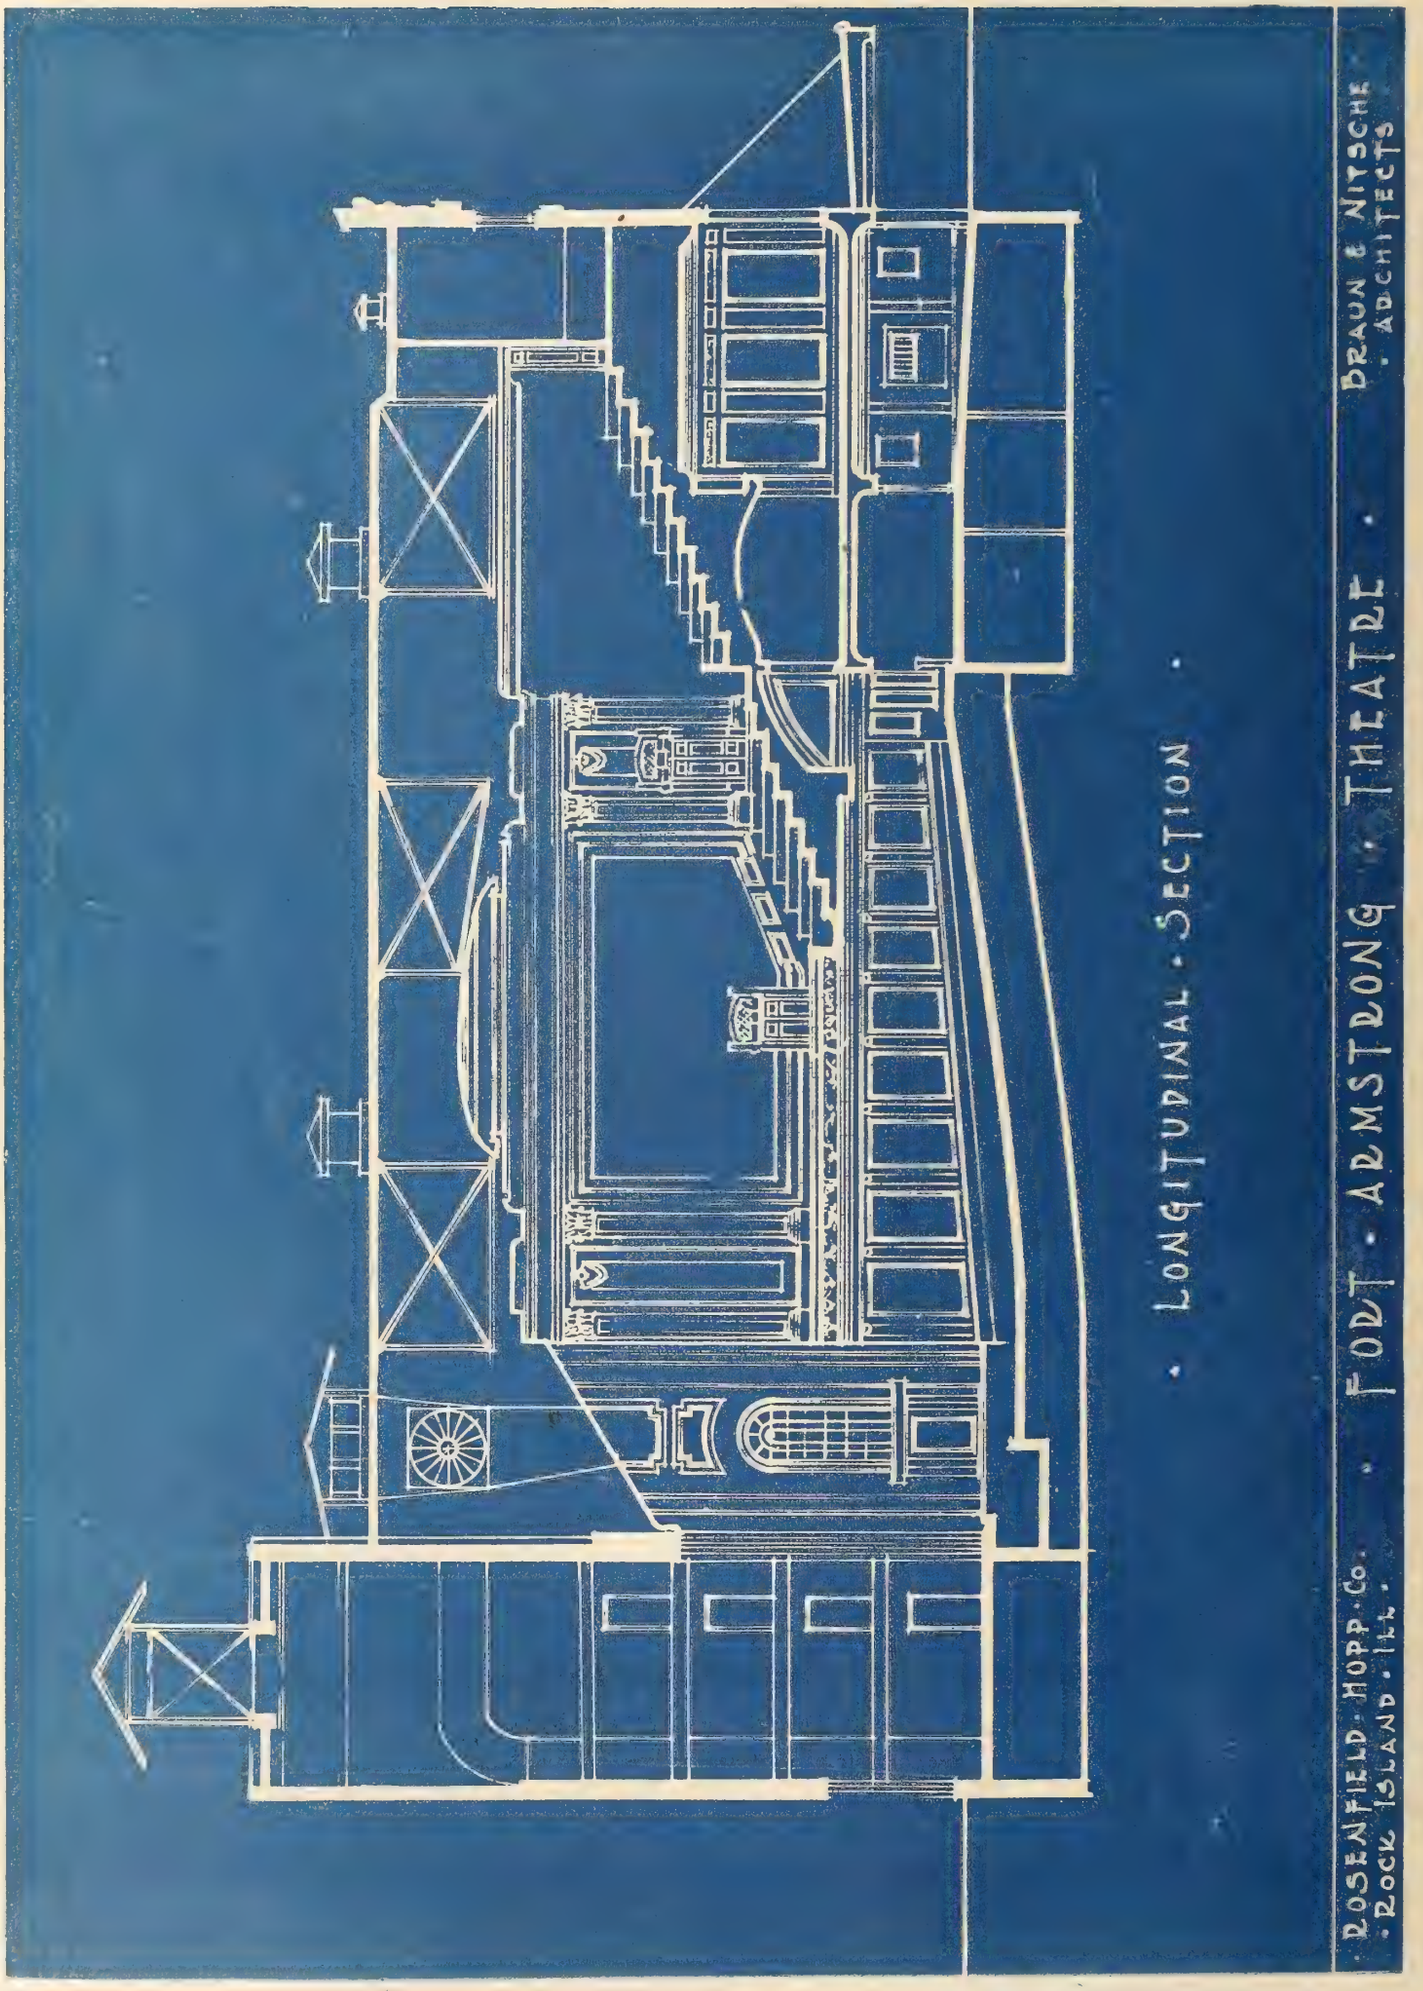
The front section of the basement contains the nursery, which will be in charge of competent attendants; the ladies' rest room and men's smoking room. These rooms are reached by broad staircases from the main floor foyer.

In the auditorium proper the audience will be taken care of in 1,800 roomy seats, 1,100 on the main floor and 700 in the balcony. The interior of the auditorium is shown in the illustration. A specially designed stage setting is provided so that the orchestra may be placed on the stage and at the same time leave room for tableaux and other presentation. A $20,000 pipe organ with all the latest features and stops will augment the orchestra.

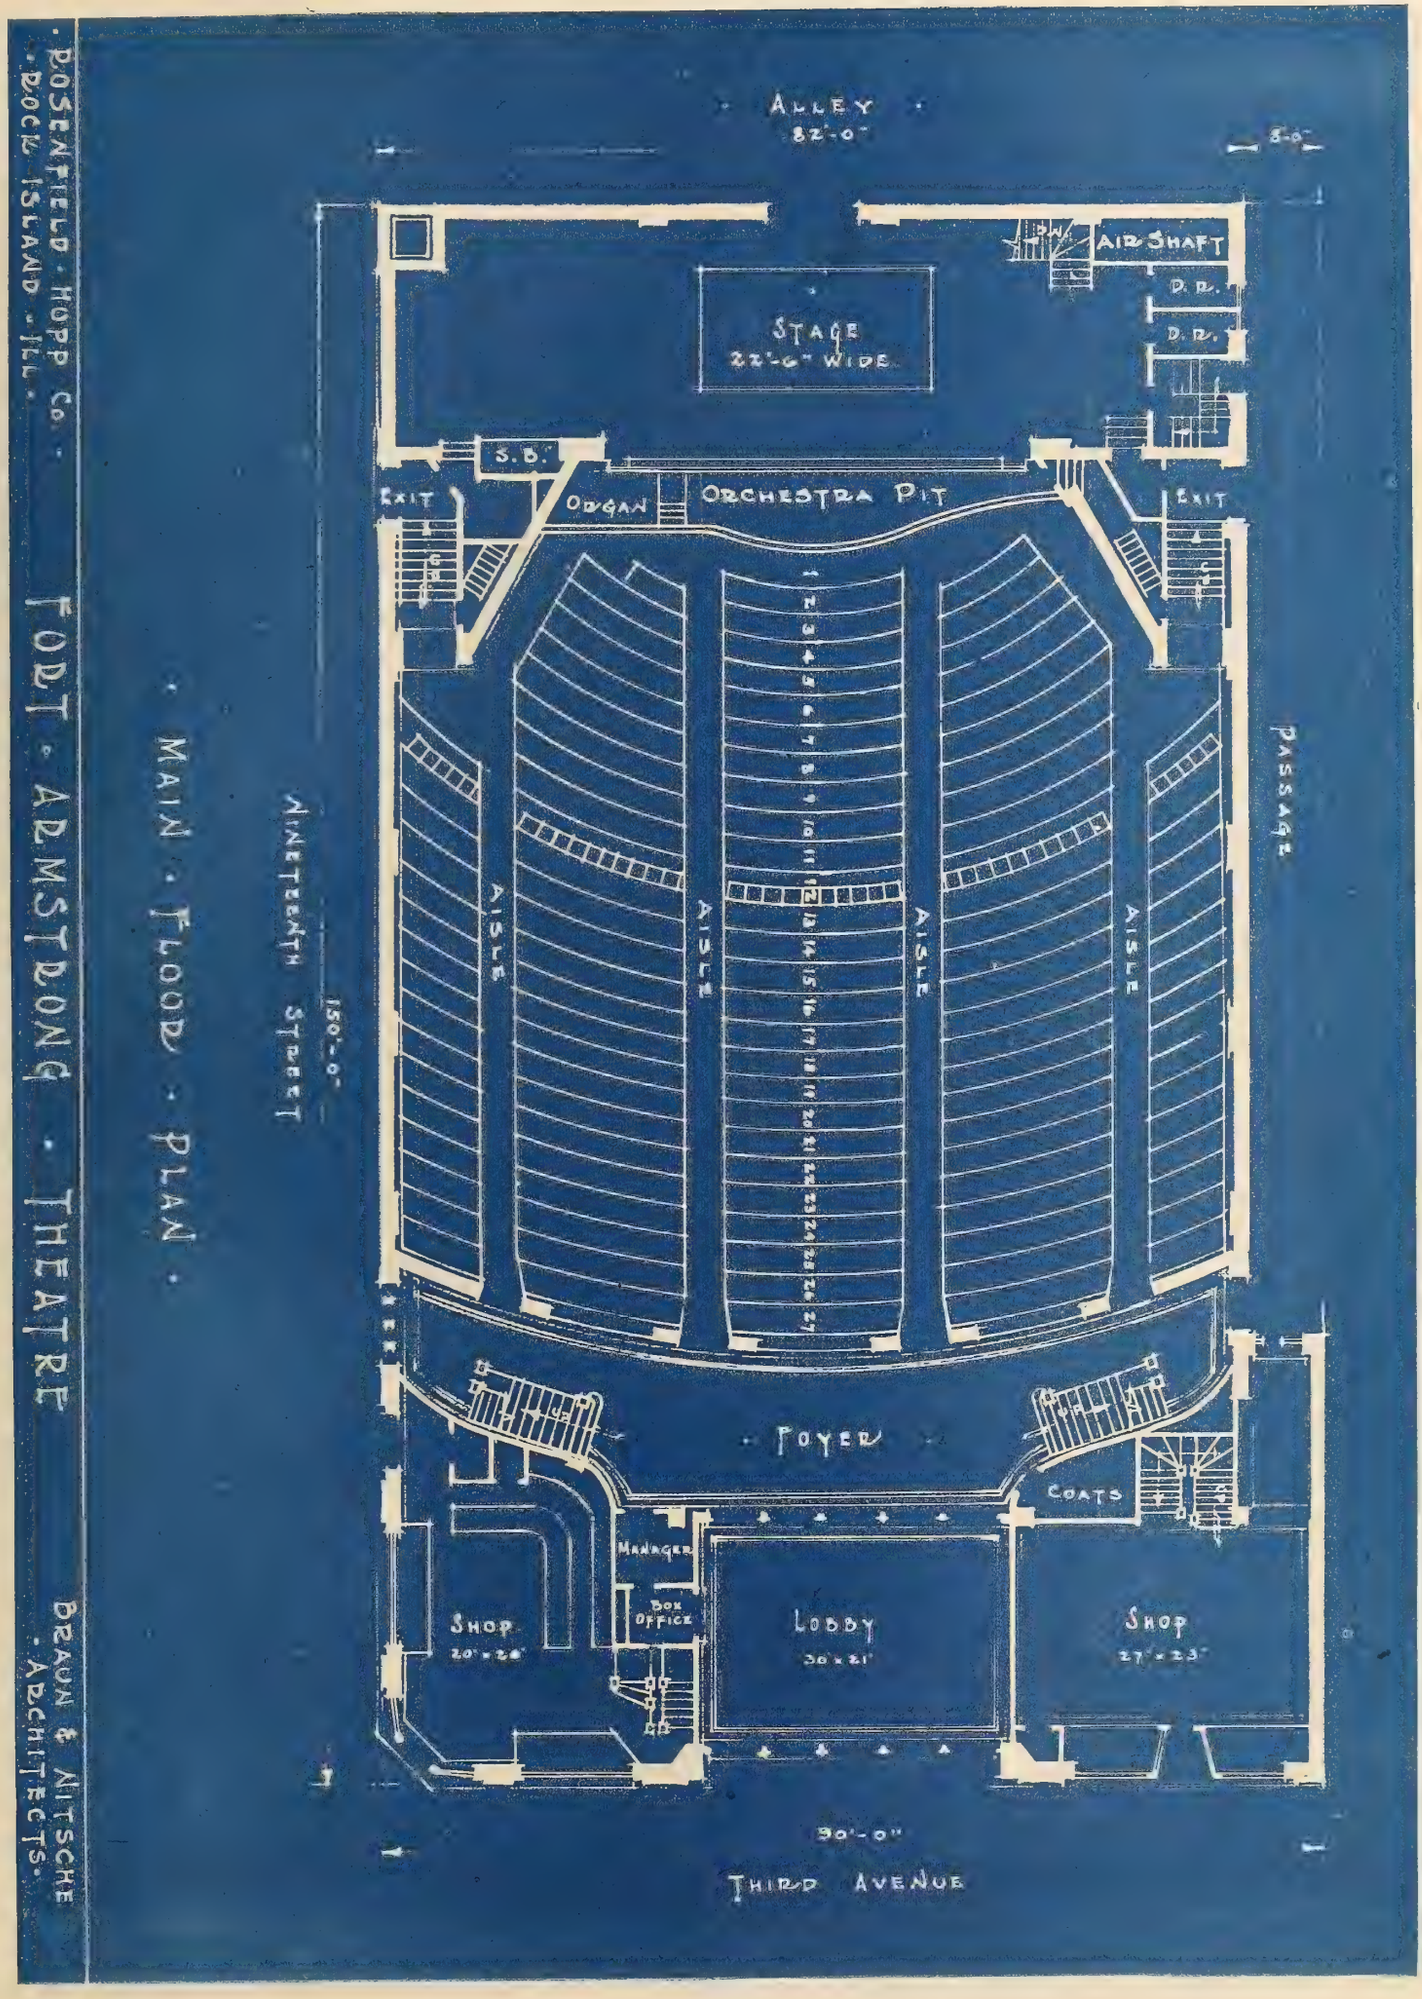


During the overture and at suitable times of the presentation the beauty of the auditorium will be further set off by a clever system of colored lighting controlled by a new type of remote-controlled switchboard and delicately adjusted dimmers. The lights are concealed in the dome on the main ceiling and in reflector boxes under the organ screen on either side of the proscenium arch. The stage will also be equipped with colored light borders, strips, etc., so that various colors may be used as tints on the screen.

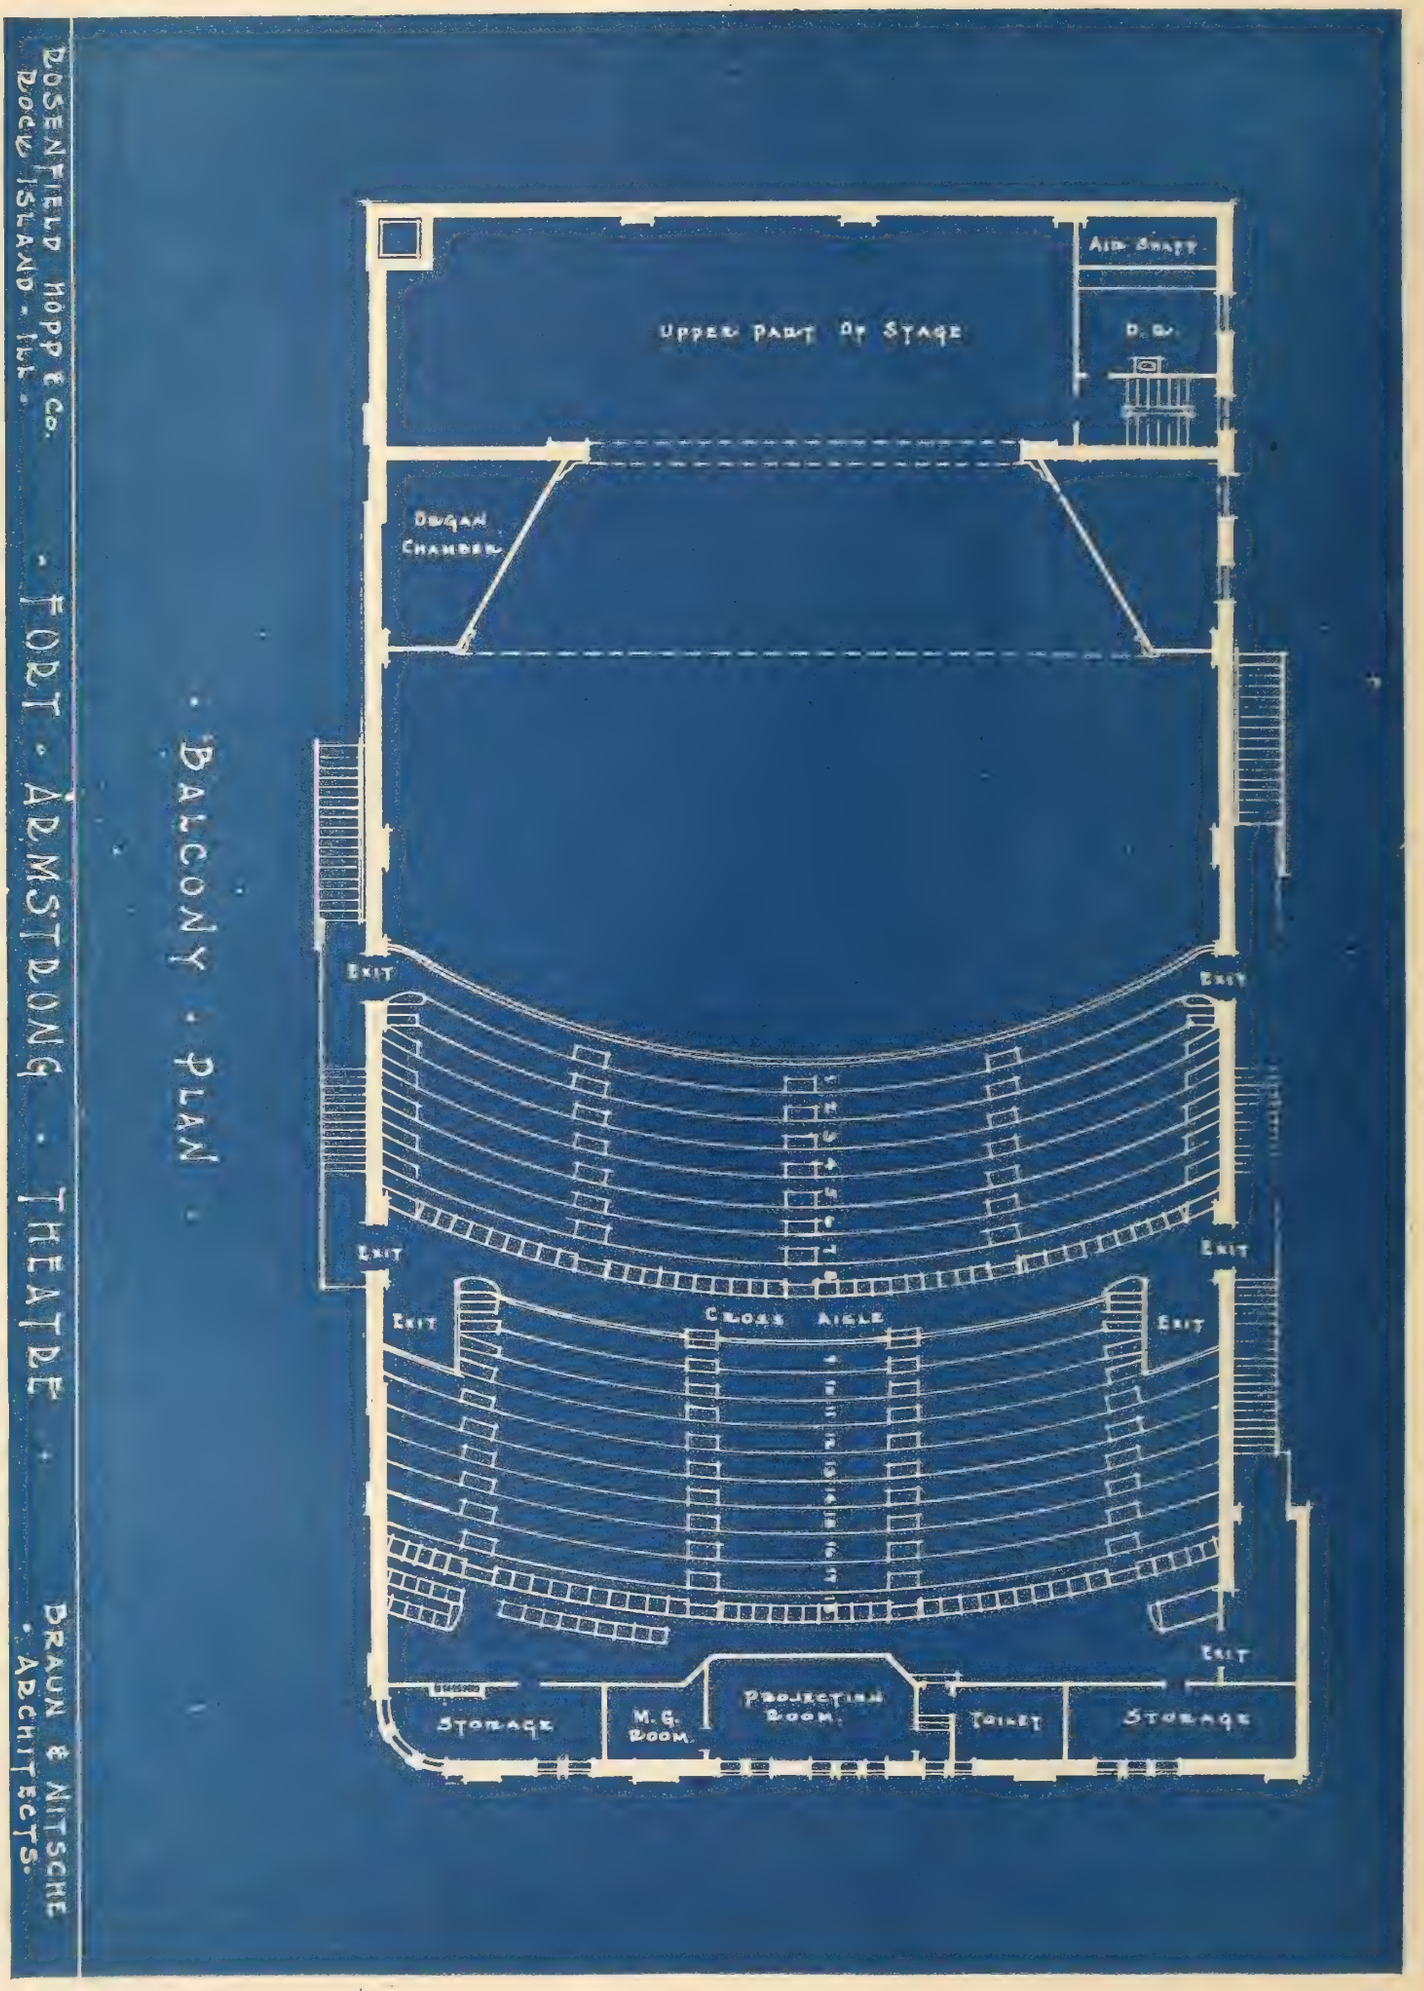
The heating and ventilation has received very careful study. During the winter sufficient fresh air will be pumped into the auditorium through side wall outlets, and in summer to further provide for the comfort of the patrons this system will be greatly augmented by large typhoon fans over the proscenium arch. This will assure the audience of year-round comfort.



The projection room is located at the rear of the balcony, but because of the height of the screen and the distance the distortion is entirely eliminated. The projectionist is given every convenience and the large roomy projection room will have the latest in the way of equipment. A special room is provided for the motor generator set.



Throughout the design the safety of the audience as well as the employees has received the greatest attention. Ample exits open into the court on one side and streets and alley on the other sides. Every level of the balcony has exits to the outside and wide iron stair fire escapes to the ground. An asbestos curtain covers the proscenium opening and a large vent is placed over the stage. All exit doors and other openings are protected with steel and art metal doors.



To the west of the lobby is a photographer's shop with a studio room upstairs, while on the other side a cigar and refreshment store will be operated in connection with the tea room upstairs.

How to Arrange for Perfect Heating and Ventilation

Common Sensed Instructions That Will Save Owners Many Dollars

By Henry D. Nathan

THE proper heating of the modern motion picture theatre is of such vital importance that the proprietor of an existing or contemplated building should give it the consideration which it demands. Let him remember that if his heating system fails it will mean a decided loss of revenue. It may be that on cold days it will not be ample enough to keep the theatre at a comfortable temperature. Such an unfortunate condition, in extreme cases, may make it necessary to close the doors, something which we all hate to do.

Study the Bids

In almost every case a poorly heated theatre is shunned by the public and their admission money goes into a competitor's pocket. By all means see that the heating plant is adequate. Better too large than too small. Do not make the mistake of giving the contract to the firm offering to put it in for the least money, just because they are the lowest bidders. They may be a firm willing to take a chance on a small sized plant, usually being willing to increase the size if compelled to under their guarantee. The only chance they take is that they may be forced (usually after a fight) to install more material. The theatre owner is taking a much bigger risk. By saving a few dollars in the beginning he stands to lose patronage due to a cold theatre. Suppose he does save a hundred or more dollars in the beginning, one cold week will keep away much more than this in admission money. In aggravated cases it may not be possible to worry along until Spring before making the heating contractor fulfill his guarantee. It may be necessary to close the doors for several days while new apparatus is installed. Who is going to pay him the lost revenue for those few days? Further after repairs are completed and the theatre reopened it will be several days before attendance and receipts are up to normal.

Plans and Specifications Essential

Without trying to give the impression that a low bidder is always to be suspected of cutting materials below the safe limit the writer does want to warn against looking too hard at the bid price. This is particularly true when the contractors are bidding without a definite detailed specification to be followed by all. The best and cheapest thing to do in the long run is have some thoroughly competent man, either your architect or an experienced heating engineer, draw up complete and detailed heating plans and specifications. These should show the size and location of radiators, boilers, piping, ventilating apparatus, etc. They should specify exactly the makes of radiators, boilers, valves, pipe and other material, which will be acceptable and not leave any loop holes for the contractor to substitute less or inferior materials.

This is the finest article on the subject of Heating and Ventilation that has appeared in any motion picture trade paper. It was written expressly for the theatre owner and manager. The author is a Heating Engineer.

The selection of the type of system and make of material may be left in the hands of the architect or heating engineer, or the owner may make these selections himself. Often the latter does select the type of system, but usually the selection of the make of materials is left with the architect or engineer—with these two exceptions—the boilers and radiators being of such vital importance the owner usually influences their selection.

A brief description, with the advantage, and disadvantage, of each type of system may be of interest and value, also a few words about choosing the number, type and make of the boilers may be welcome.

Heating by Direct Radiation

There are three general schemes used for heating and ventilating theatres. First and most common with smaller theatres is that in which radiators heat the building and exhaust fans serve to remove the foul air. This is the cheapest system to use and is quite satisfactory. With this system care should be taken that the exhaust fans are big enough to remove at least 15 to 30 cubic feet of air per minute per person. Many city and state laws set the exact amount. This quantity per person usually varies with the seating capacity of the theatre.

Hot Blast Heating

The system used in most large theatres is to draw fresh air in from outdoors, heat it by passing it through Vento heaters and then blow it at low velocities into the auditorium. The temperature and volume of this air is sufficient to counteract the cooling effect of the walls and roof and at the same time provide fresh clean air for the audience. Sometimes the warmed air, before passing into the theatre, is freed of dust by passing it through cloth or charcoal screens. Another method is to force the air through a chamber in which there is an artificial rainstorm. This, not only washes the air of all dust, but raises its humidity, making the air easier to breathe and not making it necessary to heat the theatre to so high a temperature.

The foul air is either drawn out by fans or allowed to escape naturally through ventilators in roof or side walls.

When ventilation is not required, as before and between shows, and it is only necessary to heat the building, considerable fuel may be saved in the following manner. Provide dampers and by-passes in the air ducts, etc., so that instead of drawing cold air from outdoors through the Vento heaters, the warmer air inside the theatre can be reheated. This is known as recirculation and if installed and used will very materially reduce your coal bill. With such a system radiators are usually installed in ticket offices, lobby and other parts of the building outside of the auditorium proper. However, in any case, a couple of large radiators near the entrance doors is always a good thing.

Combination System

In many cases a combination of the two systems just described is used. Enough radiating surface is installed to heat the theatre to 50 or 60 degrees when the ventilating system is shut down and the vent registers closed. The air needed for ventilation is then only heated to slightly above the desired theatre temperature or just enough to make up for the additional needed above that provided by the direct radiation. This is a very economical-to-run system and is in great favor with many heating engineers. It offers many advantages, one of the most important, besides fuel economy, is the fact that if anything happens to the electric fans or ventilating system the direct radiators will heat the building sufficiently, except in the very coldest weather, to allow the theatre to keep its doors open. Of course, ventilation will be lacking, but by means of a notice shown on the screen the audience can be told of the trouble and asked to excuse the lack of ventilation for a short time. This will usually satisfy them and make it unnecessary to close down completely as in the case where the hot blast system alone is used. Of course with the latter system, duplicate motors and fans will prevent this condition but the initial cost is considerably increased.

Steam Heat

The selection of the type of heating and ventilation having been made it then becomes necessary to decide upon either steam, vapor, vacuum or water as the heating medium. Any one of these may be used to advantage, but hot water is little used for theatre heating, even though it is very popular for houses.

The cheapest and most widely used of all methods is low pressure steam. In such a system there is little to get out of order, it is simple to care for, a quick

Heat and Fresh Air

With the coming of winter comes the big problem of correct and adequate heating for the theatre. Whereas, three months ago the exhibitor in the northern half of the country was putting forth his every effort in an attempt to "make his theatre the coolest spot in town," it will soon be time for him to arrange for artificial heat. Nothing could be more appropriate therefore than the article in this issue on "Heating and Ventilation," written especially for the News by a heating engineer.

If you have had trouble with your heating system in seasons past read this article. It is very possible that you will find the fault in your system, and be able to remedy it before the first snowfall.

Although many managers do not so regard it, nevertheless it is a fact that ventilation in winter is as important as in summer and often more so. In summer the wall fans now found in practically every theatre of any size succeed in ventilating at the same time they seem to cool. But in the months of December, January and February when the temperature is apt to drop toward the zero mark the theatre patrons come swaddled in their heaviest clothes and wraps. Very often they arrive in the midst of a snow storm. As they watch the performance the moisture they bring in is taken up by the dry air of the heating system. This raises the humidity of the air and soon the auditorium is stuffy and malodorous.

It is as important to get the warm air out of your theatre after it has served its purpose as it is to thrust it in. Nothing tends more to give a theatre a good name as a high class amusement place than a fresh, clean atmosphere present at all times.

The Blue-Print Sections

In this issue will be found the second of the series of theatre blue-prints reproduced directly from architects drawings. The Equipment Section of the News does not publish these plans to attract attention. They are inserted with the sole idea of being of help to the industry. At a period in its life when more theatres are being erected than ever before, the motion picture industry needs constructive suggestions that will make the future theatre a better institution. And although it will be impossible for any prospective builder to use the exact plans shown in these blue-prints, a study of them will suggest many excellent points which may easily be adapted to his own structure.

If this particular set of plans served no other purpose than to illustrate how local color may be made an inherent part of a theatre's design it would be worth while publishing them. The location of the Fort Armstrong theatre is in a district made famous by Indian tribes. Through a careful and exhaustive study of the habits and customs of these aborigines the architects formulated a scheme of design and decoration that is harmonious throughout. In this respect the Fort Armstrong theatre stands out as one of the finest examples of theatre construction in the year of 1920.

THE original dates set for the Fall meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at Dayton, Ohio, have been found to be in conflict with the convention dates of the Illuminating Engineering Society and as a result the M. P. Engineers will meet in the City of Cash Registers on October 11, 12, 13 and 14. An unusual program is being collected by L. C. Porter, chairman of the Papers Committee. This will be augmented by special features secured by the Committee on Arrangements headed by R. L. Lee as Chairman.

heater, the radiators are comparatively small and the piping reduced to a minimum.

Among its objections are that it is not the most economical to run and the fact that in the past, poor air valves on the radiators have annoyed by leaking, hissing and spitting water on the wall and in certain cases where the radiators hang on the side walls, spraying the audience below with a fine shower of rusty water. However, there are now several air valves obtainable that cannot leak, hiss or spit and so this fault is of the past and no longer necessary. Of course these valves can be put on radiators now in place, so if any reader is troubled this way he has only to get them and his troubles are over.

Vapor and Vacuum Systems

There are numerous patented systems on the market known variously as vapor, vacuum or vapor-vacuum systems. These are all a development of steam heat and have some advantages over the old. Undoubtedly they are more economical than steam as it is usually installed. They allow of better temperature regulation than steam and are thus very satisfactory in mild winter weather. They all cost considerably more to install, perhaps even one-third more, and in some cases they require larger radiators, although the same size boiler. These systems have more piping and more parts to get out of order. This is somewhat of an objection in a theatre because the heating plant must always be on the job every minute of the time.

Hot Water

One of the most economical to run heating systems is that using hot water but its use in theatres is not very extensive. In the usual small theatre where radiators only are used for heating, a hot water system will increase the size or number of them 60 per cent. Needless to say this is objectionable for appearances sake.

Where the ventilating air has to be heated it is not considered good practice, by many, to use hot water because of danger of freezeups from the cold zero air.

Choosing the Boiler

When choosing the type and make of boiler there are many points which must be borne in mind. First and most important, choose a make of boiler whose manufacturer is well equipped to furnish repair parts from conveniently located warehouses. There is nothing more exasperating than a closed house while waiting for repair parts.

In a theatre where there is only a small cellar and where the floor is sloped it will be well to secure a boiler with a very low "water line." It will simplify the heating problem and save extra costs of excavation.

Choose a boiler that has few parts and is easy to care for. Remember you can't afford to have breakdowns.

Two or More Boilers Advisable

It will be the best of economy and wisdom to install two or more boilers in place of one. Each boiler need not be as large as if one only were used, but of such size that if one boiler is out of service for any reason the other can be forced enough to give ample heat for the time being.

Don't fail to have the boiler and cellar pipes properly covered with some heat insulating material. For the boiler, if asbestos is used, not less than one and one-half-inch thick is best. It is possible to buy a boiler that comes covered with an everlasting insulator but usually they come bare iron and need to be covered on the job.

In closing the writer again wants to repeat what he has tried to bring out all through this article. Study your heating problem, study the bids, choose the best, not the cheapest, and you will never cause for regret.

Paper on History of Industry

An interesting paper on the above subject is to be delivered by C. F. Jenkins at the Dayton Convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

This paper traces the development of the motion picture from the earliest record found in the writings of Lucretus, one hundred years before the Christian era.

This development is divided into six historical periods, as follows:

(1) A series of related picture elements; (2) The adoption of photography to secure them; (3) The use of a single camera; (4) The use of a perforated film; (5) The use of the intermittent movement; (6) The use of a longer period of picture exposure than of change from one picture to the next.

The paper is well illustrated with cuts taken from the records of the Patent Department at Washington, and explained in a manner made possible by the author's long experience and thorough knowledge of the motion picture art.

The article is concluded by references to the latest developments of color and stereoscopic effects.

VOLUME No. Ten of the Transactions of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers has recently been issued. It is larger than usual, containing 120 pages of invaluable information in the form of papers and reports delivered at the Montreal meeting last May. Some of the papers in this number are Remote Control Switchboards for Studios, by H. C. McNary; Isolated Lighting Plants, by R. E. Lee; Educational Possibilities of the Movies, by B. E. Copies of the Transactions may be secured from A. F. Victor, 710 First National Bank Bldg., Chicago.

Fifth Avenue Theatre Abandoned

Because of objections on the part of the Building Department of the City of New York to the proposed de luxe theatre in the twenty-story office building to be erected on Fifth avenue at Fifty-seventh street, the plans have been changed and the theatre eliminated. This theatre, a description of which was carried in the Motion Picture News, was to have been unusual in type to conform to the community in which it would have been located. Its seating capacity was to have been but a few hundred.

Orpheum Has 14th Anniversary

CHICAGO'S oldest loop picture house, the Orpheum theatre, operated by Jones, Linick & Schaefer, located on State at Monroe street, is celebrating its fourteenth anniversary. Just fourteen years ago September twentieth this theatre opened its doors with a new-fangled entertainment called "movies." The year previous Jones, Linick & Schaefer had opened the very first picture house in the state of Illinois, on State Street, across from the Orpheum location and where Browning King now sells clothing. This picture house was the beginning of motion picture exhibition in the city of Chicago, and its manager was Norman E. Field.

The single motion picture machine was operated in relays by George K. Spoor, afterward president of the Essanay Film Company, and Horace B. Wild, who has since become noted as an aviator and as a captain in the United States Aerial Service. In front of the theatre stood a "spieler" calling the public's attention to the marvelous entertainment on the inside. This was Dan Mulvey, now a millionaire real estate operator on the South Shore subdivision.

This theatre was so successful that it prompted Jones, Linick & Schaefer to gather together what shekels they had and borrow from all their friends enough money to erect across the street the Orpheum theatre. From the very beginning this theatre was a big winner and proved the nucleus for the vast chain of Jones, Linick & Schaefer enterprises. It is interesting to know that the manager of their first picture house, Norman E. Field, is now general manager for all their interests.

Its present manager, George H. Moore, who has directed the destinies of this theatre for the past ten years, began his service at the Orpheum as house officer with brass buttons and a blue uniform standing at the ticket wicket. The earnings of the Orpheum theatre average upward of $150,000.

Auditorium and balcony floors of new Capitol, Redondo, Cal.

1500 Lamps in Redondo Capitol

THE new Capitol is the largest theatre in Redondo, seating 750 persons. It was built by D. D. Smith, the architect, while the stage furnishings and decorations were by the Edwin H. Flagg Scenic Company of Los Angeles. The color scheme is a daring yet restful combination of orange, black and blue, with orange predominating. It is unusually attractive and at the same time startles the attention.

The lighting system is unusually elaborate, there being more than 1500 electric lamps in the building. Those in the auditorium are so shaded that they can be kept on during the showing of a photoplay without detracting from the sharpness of the picture.

A distinctive feature of the Capitol theatre is the ladies' rest room, situated at the left of the foyer. It is commodious in dimensions and designed to offer comfort, as well as convenience to women patrons of the theatre. The walls are decorated with artistic paintings. The ceiling is done in gold, with lights so handled as to throw a soft glow on the gold. A huge fireplace occupies one entire side of the room. The theatre is distinctly a credit to Redondo.

The regular opening of the new theatre took place on Friday, July 31, when the Goldwyn-Rex Beach production of the latter's speed comedy, "Going Some," was the featured attraction. Harry Wolf, brother of Maurice Wolf, resident manager of Goldwyn's Los Angeles exchange, is the manager of the Capitol.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Many Improvements to Be Incorporated in Power's Machines

Complete Description of New Features of Interest to Machine Users

ALTHOUGH rumors have been rampant for many months of new and wonderful improvements to be made on the line of Powers machines, the sales force and technical divisions of that firm have been extremely reticent and nothing in the way of direct information has leaked out up to the last week. At that time the Technical Editor of the NEWS was invited to the exhibition room of the Nicholas Power Company and shown in detail the numerous innovations and improved devices that will, after the 15th of September, become a part of all machines turned out from 90 Gold Street. Without exception these attachments, mechanisms and additions are of so great interest to the projection world that each will be discussed in turn and, where possible, illustrated to make their meaning and use more easily understandable.

The device first in importance, it seems to us, is the Roller Pin Movement. This is different from the standard Powers cam-and-pin movement in that the pin bearings rotate upon the pins. That is, sleeves of highly polished steel are slipped over the pins of the pin-cross—the latter having been made smaller in diameter than those now used—and held in place by a disc of steel on the cam. The oil reaching under these rotatable sleeves forms a cushion, and in so doing reduces much of the noise and wear that might otherwise be caused by the impact of the cam on the pine. Naturally in a movement of this kind, where much depends on the film of oil between the bearing surfaces, it is highly important that the projectionist keep the mechanism well oiled at all times.

Magnified views of the roller pin with and without roller bearings in place

It should not be understood from the above that the outside diameter of the pins in the new movement are larger than those in the movements now in actual use. As mentioned in the preceding paragraph, the solid portion of the pin-cross over which the sleeve slips is enough smaller so that the outside diameter of the sleeve is identical with the similar dimension of the old-style mechanism.

The second attachment is a device to allow adjustment of the front shutter while the machine is in operation. While the framing device now in use on this line of machines has never been the cause of throwing the shutter and movement out of synchronism, it is felt that the addition of this new Shutter Adjustment will enable the projectionist to make closer regulation of his shutter blade, which in itself means higher optical efficiency.

A distinct improvement in the motor drive of the Powers 6B has been effected by the substitution of a spring coupling in place of the present universal joint. This spring, which is made of treated steel, transmits power just as the Universal joint did, but it has the advantage that it functions perfectly when the alignment of shafts is not perfect. Tests have shown that a difference of alignment of as much as 1-16 inch will not effect its operation.

Still another radical departure from past usage is evidenced by the substitution of a tension shoe for the usual intermittent roller bearing. Whereas the roller bearing bore but little on the film as it passed by the intermittent, the tension shoe, by reason of its segmental

POWER'S BETTER THAN EVER

Power's Intermittent Movement set a pace in projector construction that has never been equalled. We now surpass this achievement by constructing a ROLLER PIN INTERMITTENT—the first practical movement on any projector which takes up by roller contact the impact between the driving and driven elements.

We also announce a number of other important improvements, as follows:

ARC REFLECTOR

SHUTTER ADJUSTER

FRAMING LAMP IN MECHANISM

FLAT MOTOR DRIVE BELT

AUTOMATIC SPRING BELT TENSION

INTERMITTENT SHOE TO REPLACE IDLER ROLLER

DOUBLE EYE SHIELD ON GATE

FLEXIBLE SPRING COUPLING (MOTOR DRIVE SHAFT)

DOUBLE MOTOR CONTROL SWITCH

DOUBLE MECHANICAL SPEED CONTROL LEVER

SINGLE ARC SWITCH FOR LAMP

} These operating attachments are provided to permit the projectionist to operate the machine from either side.

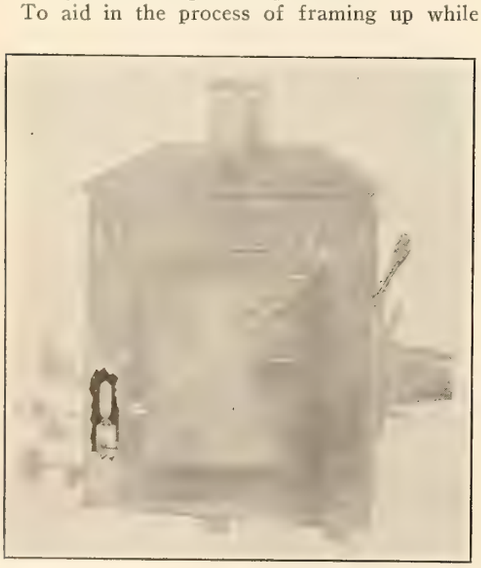
shape, forms a substantial lengthy bearing at this point. The shoe itself is held in normal position by a set of springs behind it aided by a slot which allows a perceptible movement of the shoe in any direction. Its design is such that the shoe itself may be instantly removed for cleaning and inspection.

One advantage which is claimed for this tension shoe is that its use will allow the employment of less tension at the gate, thus lessening the film stresses at that point during certain portions of the cycle of operation.



Not content with the improvement of the driving mechanism by the replacing of the universal joint with the coiled spring, the technical experts of the Powers Company have decided that a 5-8 inch flat belt drive from the speed control to idler pulley will be more readily applicable to all projection room conditions. Furthermore, the idler pulley is to be placed on a spring arm in order to give it a greater range of adjustment. This spring arm will automatically take up any slack in the drive belt and keep it taut at all times.

Mechanism cut away to show Pilot Lamp used in framing up

There is no getting around the fact that men in charge of 6B projectors have felt the urgent need of eye protection from the open spot. This has now been corrected, and in the future projectionists need have no trouble from this source. A Double Eye Shield in the form of a glass box has been provided. A mechanical cam arrangement lifts the eye shield out of the way when the gate is opened.

To aid in the process of framing up while the machine is stationary a small 6-volt battery lamp has been installed directly inside the mechanism. By means of a pull chain and a lever, this lamp may be lighted at the will of the projectionist. Its size is small enough to come well within the fire regulations governing such devices.

Lamp house cut away to show position of small pilot lamp

Another attachment that will be received with open arms by the projectionist now in charge of Powers machines is an Arc Periscope, which can be attached in an instant to any machine without additional fittings. The Periscope is a small compact shadow box with a pin-hole opening toward the arc and a ground glass on the side of the worker. A perfect image of the arc is thrown on this glass.

All that is necessary to attach the Periscope to existing machines is to remove the red glass from the sight hole in the side of the lamp house and slip the shadow box over the opening. It is nicely finished and adds rather than detracts from the appearance of the lamp house.

For the last improvement to be mentioned there has been saved what will be hailed by a host of projectionists as the one in which they are most interested. This improvement might be termed "Duplex Control" for want of a better general term for it. In other words, the design of the 6B machines will be henceforth changed to make it possible for each machine to be operated from either the left or the right hand side. This applies to the speed control levers, the motor and arc control switches and lamp house doors. For one-man installations where the proper position for the projectionist is between the machines at periods of change-over, this innovation will most certainly be welcomed. Both machines will then be under direct control without the necessity of trotting around from one machine to another. This "Duplex Control" will work for better projection.

The foregoing notes cover most of the newly developed improvements and changes in the machines, although, as we understand it, there are others on the way which will be announced as each is perfected and given a thorough tryout. The dozen or more mentioned in this description will prove to be of unusual interest to the thousands of Powers users throughout the country, and in themselves form an epoch in the life history of this machine.

Can You Answer Them?

8. Give the meaning of a cycle. What different cycles of current are found? Which is most commonly used and why?

A cycle is a complete set of positive and negative values of an alternating current.

The cycles in use to-day are 25, 40, and 60 per second.

The cycle used most commonly is 60 per second, since a circuit of less cycle changes when used on lighting circuits is perceptible to the eye in that it causes flickering of the lights.

9. What wire systems are never used in connection with projection apparatus?

High voltage systems are not used in projection because of dangers in insulation.

10. What is the highest voltage safe and practical to run in a booth?

220 volts.

11. What is the smallest wire that can be used safely on any projection circuit?

No. 6 B & S. gage wire is the smallest that should be used on a projection circuit; however, it is best to use No. 4, because of oxidation at intense heat.

12. What is a rheostat, and where should it be located for fire protection?

A rheostat is a piece of apparatus introduced in the circuit to offer resistance and steady the flow of current at the arc. They should be located preferably outside the projection room, or if this is not possible on the wall or ceiling out of reach.

13. What different methods are used in connecting rheostats in projection circuits.

Rheostats are connected in series to obtain voltage drop, or in parallel to obtain current carrying capacity. If it is desired to obtain a voltage drop and current carrying capacity the rheostats should be connected in series parallel.

14. Give theory of transformers and a.c. compensarcs. (a) How can a.c. compensarcs be stepped down? (b) How can a.c. compensarcs be stepped up.

An a.c. compensarc is nothing more than a transformer designed for a special purpose. The compensarc is used in motion picture projection. It incorporates a reactance coil for the purpose of keeping the current steady.

The theory of the transformer is a too exhaustive subject to be gone into in this space but it can be found in any treatise on electricity. It has to do with the effect of an electric current passing in a conductor which has been wound on an iron core. The passage of current creates a magnetic field and as a consequence lines of force radiating from the iron core link up with the conductors of the secondary winding. The increasing and decreasing of the lines of magnetic force due to the alternations of the primary current creates a secondary current, the value of which depends on the relative number of primary and secondary turns.

(a) Compensarcs may be stepped down by connecting the line voltage to the primary side or the winding having the greater number of turns.

(b) Compensarcs may be stepped up by connecting the line voltage to the secondary or the side having the lesser number of turns.

15. Give full explanation of mercury arc rectifier. Why it works as it does. (a) What is its efficiency and why? (b) How many different connections can be made to get different amperage on a rectifier?

The mercury arc rectifier which is a piece of apparatus for changing alternating current to a pulsating direct current, works on the principle that a tube containing low pressure with one electrode of mercury and the other of some material such as iron or carbon will offer a high resistance to a current flowing from the mercury to the other electrode, but has a relatively low resistance to a current flowing in the opposite direction.

The mercury arc rectifier acts as an electric valve and allows that part of the current which tends to pass the anode to the mercury cathode to pass, but exerts a high resistance to currents passing in the other direction.

When the mercury in the bottom of the tube is ionized by means of the starting arc, caused by tilting the tube, then the vapor conducts the current from whichever of the two anodes is positive to the mercury cathode and thence to the load circuit. In order that the flow of current may not cease and the vapor become ionized, it is necessary that a reactance be placed in the line in order to cause the current to lag behind the e.m.f.

The efficiency of this apparatus is about 80% since only a part of the alternating current wave is available for active use.

Different values of current may be obtained depending on the amount of reactance which is cut into the circuit. The number of different values of amperage that can be obtained depend on the number of leads taken out from the reactance coil.

More About "That Misty Screen"

In last week's issue, on page 2298, there appeared a request from Carl Wright of Sac City, Iowa, for assistance in getting away from his screen troubles. Due to an error the larger portion of our reply to him was omitted and we hasten to supply it in this issue. The entire reply is given in order to make the matter clear.

Reply:

We do not believe from what you have said that the trouble can be in your generating set. If anything, the light from the motor driven set should be more steady than from your gas engine driven set as the driving torque of the former is much more uniform.

Your optical system seems to be O.K. Your condensers are the right sizes. The trouble must lie in your objective lenses. If the misty appearance was found in only one machine we would judge that someone had experimented with the objectives and in reassembling it had placed the elements in the wrong positions. There seems to be something mysterious about objective lenses that make many beginners at the game want to take them apart to see what makes them go. And in replacing the several elements it takes but one mistake to seriously affect the screen results.

But in your case where both machines are the same it would seem doubtful if this could be the cause although it would be well for you to look into the matter.

The best way to find out the correct distances from aperture plate is to set your lamp so that it is burning perfectly and then draw back the lamp house until the screen is evenly lighted. Of course attention should be paid to the size and location of the spot on the aperture plate and naturally no film should be threaded in the machine while the adjustment is being carried out. When the point of correct location has been found it will measure somewhere between 17 and 19 inches.

As for the position of the shutter, this is another matter best arrived at through experiment. After making the adjustment explained in the preceding paragraph allow the arc to continue burning. Take a card of any size and pass it slowly down through the light beam a few inches in front of the objective. If the shadow on the screen moves from the bottom up, try the experiment again a few inches further out toward the screen. By repeating this several times you will—or should—find a place where the shadow on the screen moves from the top downward. Then test further between the first position and the last until a place is found where the screen is darkened all over simultaneously. That will be the correct location for the shutter.

Since the drive wheel makes one revolution for each frame shown per second it would make 16 revolutions per second or 960 per minute.

Getting back to the subject of the misty picture—after looking over the objective lenses to be sure that no one has tinkered with them without your knowledge, and if the trouble still persists get hold of another objective and try it out in one of the machines. If this clears up the fuzziness then the trouble lies in your objective.

Let us hear from you again after trying out these suggestions .

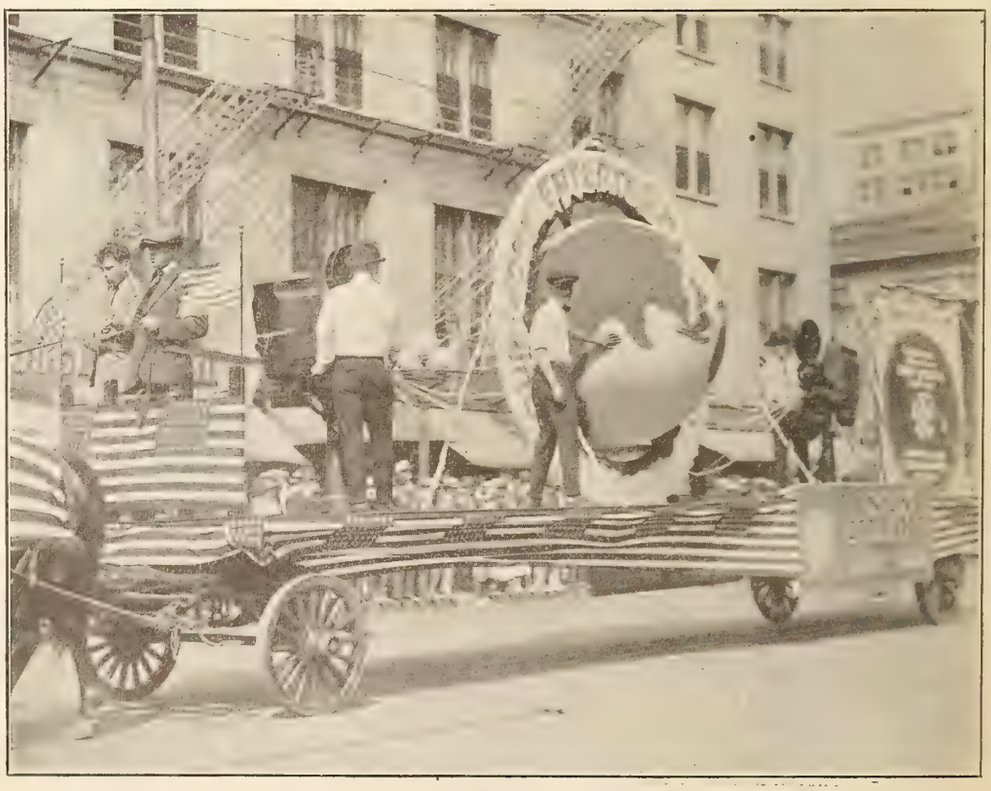
Inter-Ocean Acquires Foreign Distribution of Westinghouse Lamps in Many Countries

Will Also Handle Other Products of Same Firm Including Motor Generator Sets

Further expansion of the activities of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation in foreign fields is brought to light this week in a statement issued by Eugene H. Kaufmann, manager of the Accessory Department of the company. Announcement is made in this statement that the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation has acquired the right to distribute in foreign territories the justly - famed Westinghouse Incandescent lamps from the Westinghouse Electric International Company of America.

The latest acquisition to the large number of accessory products controlled by Inter-Ocean's Accessory Department for foreign distribution is in line with the company's recently announced policy of obtaining every possible accessory allied with the motion picture theatre, both here and in foreign countries. With a varied assortment of accessory products, including such articles as motion picture machines, studio equipment, carbons, motor generators, carbon adapters, rewinds, film cabinets, stripping flanges, film reels, fireproof film boxes, copper terminals, metal film carrying cases, condensers, lenses, spotlights, screens and a score of additional products, the Westinghouse incandescent lamp is a fitting addition to Inter-Ocean's rapidly extending interests.



According to Mr. Kaufmann's statement, the contract signed conveys to the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation the foreign distributing rights to all makes and styles of Westinghouse incandescent lamps in the following foreign territories: South America, Asia, Africa and Australia. Because of the fact that in Continental Europe and in the majority of American possessions concessions have been granted for Westinghouse incandescent lamps, the contract stipulates that Inter-Ocean Film Corporation is to have the right to dispose of the lamps in addition to the continents named, in Central America, Mexico, Canary Islands, West Indies, China, Japan, New Zealand, Turkey, Spain, Greece, Egypt and India.

"The success which has attended the sale and distribution of the Westinghouse incandescent in America," says Mr. Kaufmann's statement, "is excellent testimony to the quality of these lamps. The luminous bulb of peculiar opalescence, which furnishes the wonderful light-giving power to these lamps almost took America by storm when they were introduced in this country; and we have every reason to believe that they will duplicate their success in foreign countries.

"Recent inventions perfected by the experimental and research department of the Westinghouse Company have produced new types of lamps which are said to be the most ingenious ever devised. The light of these lamps, though extremely bright, is said to be so ideally diffused that it becomes glareless to the human eye. These lamps are among the many new types of incandescents which have been obtained for foreign distribution under our contract with the Westinghouse people.

"In this connection we wish to emphatically announce that we will deal with business men engaged in other pursuits, as well as with motion picture men. This is not a deviation from our policy, but is a desire to associate the motion picture industry with other well-known branches of commercial endeavor.

"We have decided to inaugurate a sales campaign in behalf of our new product, which will be intensive and far-reaching in scope. We will supplement this sales campaign with a vast advertising and publicity tie-up in foreign countries and in the various foreign trade mediums. Thus we hope to establish the Westinghouse incandescent lamp permanently"

Amusement Supply Co. Has Rapid Growth

The Amusement Supply Company, one of the pioneers in the moving picture industry, which was incorporated in May, 1906, and now is located at 220 S. State Street, Chicago, is making rapid strides under its new management. It is claimed to be the oldest concern now in the exclusive business of furnishing supplies direct to the moving picture exhibitor.

The general management of the company recently was taken over by Burr A. Benson, a successful Chicago business man, who has purchased a large interest in the company. P. W. Plummer, for many years manager of the Amusement Supply Company, remains with the company as assistant general manager.

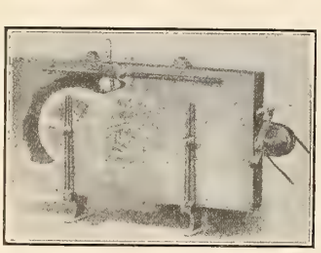
This business of this company grew rapidly from the beginning, and it was soon one of the most prominent engaged in this line.

It was soon found that the demand for Projecting Machines and other supplies on the Pacific Coast was such that branches were opened in San Francisco, under the names "Western Amusement Supply Company" and "Western Theatre Film Service Company."

Some years ago the Amusement Supply Company purchased the business known as the "Chicago Projecting Company," one of its principle competitors located in Chicago, and operated it as a separate company for a short time, and then consolidated it with the Amusement Supply Company.

In the early history of the business, supply companies listed and furnished all makes of moving picture machines, leaving it to the purchaser to exercise his own judgment in the selection of a machine, but this arrangement, having been found unsatisfactory, it is now the custom of supply houses to represent only a single manufacturer of moving picture machines, except in the sale of used machines.

The Amusement Supply Company has chosen to make their own selection of a Projecting Machine and a line of supplies, which, in their opinion, will give the best results, and in furnishing a machine and supply service to the exhibitor they feel competent, through their long experience, of being able to serve the exhibitor in a way that will merit his patronage.



Interior of main office of Amusement Supply Co., Chicago, Ill.

It is not generally known that since the beginning of the moving picture theatre business the weight of a moving picture projector of the highest type has increased in weight from less than fifty pounds to nearly five hundred pounds. This evolution has come about gradually during the past fourteen years, and has resulted in the production of the Motiograph De Luxe Projector.

The Amusement Supply Company is devoting its efforts exclusively to the furnishing of equipment and supplies for moving picture theatres, has made an effort since its organization to furnish a supply service which includes the best goods obtainable, together with careful attention to every detail.

Mammoth Portable Power Plant is Given Try-outs at Ince Studios

Equipment was Developed for Use on Locations Where the Usual Power Supply was Unavailable

A GIGANTIC portable electric power plant, which promises to revolutionize exterior lighting for motion pictures, has just been completed and put through successful preliminary trials by Reve Houck and George L. Conway, of the Thomas H. Ince Studios. Houck is head of the Ince electrical department, and Conway a master mechanic.

The plant is mounted on a three and a half ton Mack truck, and consists of a 210 H.P. Seagrave gasoline engine directly connected to a 100 kilowatt Westinghouse electric generator, and a switch and instrument board from which operation is controlled

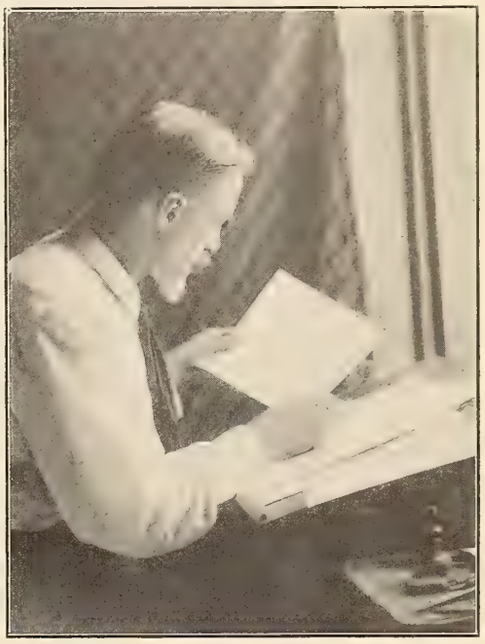
The Seagrave engine is a six-cylinder type with a bore of 6⅜, and a stroke of 8 inches. It is equipped with a Delco starting and lighting system, and a Stromberg carburetor. The ignition is furnished by Berling magnetos, with a triple set of spark plugs firing in each cylinder. A force-feed oiling system throughout, and a Stewart vacuum feed, of heavy duty type, are also employed.

A tachometer has been fitted to the engine and generator, which will show the amperage at all speeds of the engine.

The switch and instrument board carries the various engine gauges, a voltmeter and an amperemeter, and an automatic 1,000 amphere circuit breaker, that will take care of all overload.

The cooling of the gasoline engine is accomplished by means of a special built Flexo radiator, and a powerful electric fan. The radiator is equipped with special fins, which greatly increases the cooling surface, and the stream of air through the radiator is assured by a large four-bladed fan which is driven at 2,000 R. P. M. by a 1 H. P. Westinghouse motor.

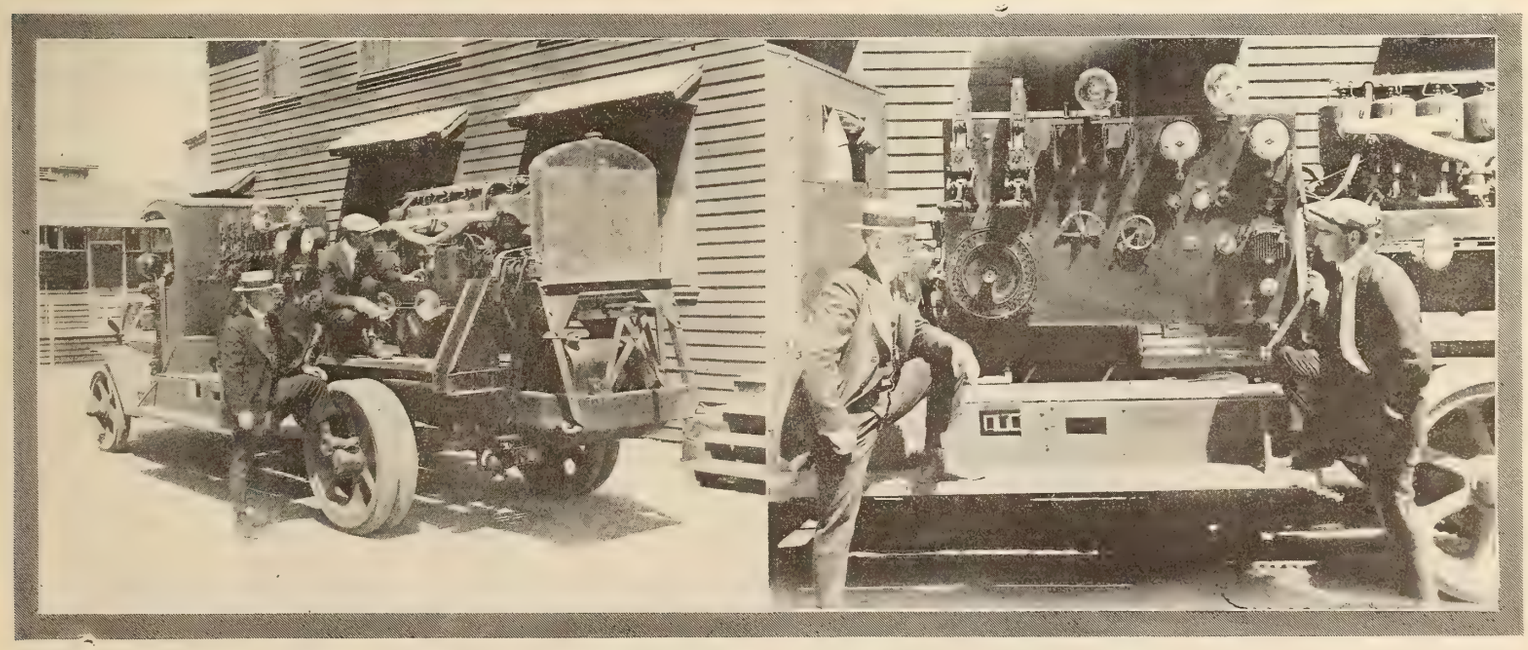
A number of other improvements and innovations have been fitted to the new plant, which is by far the largest and most modern that has ever been constructed.



The capacity of the generator is 40 twin arcs. Inasmuch as its mobility is equal to that of an automobile, its facilities for exterior and location lighting are unlimited. Both interior and exterior scenes on locations where power is not available may be illuminated by the portable plant, and night scenes will be possible in any locality.

Members of the Thomas H. Ince technical force predict that the new invention and its equipment insures an enormous saving in time and money. Under the new system, now in effect at the Ince Studios, companies on location will not be required to await the convenience of sunlight. Night photography also will be materially enhanced in that the immense portable power plant can be driven from point to point, with the current furnished quickly and directly from the big generators which equip the truck.

Head Electrician Houck also reports that the portable plant may be advantageously used to light interior sets on the stages within the Ince lot.



The Author of "Animated Cartoons"

IN the issue of September 18th there appeared a review of a new book on the subject of Animated Cartoons. The author of this book, Mr. E. G. Lutz, has had so wide an experience in this particular type of motion picture that a few words regarding his career will probably be of interest to the readers of the Camera Section.

Two views of the giant 100 kw. portable plant constructed by Reve Houck and George Conway of the Ince Studios. In the right hand view, Conway is on the left and Houck on the right

Although Mr. Lutz has made but one complete film himself—that one being the 300-foot feature called "The Story of Old Glory," which was shown at the Strand theatre, New York, during the week of May 26th, 1918—yet he has worked in company with most of the prominent cartoonists of the business and in so doing has acquired a comprehensive idea of the methods of all of them.

The film which he produced himself consisted of animated drawings of the various types of flags used in this country with special backgrounds showing maps that illustrated the growth of the country from the original thirteen to the present forty-eight states.

Mr. Lutz first work in this field was in 1916 when he became associated with Max Fleischer at the Pathe Studio in Jersey City. Mr. Fleischer at that time was perfecting his process which has since come into wide usage. Mr. Lutz disclaims all credit in the bringing to perfection of the Fleischer patents, making it plain that he worked on a few parts that required drawing.

Since that time Mr. Lutz has been associated with several other animated cartoon producers, among them being Barre & Bower Studio at Fordham, where the Mutt and Jeff Cartoons were filmed, and Mr. J. F. Leventhal, whose products are released through the Bray organization.

Annual reception of the Palisades Film Employees' Association

In reminiscing, Mr. Lutz harks back to 1912, when to the best of his knowledge the first animated cartoon was exhibited to a dinner of artists at the Cafe Martin on 26th Street in New York City. This cartoon depicted the evolutions of a man and a bothersome mosquito and was produced by Windsor MacCay. Soon after this the well known Mutt and Jeff series appeared, followed by those of Colonel Heezaliar and so on up to the present day with its horde of cartoons, many of them produced by patented methods that are the result of years of patient study on the part of the inventors.

Mr. Lutz believes that the future for the cartoon is as bright as ever, especially in the industrial and educational fields,

Reception at Palisade Film Laboratory

A RECEPTION was held by the Palisades Film Employees Association on Saturday evening, September 18, at the laboratory, Palisade, N. J.

This reception was in honor of Mr. Francis Doublier, manager of the laboratory, in celebration of his twenty-fifth year in the film industry. Mr. Doublier first became interested in the film business in connection with M. Lumiere of Paris, in 1895, and is well versed in all phases of laboratory work.

The use of the studio next door was loaned for the occasion and the dance and entertainment was conducted by Mr. Chester D. Coram, president of the Palisade Film Corporation. Mr. Doublier entertained the group with several original features and in addition expressed his willing cooperation in all similar entertainments that might be held by the employees of the laboratory.

A supper was served during the evening at which several speeches were made, and a short history of his work given by Mr. Doublier.

The reception was in charge of Miss Ruth Fitzgerald, president of the entertainment committee, who was assisted in the work by Mr. Fred Courdet, and Miss Gertrude Lindermann.

This entertainment was the first to be carried out by any similar association, and it is the plan of the committee to have other social affairs and theatre parties during the winter.

Portable Studio Equipment Analyzed

The Papers Committee has released for publication a resume of the technical paper to be delivered by H. F. O'Brien at the coming Dayton Convention of the S. M. P. E. The resume reads:

There are so many different elements of design that must be considered in the construction of one of these portable generating equipments, that it would be impossible to bring them all to your attention in a paper such as this, but it is the author's hope that in bringing to your attention details which actual experience has shown to be most important, and by reciting the experiences of those who have constructed the earlier equipments that the members of the Society would have a better idea of the problems involved and should any member contemplate the construction of one of these portable equipments, he would be able to profit by the experiences of those who pioneered.

Large Organ Orders for Photoplayer

Charles, Los Angeles representative of the American Photoplayer Company and vice-president of the Robert-Morton Organ Co., of Los Angeles. One contract is that signed by Alexander Pantages for the installation of Robert-Morton organs in his theatres at Tacoma, Butte, San Francisco, Seattle, New Orleans, Salt Lake, Memphis, Kansas City, Vancouver, Oakland and Minneapolis, in addition to the orchestral organ recently installed in the new Pantages theatre in Los Angeles.

The other contract is that made with Gore Brothers and Sol Lesser for two organs in Hollywood theatres, one in San Diego, two in Pomona theatres, and two at theatres in Venice and Ocean Park.

In the British Journal Photographic Almanac for 1920 appears a resume of the article by J. I. Crabtree on the subject of "Making the Fixing-Hardening Bath," which appeared originally in the Motion Picture News Camera section. This informative and comprehensive article attracted considerable notice and was reprinted as well in the British Journal of Photography.

I. Roth

Though hardly twenty-five years of age, I. Roth has been a film man, a regular film man, since 1910. Charles Simone took him out of school and gave him a job kicking the addressograph and running errands for the Nestor Film Company. Later he was promoted to the laboratory. He soon showed remarkable skill with the camera and surpassed at title-making. The Universal Film Mfg. Co. put him in charge of their title department and only yielded him to Uncle Sam when we joined the Allies. He took many interesting pictures on the France-Belgian battlefields, and was under shell fire several times. After photographing a number of big independent features, Mr. Roth was induced to join the Unista Film Company.

Music for Your Theatre

No. 17

Announcing the First Annual Conference on Music and Motion Pictures

By Charles D. Isaacson

(Author, "Face to Face With Great Musicians")

THE tendency in picture theatres is toward music. Some authorities among managers, producers and musicians say that in a good many of the high class picture theatres MORE THAN FORTY PER CENT. OF THE SHOW IS THE MUSIC. Many other authorities admit that certainly ONE-THIRD OF THE SHOW IS THE MUSIC. Everybody who can see further than his nose agrees that MUSIC IS CLOSE SECOND TO THE PICTURE IN PULLING POWER AND HOLDING POWER.

What is going to happen with the development of the musical idea in the motion picture field?

What are the managers going to need to understand, procure and develop in music?

What are the musicians going to need to understand, procure and develop in pictures?

Where is the get-together point; what are the new needs of the situation; what new channels of handling the needs must be developed? What can be done to avoid loss of motion, money, patience and values? How can the best ideas so far discovered be employed to the best advantage of the Motion Picture Industry, the Musical Fraternity and Industry and the newly born industry of Motion Picture Music?

It is evident that something ought to be done to get together everybody interested in doing the right thing.

That means that a conference ought to be called. Soon! Somebody will have to get busy. Who? Everybody is so busy with his own immediate problem that he hasn't the time to sponsor the call. Probably everybody interested would like to father the idea or at least further it once it were started.

Let George do it!

Then we will!

THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS WILL SPONSOR THE FIRST MOTION PICTURE MUSICAL CONFERENCE.

The call goes out to the whole field herewith. With this announcement the NEWS takes upon itself the privilege and responsibility of summoning the managers, conductors, musicians, producers and such others as are interested in the future of the Musical-Motion-Picture Industry.

Whether the field will respond to the NEWS' invitation is a matter that cannot be determined. It has to be found out. With the fullest confidence in the readiness of the managers, conductors, musicians, etc., to join in the attempt, the NEWS purposes to engineer the whole machinery of the Conference.

Copies of this first and general announcement will be sent directly to the gentlemen who have been the pioneers and leading operators of music in the theatres. They will probably be reading the text within the pages of the NEWS at the same time that you are, and their letters of encouragement already may be dictated.

Every individual, organization, corporation desirous of participating in the Musical Motion Picture Conference is urged to write immediately to the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Music Department.

Are you for the idea? Is the NEWS correctly sensing the situation in its belief that there is need for a Conference? Is the NEWS sound in its judgment and in its belief that many important matters can be adjusted, planned and organized to anticipate and prevent troubles in the future? Are there not sufficient matters of moment to warrant a Conference of the Interested Persons?

We might as well be perfectly frank with each other. The NEWS will be satisfied if the field does not approve of the Conference Plan, because of the fact that the time is not ripe, that music can be handled by each individual theatre independently. But all indications are that the NEWS is well justified in taking this decisive step—in sounding the field thoroughly.

There is the matter of the music tax.

There is the ever-prominent matter of cue-sheets.

There is the newly developing call for musical features—prologues, interpolated songs, etc.

There is the possible need for a musical circuit of theatres—with a special kind of agency or agencies to handle it.

There is the matter of standardization of descriptive music—the need for making it easy to select the right kind of music for every kind of scene, mood, emotion, etc.

There is the question of the kind of music to use—popular, classic, etc.

There is the matter of developing specialized conductors, men who understand the picture technique.

There is the matter of educating music publishers to picture needs and educating picture people to the product already offered by publishers.

There is the matter of the kind of permanent instruments to be used; questions of acoustics.

There is the matter of competition and alliance with other musical activities.

There is the matter of how to let the public make the most of the music and make the most of the public who want the music.

These are only a few of the matters which the manager, conductor, musicians, and many other factors must think about.

Then it must not be forgotten that certain experiments have been carried on.

Riesenfeld and Rothapfel have made extraordinary successes and have developed a "Technique"—as have many other pioneers in other cities.

Dozens of important conductors have come into being with their fine ideas and successful experiments.

Andreas Dippel, on the other hand, lost a fortune in his music-picture experiments.

Vast schemes for many present growing musical needs are on foot or are in the course of development.

Many have ideas and theories worthy of attention.

These and many other present treasuries of information could be brought before the industry through the medium of a conference.

To bring the matters to a head, the News, as mentioned before, decided after conferences with all of its editorial departments, to Issue the Call.

Tentatively (and positively unless otherwise changed) here are the details of the Conference.

It will be held in New York City.

It will be held in the last of November or the beginning of December.

It will last not less than two days or more than four days.

Headquarters to be announced.

All correspondence for the time being to be sent to Charles D. Isaacson, Music Editor, Motion Picture News, New York City.

NOW IS THE TIME TO WRITE TO THE NEWS AND STATE YOUR POSITION ON THE ISSUE; IF YOU HAVE A PROBLEM TO SOLVE; IF YOU HAVE A BIG IDEA TO PRESENT; IF YOU SEE THE NEED FOR STANDARDIZATION, ORGANIZATION AND PREPARATION.

The Story in the Music

In the preceding issues I attempted to show how it is possible to make music infinitely more interesting by the use of verbal (literary) descriptions of the various compositions. Last issue I gave four suggestions, just as I have often talked and written about them to audiences, when introducing the Chopin, Opus 9 Nocturne, an Oriental composition, a Spanish fantasy, the Beethoven-Rubinstein "Turkish March."

As I then said, the privilege of reprinting them in your own programs, newspaper advertisements or publicity is extended to you by the News, if you will give credit.

This week I fully intended to give you my plan of presenting an opera, or opera medley or transcription, using "Carmen" as the example.

But the decision to give publication to the Musical Conference caused me to defer or rather change the intention. However, I shall keep the thread of the argument going by running a part of

The Story of Carmen

It is an open square in Seville. All is life and bustle. The crowds move back and forth, many standing at corners in idle conversation, everybody smoking. All are in gay-colored costumes, men in the knee trousers and sashes. That is except the soldiers, of whom there are many, for there is a guardhouse at the bridge, which rises over the city street. At the guard house the flags of red and yellow show the nationality of the city. The women passersby are in their rich lace mantillas, a flower and a big comb in their hair, their arms bare, and in their hands a fan, which they use in the most graceful way, swinging it and their bodies in harmony. Their skins are a dull white or a dusky brown, their hands are long and graceful, slender, and delicate.

The scene is full of animation. There are handsome men beggars and old haggard women beggars; tall, handsome men, the bullfighters, dressed in lace and diamonds, and strutting like warriors of old.

To our right is the tobacco factory—they must make the wherewithal for folks to smoke.

After awhile Micaela, a young, beautiful, modest lass, goes hesitatingly to the soldiers and asks where she can find Don Jose, lieutenant of the dragoons. The soldiers fool and pretend they do not know him. They try to get her to enter the guardhouse, but she refuses. She will return. Soon after Micaela leaves, there come from the distance the returning guards, Don Jose at the head. They pass in file over the bridge and go to the guardhouse. People watch, some of the little boys imitate the soldiers. Don Jose salutes the officers of the watch, who tell him that a girl was asking for him. "It must be Micaela, my sweetheart," says Don Jose. Meantime the soldiers are dismissed, and Don Jose converses with the guard, who starts to tell what handsome girls work in the factory. But Jose insists that he loves Micaela and does not care for others.

Then the factory bell rings; it is time for the girls to leave—they have plenty of young men waiting to flirt with them. But Jose minds them not, he sits apart working at a little chain of cord. As the girls pour out of the building one of them stands apart—the sauciest, cruelest, loveliest of them all, Carmen. She is dressed in the many-colored costume, a bouquet in her bodice and a flower held between her th. Oh, there is an air about her. She sings in her careless, coquettish way of love. It is the Habanera. "Ah, love; ah, love, he is the lord of all." As she sings she looks about for a new conquest and discovers Jose. "If you love me, I love you, look out." She flings aside the young men and goes straight to the seated dragoon and throws the bouquet straight in his face. He jumps up, everybody laughs, the bell rings, and the girls go back to the factory. Jose is alone, he is taken with that strange, wild woman.

Then returns Micaela. "Your mother sent me with a letter and some money and something more. Give him a kiss."

"Ah, dear mother, I shall always think of you, and should evil befall me, your kiss will recall me. My home is in yonder valley where my mother lives, and always my thoughts are with her. Bring back my kiss to her."

So the sweetheart leaves, and Jose, soliloquizing, says he will marry Micaela and not bother about that hateful witch. At this moment an uproar is heard in the factory. There has been a quarrel. Carmen has wounded one of the girls. She is arrested and the officer puts her in Jose's keeping; he is to take her to prison. But Carmen has an eye to her safety. She sings to Jose the gay seguidilla and tells him that near by the ramparts there is an inn of Lillas Pastia's, where he may come to her and she will dance the seguidilla. "I will love you, and I know you love me. You are a gay officer, handsome. He's only a lieutenant, but he's bewitched me." This she sings as she takes tiny steps and keeps her feet glued together, wriggling from the hips. "I am bewitched, Carmen. I will free you. I will loose the cords," and he does. Then the commanding officer enters, orders her to prison under Jose's guard. He goes to the bridge, Carmen pretends to knock him down, he falls, and Carmen escapes amid the laughter of the crowd, and the curtain falls.

(To be continued.)

The Special Agency for Motion Picture Music

In this issue we publish a letter from Mr. Byron D. Bailey, manager of the up-to-date Rialto theatre of Akron, Ohio. He raises an interesting question, which we might go so far as to say is in the minds of most of the advanced picture managers all over the country.

Mr. Bailey says that he believes that he can make his program more interesting with the use of special music, directly related to the feature picture. He says that with "Broken Blossoms" he is wondering if he could not get some special singer or prologue idea.

Then he says: "Where can I secure talent of this nature, and what would be the approximate expense of such a venture?"

In the present issue of the News there appears an advertisement of the New York Concert Bureau, which is organized to bring to the picture theatres of the country the very product which Mr. Bailey and others are seeking, and which in the case of at least 200 theatres are now being supplied by the organization named, and others, and in desultory and haphazard ways as well.

The special agency to supply motion picture music and musical features had to come.

The other evening I witnessed Charles Ray's feature, "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," at the palatial Brooklyn Strand theatre, ably managed by Edward Hyman (Alois Reiser, conductor). The overture was a medley from the musical comedy of that name; just preceding the picture was a prologue showing a young lady about to leave a railroad station, four young gentlemen bidding her farewell to the song, "So Long Mary." Then the feature opened dramatically. At the passage where Kid Burns learns the little maid's name there was interpolated the song, "I Love the Name of Mary"—which brought forth tumultuous applause from the audience.

Now, other theatres over the country want that very stunt when using Charley Ray's feature—how are they going to get it? Take the case of "Humoresque," which is a story about music. The use of the Hebrew tradition music and of a Sandler's "Eli Eli" almost made the run at the Criterion. The musical program with the original artists or substitutes are wanted and are being used in other theatres all over the country.

Mr. Bailey mentions "Broken Blossoms." I don't know just how that was featured musically. But, for myself, I would think a fine touch could be made with a Japanese singer (or a singer in Japanese costume) doing the popular aria, "One Fine Day" from "Madame Butterfly," as a prelude or in some part of the feature.

The musical agency has arrived. It will distribute music and musical features just the same as the exchange offices now send out the film. The NEWS will keep in close touch with the development of this new kind of enterprise and will publish facts concerning special music features offered everywhere.

The NEWS predicts that in the course of not more than a year every theatre which pretends to any importance will be booking musical features—soloists in singing, violin, harp, cello, piano, etc. Watch the idea grow.

Questions, Answers and Discussions

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

I want to thank you sincerely for your efforts in my behalf with Educational on the William Tell picture. I want that print for Cincinnati in November providing it has not been run there before that time. Will also be interested in any more they may issue. I note that you wired me. Thank you. Before closing allow me to congratulate you on the department in the NEWS. We have needed such a thing for a good many years. You have fulfilled the need with the usual 100% efficiency which the NEWS has a habit of displaying over other Trade Journals, and I might add that I am a subscriber and constant reader to three of them.—Buel B. Risinger, Columbus, Ohio.

Music Editor, NEWS:

I have been following your articles in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS with a great deal of interest, and believe they will be of great help to many exhibitors in putting over the musical part of their programs.

We have the prettiest theatre in Akron, located in a suburban district, and at present we have a very good orchestra of seven pieces, also a Hope Jones Unit Organ. It is likely we will increase our orchestra to ten pieces this fall. I feel, however, that in addition to offering good music as an accompaniment to the pictures, we should do something that is novel. We cannot go to the expense of putting on elaborate prologues; in fact, we do not have a stage large enough to do it. But I believe it would make our program a great deal more interesting if we were to employ one or more singers. For example, for awhile we might have a tenor, then a baritone, then a soprano, and occasionally a quartette. For some particularly dramatic and out-of-the-ordinary feature we might employ a reader to recite a prologue. Has there, to your knowledge, been anything of the latter nature used in connection with the showing of "Broken Blossoms"? Where could I secure talent of this nature, both singers and readers, and what would be the approximate expense of such a venture?

I wish you would put me on your mailing list for your series of storiettes on musical matters for publication in the newspapers.

Thanking you for your suggestions and congratulating the NEWS on its new service.—Bryon D. Bailey, Mgr., Rialto Theatre, Akron, Ohio.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

I have read your articles on music and am interested in them. We have a small orchestra here at the Globe theatre, and when writing up the feature for the daily paper I am oftimes puzzled how to express some snappy qualities of the orchestra.

Won't you give me some sentences and phrases that would help me to let the public know about our musical settings for the pictures? Thank you for the assistance you render.—H. A. Graves, Globe Theatre, Johnsbury, Vt.

Answer: I believe that you will get the information exactly as you want it in my article in the issue of August 28th of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, also the little capsule lectures in the issue of September 11th will bring out some information that you want to present. I might say that the last three issues and those which will appear immediately will provide you with the information that you want.

Please note the suggested form of advertisement which I ran in the issue of August 28th.

If agreeable to you have your music director send me a description of your orchestra and I will write a special story and advertisement for you which you can use in your newspaper.—C. D. I.

Louisiana Theatre Notes

Opelousas, La., is to get a new $60,000 motion picture theatre. The company that will build it is headed by Adolphe Jacobs, as president; V. A. Sashse, of Baton Rouge, as vice-president, and Alex Bloomenstiel, of Donaldsonville, La., secretary-treasurer.

Mr. Jacobs, who will be actively at the head of the new picture concern, has resigned as president of the Opelousas Motion Picture Company, owners of the Princess theatre. Mr. Bloomenstiel, secretary-treasurer of the Opelousas Improvement Company, the new corporation, is an experienced and successful show man, being the owner of houses at Donaldsonville, Houma, Plaquemine and Morgan City. Mr. Sachse is a business man and show man of Baton Rouge.

A new theatre will be built at Eunice, La., according to report. The new house it is said, will cost about $100,000 and will seat more than 1,000.

The Esplanade theatre, New Orleans, is undergoing alterations and remodeling that will practically make it a new and modern theatre in every particular. Originally securing the theatre under lease, Mr. and Mrs. Bouisson have built up a business that is both substantial and satisfactory. They have earned the confidence of the very large and discriminating circle of residents of the neighborhood, and they have merited this confidence by the care with which they have selected their shows.

For the house that has one musical instrument there is nothing to equal the Estey Theatre Organ.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the last twenty weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to May 22, 1920.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"Knocking 'Em Cold"

(National Comedy—Two Reels)

THERE is hardly any excuse for calling this offering a comedy. Carrying no idea whatsoever, overburdened with time-worn tricks which have no place except to extend the footage, and with the director stopping in his tracks to think up some exaggerated bit of horseplay, "Knocking 'Em Cold" is almost certain to win the brown derby. Comedians are scarce here and the freakish cop who assumes the burden resorts to methods which formerly had their place on amateur nights. A group of cops, a set of burglars jumping around in circles makes one wonder what it is all about. The director, seemingly, stops and says to himself—"well, what can we do now to keep the pot boiling?" Through windows, through doors, through cells and what not race the figures. Continuity is a factor unheard of here.

The picture tries to score with subtitles. But the editor has striven too hard to be amusing. A few excerpts for example: "They're all out of step but me" (vintage of 1860); "If a mosquito bites this bum, he'll die of delirium tremens"; "Taking colts out of the stables" (the translation means lifting the revolvers from the hip pockets of the cops); "Coupled together, twenty sleepers leave the station" (meaning the cops again); "If he hollers again manicure him with your orange sticks" (still indicating the cops.) The picture has a big eyesore, too, when the freak policeman takes the gum out of his mouth and glues the mayor's head with it against the wall. Which is followed by the victim breaking the grip with his hair entangled. Then he examines the spot. The cop should have come out and picked the gum off the wall and chewed it again to make the scene complete.

The picture doesn't release a single point of humor and becomes deadly through sheer lack of new tricks, idea and continuity. Ed Flanagan and Georgie Edwards are starred. Their sense of humor is as far-fetched in this example as that of Harry Edwards, the director. The action stops occasionally because the principals get their signals crossed. They look about helplessly for aid. "Knocking 'Em Cold" should be put right back into the container and laid upon the shelf.—Length 2 Reels.—Laurence Reid.

"The Tailor Shop"

(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—Fox—One Reel)

THE action of this one reeler is laid partly in a tailor shop and partly in the streets. Mutt is waiting behind a screen while the tailor presses his trousers. The tailor ruins them and Jeff is commissioned to find him another pair. Jeff steals some off of a clothing dummy, but the proprietor recovers them and takes Jeff's trousers for interest. The two pals spend the remainder of the reel trying to hide their untrousered legs inside of an ashcan. There is not enough that is new in this reel to make it as funny as many of its predecessors.—Matthew A. Taylor.

"Doing Time"

(Snub Pollard Comedy — Pathe — Two Reels)

ONE cannot say that Snub Pollard's latest comedy, "Doing Time," is a thing of invention. A time-worn idea which carries plenty of antedeluvian tricks is flashed with scarcely a ripple of humor in any of the action. Snub finds himself hailed into court because of his being a "bootlegging" suspect. The judge had warned him that danger loomed ahead if he ever came within his jurisdiction. Result? A term at breaking stone in the "pen." And the picture flops at that point.

Weak burlesque one might call it when the several convicts knock each other about with their hammers and picks. Finally one of them steals the gun away from a guard and aims it at the judge, who has made a social call. But Snub pulls the heroic stuff, stands in front of the jurist, and receives the charge. For this act of bravery he is permitted to walk out through the unguarded gate. Keen satire or ridiculous burlesque, or unadulterated foolishness is absent here.—Length, 2 reels.

LAURENCE REID.

"Uncle Tom's Caboose"

(Two-Reel Century Comedy — Released Through Universal)

ALTHOUGH there are many funny comedy gags included in this two-reeler, it fails to register in many places, because the director has made the mistake of putting too much action into it.

He has "run" his actors from one scene to another without the least idea of tempo. And in so doing, the principal points loose much of their value.

The story is a burlesque on "Uncle Tom's Cabin," and follows the rather well-used plot. In this case, however, it is not the old-time wagon show which enters the small town to do "Uncle Tom." Up to date methods are injected in the form of a log cabin on wheels run by motor power.

The comedy has a strong finish and is enacted by a company of clever knock-about comedians. FRANK LEONARD.

"TRUMPET ISLAND"
A TOM TERRISS PRODUCTION
From the Story by GOUVERNEUR MORRIS
Intensely dramatic and abounding in spectacular scenes. The climax is reached in a honeymoon airplane flight into the center of a violent thunder storm, where the machine is wrecked. The fall of the shattered airplane, and its crash into a tree on Trumpet island, provide thrilling spectacles. There is a love story of rare charm, and the brave struggle of a man against poverty and then against the temptation which come with sudden wealth. Wild orgies in a metropolitan hotel are shown, followed by scenes on rugged and lonely Trumpet Island, to which Richard Bedell fled from vice. The shattered airplane brings Eve De Merincourt to the island.

"OVER THE HILL TO THE POOR-HOUSE"
(Fox)

A Real Masterpiece of Direction, Acting and Casting

HERE is a production that is going to take its place among the season's best by universal acclamation. It is a simple tale of simple American folk based on a poem by Will Carleton which for eight reels ties knots in the heart strings, and, in the prologue, by its remarkable picturization of family life in a small town twenty years ago, rises to the heights of the most artistic comedy and subtle pathos.

"Over the Hill" is going to win Director Harry Millarde a seat in Moviedom's Hall of Fame. Next it is going to earn for Mary Carr, who plays "mother," the applause and gratitude of the picture-lovers of the country. Her role is a crystalization of the ideals of mother-love, mother-devotion, and mother-understanding, and her acting, especially in the second act, is the most beautiful, the most exquisite, and the most touching feature of the production. William Welsh is "father," and he is almost as effective as "mother," although his role is of less importance.

The prologue opens with the six children still young. Here too, the youngsters are splendid little stage folk. Harry Millarde's master hand makes this simple tale of carefree boys and girls and their worried mother, so thoroughly human that an audience will be laughing with tears in their eyes. The action jumps to twenty years later, and the casting cannot escape notice. It is as if each child had grown up over night. The story revolves around "mother," neglected by her married children, and Johnny, her scrapegrace son, who alone remains in the old home, and who suffers a jail sentence to save his guilty father. The old lady wanders from the home of one child to another, unwelcome, until finally Johnny returns to save her from the drudgery of the poorhouse, punishes his hypocritical brother, and reestablishes his mother in her old home.

The only possible objection to the picture, from an exhibitor's standpoint, is the title. It smacks somewhat of the cheap melodrama of by-gone days. Music will help it immeasurably, and it should not be run without a rehearsed orchestra.

We will take off our hats to Harry Millarde, Mary Carr and all the rest who helped to make "Over the Hill" what it is. To Will Carleton's poem, a slighter doff—for in other hands it might have been made into a hash of exaggerated characterizations and strained drama. As it is, it is eight reels of a "mother" picture without mawkish sentiment or strained, artificial pathos—a feast of tears and laughter that will satiate the appetite of the box office.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

After the premiere performance of "Over the Hill to the Poor-House" at the Astor theatre in New York city, there was not a photoplay critic on any of the daily newspapers who did not admit that he had witnessed one of the best productions that the screen has ever offered. This remarkable photodrama, which took New York by storm, and touched the heart of cynical Broadway, is to be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————.

"Over the Hill to the Poor-House" will take its place with the screen masterpieces—"The Birth of a Nation," "The Miracle Man," "Way Down East" and "Humoresque." It is a masterful production by Director Harry Millarde of the touching story based upon the poem of the simple life of simple folk by Will Carleton. It is a story of mother love and mother sacrifice, with Mary Carr, who is given the principal role, rendering one of the most perfect and effective characterizations of "mother" that has ever been seen. Already she has won the reputation of equally in every way, the splendid acting of Emma Dunn.

"Over the Hill to the Poor-House" will be given a ———— days run. It is expected to fill and overfill the house at every performance. For it is a distinct step forward in the silent art—a blending of tears and laughter of universal appeal.

PROGRAM READER

If you love a human story, if you love real human folks, and if you realize the heights to which the screen can rise, and its emotional power, you are assured an evening of exquisite enjoyment at this theatre during the week of ————, when "Over the Hill to the Poor-House" will be shown. Seldom, if ever before, has such an appealing, thoroughly sympathetic production reached the silversheet.

"HEADIN' HOME"
(Yankee-Kessel & Bauman-State Rights)

Babe Ruth Makes Debut and Scores a Hit

IT is fitting and proper that Babe Ruth, who is fast becoming a popular idol, should grace the screen with his personality. Outside of major league cities the King of Swat has not shown himself. In making his film debut the rank and file of the picture-going public will have a chance to see what he looks like and how he crashes the "ol' apple," even though the crack of bat meeting ball is silenced. "Headin' Home" is a made-to-order picture and too much cannot be expected of it in the way of literary or production excellence. For one thing it carries hardly any story and what is revealed is lost most of the time through faulty continuity. In fact there is not enough material to extend through five reels. Which makes it necessary for the director to resort to repetitious detail and considerable hokum.

The picture is told in narrative form and presents a character from the old home town relating the history of Ruth to his friend as they are seated at the Polo Grounds. Then the action flashes back to the time when Babe was a country yokel and develops to the effective climax when, with the bases loaded, the home-run hitter smashes out a four-bagger. The various scenes depict the star as the village loafer and most of them are interested when he is around. He is kicked and cuffed about and too much of a lummox to find himself on the local nine. So the oppoisng team employs him and he sends the home town team down to defeat.

The picture is mostly comedy and it is a credit to the sponsors that they haven't taken themselves seriously. "Bugs" Baer's titles are quaint and most of them contain humor. And he has a good time poking fun at the hero. The narrative style is lost immediately after the introduction. And some may wonder over the fact that Ruth climbs to fame with scarcely any account of how he does it. He comes back a conquering hero and wins the banker's daughter and the villain who pitched on the local nine and embezzled from the bank is shown, just as Ruth predicted, a peanut seller at the Polo Grounds. The Babe certainly scores a hit, which is all that is necessary. The fact that he has played to immense galleries has given him a confidence in front of the camera. And when he poles a home-run through the church window and duplicates it at the Polo Grounds—well, one can't ask for more. The types are good and Ruth Taylor, as the heroine, is charming. Lawrence Windom directed under R. A. Walsh's supervision.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Babe Ruth, one of the most sensational figures in America today; Babe Ruth, the King of Swat; Babe Ruth, who has won the affection of every red-blooded American; Babe Ruth, who has broken the record for home-run hitting, will appear at the ———— theatre next ———— in his first feature picture entitled, "Headin' Home," written and directed by R. A. Walsh. The popular idol of baseball makes his debut as a thespian in a homespun story which is rich in sentiment and happiness. The theme is really founded upon the faculty of making good!

He goes out into the world and achieves fame and fortune and returns a conquering hero. Which is the way of the world. The sensational home-run king takes his position in front of the camera with the same easy nonchalance that he steps up to the plate. And there is no doubt that he scores a four-bagger. The story is a parallel of Ruth's own life in a way. He rose from the ranks and to-day is the most talked-of man in America. The picture has been well produced and the ball-player's company is entirely competent.
